Nevertheless, the enterprise of city missions has hardly yet passed its initial stage. The book is rather an index of things to be done than of things done. A full muster of the forces for all of the functions of a complete program yet to come. Indeed, all Protestantism, including the Baptist denomination, is yet to discover fully the dimension and method of the missionary task presented by the modern city. Baptists in particular have yet to meet the test of cooperation in this task. They have yet to prove whether they can so far set voluntary limits upon the self-interest and autonomy of local churches as to subordinate local advantage to the larger denominational and community welfare. Perhaps it will be even more difficult for them to achieve a legitimate subordination of denominational interests to the larger interests of the kingdom of God. If they shall succeed in committing themselves to a theoretical subordination of local and denominational interests to the greater community and kingdom interests, it will remain for them to prove how far they are able to give effect to that subordination by actual cooperation among themselves and with other denominations in city-wide plans for evangelism, education and humanitarian service.

The World in Transit

An interpretation of significant events in the light of Christian ideals.

What Is the Background

Whence Emerges This Page?

This page is not a mere weekly collection of casual remarks. It is the expression of a definite religious faith, that Jesus is the Social Creator and Saviour. Socially, the world is not static. It is "in transit." Whatever may be true in the biological realm, there is a manifest evolution in the social realm. But how, by whom and to what end shall that evolution be directed? The factors of society are biological, economic, political, scientific and religious. The last is first. It gives meaning, direction, legitimacy and impetus to the others. Jesus is the normal leader of social progress. His ideals are those of a normal society. His spirit is the social spirit. His social goal is the perfect community. His teaching and influence are socially creative. His very personality is incarnate passion for liberty, justice, peace, brotherhood, neighborliness, equality, good-will, the common good and unselfish human service. He is the Pioneer of true democracy. He is engaged in the enterprise of recreating the world to his type. So recreated, it will be the true realm of God, a community of spiritually and socially competent people, cooperating in democratic and brotherly fashion for the common good. This is the ground of judgment which this page passes upon current events.

Why the Horse Is Behind the Cart, but Still There Is Progress

In connection with Armistice day, the Federal Council of Churches announced eight fundamental principles in national policy for justice, security and peace. They are (1) treaties of complete arbitration, (2) full utilization of the Permanent Court of International Justice, (3) commissions of inquiry and boards of conciliation, (4) treating as an aggressor any nation that refuses to submit its dispute to peaceful international settlement, (5) refusing to help the aggressor by supplying munitions, (6) making aggressive war a crime under international law, (7) cooperating in the reduction of armaments, and (8) "cooperating with other nations in securing better adjustment of the world's economic conditions and thereby lessening the causes of international friction." The program is a big one and altogether worthy. But the hardest item is the last one and all the others depend upon it. Americans in their present mood have no dream of cooperating with anybody for a pacific adjustment of economic conditions, and that fact accounts for a good many queer things in the international policy of the United States. Turn the prophets loose on that item, and the rest will naturally follow.

What the Way to Discovering

What Is Wrong with Democracy

Senatorial investigations go merrily on in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, Oregon, Arizona and elsewhere. And people are waking up—slightly. Independent candidates for the senate have made some audible moral professions about political corruption in Illinois. President Coolidge is said to have discovered that the appropriation of campaign money for past benefits is worse than for expected ones, and is indignant thereat. By and by somebody may stumble upon the fact that the whole bustle is largely superficial. Americans have, and have had, plutocracy. But under a plutocracy, government is necessarily a thing of the market. Wealthy corporations want government favors and are willing to pay for them, or they want protection against adverse governmental action and are willing to pay for that. So it comes about that in the United States, the more important elections are usually abundantly financed by men of wealth who have financial interests at stake. And public officials, from the president down, are as wise as the ox who knows his owner and as the ass who needs no escort to his master's crib. This does not mean that they are worse than other Christians. It is simply the American way. But the problem is far deeper than the mere question of some specifically excessive or misdirected campaign contribution. The present agitation may jostle the people into the discovery that democratic ideals can never be realized on a plutocratic basis. Unless it does so, it will be about as useful as a swarm of gnats on a summer evening.

Cecil De Mille Will Try to Produce "The King of Kings"

Friends of clean and cultural moving pictures will read with more than usual interest the announcement that Cecil De Mille is now engaged in preparing the story of Jesus for the screen. The thing was not lightly begun, and it is far removed from the ordinary sordid enterprises of "the commercial movies." There has been long conference and preparation. The religious leaders have been taken into counsel. On the day when the work of filming began, a religious service was held in which, at the invitation of Mr. De Mille, prominent representatives of the Federal Council of Churches, the Salvation Army, Christian Science, and of the Presbyterian, Jewish, Roman Catholic, Episcopalian and Baptist bodies participated. Pastor Birney S. Hudson of Temple Baptist church, Los Angeles, was one of the number. The prayer used is fit to take its place in the great historic liturgies of religion. To take the enterprise in good faith, every church and synagogue in the nation may well offer publicly the prayer that was offered that day: "Give insight and patience to the director and his associates, and may the actor's art, the workman's skill and the writer's pen all alike be consecrated to make known anew to the multitudes Jesus of Nazareth."

What if All the Worms Should Begin to Turn?

In the course of the Passaic strike, public meetings of strikers or of their sympathizers were forbidden. Norman Thomas, prominent New York clergyman and social reformer, attempted to hold a meeting. He was arrested and placed under bond of $10,000—which ought to be sufficient bond to keep an ordinary preacher quiet. His case went to the grand jury which refused to return an indictment against him. Now he is free and is bringing suit for damages. The case may have interesting consequences. Suppose that all of the people who were victims of lawless procedure on the part of police and other officers of the courts during and since the war should bring suits for damages. Suppose further that when the police take sides in a strike they should be subject to the same legal penalty as any other disturber of the peace or performer of a criminal act against person or property. There are many possible angles to be considered. Why are such suits not more frequent? For answer imagine the case of a suit by a man without money, with no influential friends and in a court and community prejudiced against him.

Understanding and Protest

Jesus' followers should lead in intelligent comprehension of God's doings in the every-day world

BY ROBERT WHITAKER

THE current effort to shut off discussion in the Christian pulpit of everything that does not fall within a certain theological and emotional interpretation of religion is easily answered either from the viewpoint of the Christian spirit or the practical necessities of the Christian life.

One cannot be a healthy Christian and utterly ignore the place of honest indignation and vigorous dissent in the moral mood. "I think every Christian man ought to get good and mad at least once a year," wrote the famous author of one of the best-known devotional books in the world. On the other hand, Lincoln Steffens, who years ago was inclined to regard the philippics of Jesus as reported in the twenty-third chapter of Matthew as indicating a moral lapse on the part of Jesus, has of recent years come to a much more appreciative attitude toward that sort of manifestation of a virile moral life. I venture to say that the man who is wholly out of sympathy even with the "vindictive psalms," is a good deal less of a man than he thinks himself. Whoever can be unmoved, or altogether deliberate and serene of speech in the presence of oppression and outrage, is millions of miles away from the prophetic spirit. Men need the heats of moral indignation as truly as they need the tendernesses of the personally forgiving spirit. And, generally speaking, the man who knows not how to be righteously wrathful knows not how to forgive.

Effective Wrath Against Wrong

Beyond the relation of protest—wrathful, impassioned protest against wrong—to the individual moral health of men, there is the further justification for the open and outright condemnation of evil that only so is Christianity able to validate itself in the social life of men. No one is complaining now that the abolitionists condemned chattel slavery and insisted upon its inconsistency with the religion of Jesus. The thing we like to forget now is that men ever justified slavery in Jesus' name, and that the protest against it was so feeble and belated on the part of his followers. The same may be said of the fight against the exploitation of child life in the early days of the factory system in England—when too many professed Christians were dumb or apologetic until the wiser and more Christian wrath of the prophetic few prevailed. So also we rejoice now, not in the silence or the acquiescence of those who delayed the outlawing of the liquor traffic, but in the effective wrath of those who could not be stilled. Later we shall claim the prophetic protest against war and the present competitive order as part of the glory of the Christian achievement in building a really Christian world.

Therefore those who would silence us now have an unhappy fellowship with the condoners of social iniquities in all the ages of the past, even to the unclean spirits with whose complaint against Jesus Mark begins his story of the work and ministry of the Christ. "Let us alone," they cried out, "what have we to do with Thee?" It is indeed an unhappy alliance when any man today echoes this complaint against whoever would cast out the unclean spirits from the body of our generation.

Yet there is something more than protest wherever real protest is involved. "The more excellent way," in this instance, is not to be limited to a loving spirit behind the protest, important as that must always be. There is need of something further, namely, understanding.

It is not without justice that business men sometimes complain that ministers who seek to set forth the social gospel are void of understanding. The trouble with such complaint on the part of the business man is that his own understanding is also infantile. So great a business authority as Judge Gary confessed, not long ago, that the business man of today rarely knows anything beyond his immediate contacts with commercial life and could not in the nature of the case know more. One whose standing in business in England is hardly less than Judge Gary's here, admitted, on a visit to America some years ago, that such was his experience. Business is so exacting at the point of the individual business man's contact with it that he is like the soldier in action who may know almost nothing of how the battle as a whole is going, or how it is designed to go. It is the rarest thing in the world to find an active business man who has any understanding of economics as a whole, rarer even than to find such understanding in the ministry.

"If Light Be Darkness"

Yet it is precisely this broad and deep understanding that we need if we are to "walk with God" in the affairs of society as a whole. God does not walk with any one of us to the exclusion of his walk with all of us, or does any one of us really walk alone with him. I cannot, for myself, call into question the fact that many a slaveholder of the South had a real personal fellowship with God. Old John Hawkins, with slaves packed like sardines under his feet, professed to have had rare communion with his Maker. So had Henry Havelock in the midst of England's fearful suppression of the Sepoy rebellion. One need not deny the reality of this personal experience to insist that however God may have walked with Havelock or Hawkins his walk with humanity as a whole was away from war and slavery, not with it. Social judgment did not stay for individual ecstasy. No, the very possibility of having personal fellowship with God in the midst of social practices which are driving toward the pit of community disaster, is one of the most portentous warnings as to the limitations of individual piety. "If the light that is in thee be darkness," said Jesus, "how great is that darkness."

Walking with God is no private tete-a-tete. He is the God of all the earth, and our walk with him is apt to prove a disappointing, possibly a disastrous thing, if we confine our fellowship to our own emotionalism and do not harmonize that emotionalism with the drive of the universe as a whole.

There would have been no great war in Europe if the Christians of Europe as a whole had been as anxious to walk with the major steps of the Almighty as they were to feel their fellowship with the minor steps of the Almighty. Perhaps that is not the best way of putting it, for all our analogies fail when we are trying to state God in terms of man. But at least that way of putting it will make plain what I mean. Even business men today are coming to feel that they must get their individual business into harmony with their prayer-meeting and Bible-reading life. But that is not enough. God is no more to be cabined, cribbed, and confined to your counting room or office than he is to your heart and your home. To keep step with him you must take all that is into account. An especially must you study to know the world process as a whole as it is revealed in the life of your generation.

No lonely Israelite, creeping off into a cactus-shielded corner of the desert for his communion with God at night could afford to continue that retirement and isolation into the days and weeks of the march from Egypt to Canaan. He could only walk with God as he walked with the whole mass of his fellows, nor could he follow with his fellows to best advantage except as he caught some inkling of where and how God was leading them.

Beyond our need of the moral quickening of protest today, beyond the immediate improvement of social conditions through this or that revolution or reform is the yet greater call of a protest which is based upon a sense of the direction in which the ages move. "Henceforth I call you not servants, but friends, for the servant knoweth not what his master doeth." Here is the commission of Jesus, following which we shall not leave social understanding and economic science to the outsiders, but shall claim for his followers the leadership which ought to be theirs in intelligent comprehension of God's doings in the every-day world.

Evangelistic Music

BY ERNEST O. SELLERS

A STUDY of great revivals reveals the fact that the simple gospel hymn type of song has always been prominent, but with the progress of the church in culture, ritualism and ornateness there has been a diminution of evangelistic fervor and a dying out of these songs. There have been revivals with little or no preaching but none without an outburst of song.

Some critics condemn evangelistic songs because of their strong emotional appeal, their frequent lack of adaptation to various ages and differing degrees of educational attainments and because of inappropriateness in their selection and use.

The evangelistic song is a special type and for a particular purpose, namely, to lead men to think upon spiritual affairs, to accept Christ as a personal Saviour and to enroll in his kingdom enterprise. Evangelistic music must be selected and judged by the results obtained. Good, bright, attractive gospel songs will act as a magnet; they are not, however, to be used with vaudeville methods, stunts or buffoonery.

Some of the songs are exceedingly simple, but they are superior to the more chaste chorals, oratorios or even the classical hymns. This is because they are not restricted to one or two emotions, such as worship and praise, but express other aspirations and experiences and are a motivating agency, causing men to act in spiritual matters. Music is a servant, and gospel songs are not chosen solely by artistic criteria—"art for art's sake." Let us also remember that there are grades of gospel songs just as there are grades among other sorts of musical composition.

One of the great values in the use of gospel songs, the tabernacle choir, orchestra, children's choir, the program interspersed by suitable and attractive solo, duet or quartet sections, is that the people will come to listen to the music and will come repeatedly in greater numbers than will attend the high grade concerts. We are convinced the reason for this is psychological, the feelings are enjoyably affected, the emotions are played upon, the music is more simply, the crowd can easily understand and appreciate to a greater degree these songs than other kinds of music. Then there is also the attractive power of the simple gospel message.

Once the crowd is present we have our opportunity to make the spiritual appeal and impression. The very fact that people are present voluntarily is evidence of their willingness to listen and be impressed. It is also true that they will go away with the simple gospel message attached to an easily sung melody humming in their memory when the more formal and spoken word is forgotten.

The gospel song, simple in structure, direct in appeal, uncluttered by intricate music, avoiding idle and often needless repetition of words or phrases, does the work directly and effectively where the more ornate and perhaps aesthetic music appeals only as a passing moment of entertainment and is soon forgotten.

Evangelism ought not to be an orgy, but an honest effort to enlist every resource of the church in a united effort of the whole church to one great end. The music of evangelism ought to enlist musical resources and be a permanent contribution, an asset, by inspiring and developing the congregation.

Every detail needs careful attention. It is generally best to begin a service by using a familiar hymn. Let the choir sing the new songs before the congregation is asked to take part. Judiciously use special, attractive numbers. Let the leader avoid too much "talk" and as quietly and as quickly as possible let the congregation get out of its mind any idea that it is present to be entertained; rather the leader should emphasize that it is a privilege, opportunity and obligation to take part by singing or else prayerfully and sympathetically to listen.

Leadership, such as we have in mind, is rare and few there be who will not be criticized for some fault, real or imaginary. But one who does succeed will soon learn that his work is appreciated and his reward will far outweigh the few flea bites of captious critics who are ever ready to hinder rather than to help.

The music after the sermon is highly important. Simple invitation songs, reverently and prayerfully sung, seem to be an essential in all modern evangelistic appeals. Do not change the hymn too frequently during the invitation; it does no harm to sing the same hymn through several times. The frequent singing of the same hymn will avoid the element of curiosity and quickly fix the minds of those present upon the desired action.

Many a man, who otherwise would have remained untouched, has had his feet set into motion, his will moved to action and his lips opened in confession of faith by the winsomeness of song.

Evangelistic fires are most often kindled by prayer and the voice of testimony expressed in song. The chief asset of the spoken work is the atmosphere created by song. Let us prayerfully and persistently capitalize our great evangelistic agency—the gospel in song.

If one has not his peace within, it is useless to seek it otherwise.—La Rochefoucauld.

All the revelations are the gift of stillness. The lake must be calm if the heavens are to be reflected on its surface.—J. Brierley.

The first test of a successful manager is to manage himself.—J. S. Kirtley.

The Service of Killing

By C. R. MANLEY, M. D.

Doctor Manley is always different. Never before has THE BAPTIST published such a missionary story. It reminds one of David Livingstone in Africa among the lions. Paul fought with beasts at Ephesus and Manley kills tigers in India. Evidently the doctor is in the direct line of apostolic succession.

IT SEEMS a paradox that any "doc" should ever render a missionary service by killing. But, strange as it may seem, it is sometimes true. It has come true here in Hanamakonda and in my personal experience. In fact, I am the guilty person.

But when a man comes crying that a panther has killed his two pet goats and begs you to come and shoot the panther, what would you do? You'd grab your gun and go and see what you could do. The beautiful little rifle you see in the picture was given me by the young married people's class in Freeport, Ill. It has a nice way of downing tigers in their tracks that I like. Be it ever thus with that gun!

DOCTOR MANLEY SETTING A BROKEN RIB CAUSED BY A BROKEN AXLE

In January a panther took possession of a two-story house in a section of the town that had been desolated by plague. Very few people were left in that part of the town. Twice I was called to see the panther sleeping on the veranda of the house at midday but each time it had slipped inside as the curious crowd gathered. It was easy enough to find how it got into the house but somehow I couldn't work up any enthusiasm over the idea of following it over the defective wall which led into the dark interior.

When the man asked me to shoot the panther, we planned to sit up that night on the roof of a little mosque near by and wait for the animal to come back to finish his meal. But at the last moment the Mohammedans refused to allow us to climb up on the mosque. It looked as though we were out of it for that night, but when I was about to give up and start for home a big, black-bearded Sikh invited me to join him in his machan. He had tied his machan (a little wooden frame about two by four feet, with strings stretched across the frame for one to sit on), in a tree near the front of the house. He said he believed that if we should tie a live goat out in the road in front of the house that the panther would come and get it. So we procured a goat and tied it in the bazaar road in front of the house and then climbed into the tree to await the panther's arrival. Our Sikh friend is a man of noble proportions, as one may readily see by the picture, so I took a higher limb for my perch and let him occupy the machan. For an hour and a half we sat like the proverbial bump on a log waiting for the panther to come. And in the meantime my legs went to sleep and my back ached and I wished and wished that there were a little more upholstery on my bones. When you sit in a machan you don't move. A panther stalking his prey would instantly detect the slightest movement or noise and be off. So I sat and let piece after piece of me become paralyzed, until most of me had passed into a blissfully comatose condition. And then, with a roar that tore the silence of the night to ribbons and did much the same thing to my nerves, the panther leaped upon the goat, scaring me so badly that I nearly fell out of the tree. And yet I managed to hang on somehow.

Then came the job of administering the lethal dose of lead. How could I shoot a thing I couldn't see when my hands wobbled as if I were scared to death! But the panther was there, big as life, and we could see the black shadow of him. That is to say, there was a big black shadow-mass and part of it had to be the panther and part of it the goat. I figured out which part of it ought to be the panther and then, with the light of a nearby street lamp to help me see the sights of my gun and by dint of bracing myself to eliminate the wobble caused by the breeze (or whatever it was), I took a long careful aim and blazed away. Another roar! But this one didn't have the zest to it the first one did. Then came a thrashing about and a scuffling noise. I couldn't see a thing that was going on, whether he was getting up to come and chew off one of my sleeping nethe limbs, or what he might be up to. But they had told me before hand, "Keep shooting as long as there is a sign of motion." So I did. And the big Sikh joined in with his old Martini musket. It sounded like some major naval engagement—Dewey shooting up the Spanish Main or whatever it was he did. Finally our guns got too hot to hold and the shuffling stopped, so we did, too. The panther was dead, thoroughly dead for my first shot had hit him in the brain. So, after allowing time for all nine of his feline lives to leave, we descended and examined our prize. He certainly was a beauty. Now he hangs on the wall and snarls at the world like some pessimists I know. But the man whose goats had been killed won't lose any more.

DOCTOR AND MRS. MANLEY WITH ONE OF THE TIGERS THEY SHOT

Last month a panther went stalking through the main street of a little village near here and snatched a dimpled little brown baby out of its sleeping mother's arms and ate it. And the mother did not even know it was gone at some time later. They wanted me to come and shoot that panther. I certainly wanted to do it but other duties prevented.

DOCTOR MANLEY WITH HIS SIKH POLICE FRIEND, AND THE PANTHER THAT LIVED IN A HOUSE

Last April Mrs. Manley and I went into the jungle north of us. It was in the midst of the tiger-infested area. Across the Godavari river from us there are whole villages and districts that are absolutely abandoned and deserted because of the tigers. They have killed the inhabitants and their cattle until those who were left fled to avoid extermination and ruin.

Every morning I held a clinic and talked with the people. Such ignorance and degradation I have found nowhere else in India. There were whole villages in which there was not a single man or woman who could read or write. The name of Jesus Christ had never been heard of there. And such pitiful poverty and hardship, trying to wrest a living out of the jungle.

While we were in the first village a tiger killed one of the village cows. That night I sat up in a machan over the kill and waited for the tiger to come back and finish his job. I must have dropped asleep, for I was weary, and waked up when the shikari (native hunter) poked me in the ribs. His eyes were as big as saucers and he was pointing frantically over my head toward the body of the cow. I looked and there was the tiger. I just kept on looking while he stalked, silent as a shadow, across the intervening space and, seizing the cow by the neck, dragged it back into the black shadows of the underbrush. Caesar, but he looked big to me! I trotted off that cow that it had taken four men to drag out into the open as though it were an empty meal can. By the time he had melted into the blackness and there was nothing to shoot at, I came to and realized that I had come there to render another service of killing. While I rehearsed in English, French and German and Telugu all the names that pertain to or have any bearing on the term "fool," "simp," etc., the old boy began his meal. How those great teeth sheared through the flesh and cracked the bones of that cow! It was enough to make the shivers run up and down my spine. It got the shikari's goat, all right. He trembled so violently that the machan and even the tree top began to shake and creak. I reached over and laid my hand on him to steady him but for some reason it failed to have that effect. He trembled all the more. Finally, in desperation, I decided to try a shot before the tiger should discover us and scoot. Holding the gun with one hand I used the other to focus the flashlight on the tiger with gleaming yellow orbs, great teeth, dripping blood. It was a diabolically evil, snarling face which glared at me. Something must have ailed that gun or perhaps the shikari gave an extra big shake. I missed, anyway. As he bounded away I fired again. I didn't raise my batting average or throw him out on second with that shot either. But two days later I did kill that tiger. He had killed another cow and that time he came back before the sun set and though my heart was hitting about a million a minute and my tongue clave most cohesively to the roof of my mouth, I managed to place a leaden pellet where it would do a lot of good, and his day's work was done.

One night a panther sneaked up behind where we were sitting in front of the bungalow and killed a pig and carried it off. The next night Ruth and I waited for him to come back for another pork chop and I managed to trephine his skull with a bit of lead, and his day's work was done.

A Different Set of Stripes

Another night we sat over another cow and waited for the tiger to come back. Ghostly footsteps rustling in the dead leaves circled the kill, then came to rest directly below our tree. I leaned over the edge of the machan and while one of our Christian boys flashed the light, I tried a shot. Gleaming yellow eyes again! And stripes! Blowey! He lay dead right in his tracks. And what do you think? My tiger was a dirty, old, disreputable scavenger of a hyena. Well, there were eighty children killed by hyenas in India last year. So possibly I did some doting mother a service in killing the hyena, even if I did mistake him for another set of stripes.

Then there was another tiger who came stalking up through the jungle toward us and the kill we were sitting over. We watched it for fully ten minutes before it came into a clear enough place so that I could be sure no twigs would deflect my bullet. It was a wonderful sight to see that great striped beast steal through the jungle. The sun was still high and the black stripes on their background of brilliant orange were as beautiful as the owner was terrible. I put a bullet in his brain and great was the rejoicing in the village which it had been terrifying for the past five years.

Early one morning we went with the villagers to shoot a tiger that refused to be driven away from the buffalo it had killed. It slipped into the jungle when we came up so we got no chance at it. But the men tied up a machan and we climbed into it and sat there all day in the blazing sun, waiting for the tiger to return. The men had promised to return for us at twilight as we were not prepared to stay all night. In fact we had neither food nor water sufficient for the day. But the tiger did not come till it had begun to get dark and it was completely dark by the time it had got under our tree. We had no flash-light with us and a black storm cloud hid the moon. There was no chance to get a shot as I could not make out the faintest outline of the beast, strain as I would. And we were actually famishing for water. So I decided that the best thing to do was to frighten that tiger away and get down before it had gotten another taste of meat. So we yelled and fired off a load of buckshot through the underbrush and then shinnied down from our perch. We lit a fire and got some firebrands burning and then set off up the trail to find some water. And we drank plenty when we found it, even if it wasn't boiled! Then we struck out to find our way out of the jungle. Of course we got lost. For hours we wandered around through those spooky jungle glades. Thunder rolled and lightening flicked its angry lash across the sky. Oh, to get out of the jungle before the deluge should come and put out our poor little firebrands and make it impossible for us to have any fire at all. Yelling and singing to keep the tigers at a distance and to keep up our courage, we kept on and on. At last we broke out into the open fields. Safe! And there not far away was a watch fire where a herdsman was guarding his little flock. How good it seemed to be where we felt sure there was no tiger dodging along behind us, ready perhaps to leap onto some of us when the storm should extinguish our firebrands and leave us in blackness and at the mercy of any prowling beasts. But God was good to us and we eventually got home safe. It must be that he has other service for us to render, other men he wants us to rescue, either from sickness or from prowling beast, other souls to whom he wants us to show his light and love. After that experience our lives are rededicated and offered with a renewed intensity in the service he has entrusted to us.

Sunset's Promise

By P. G. VAN ZANDT

*T*HERE were clouds in the sky today,
 With patches of blue;
 There were showers of rain with the storm,
 But the sun broke through.
 What a marvel, that sunset hour,
 With its brilliance there!
 Better still, the promise it gives
 Of a morrow fair.
 Now the tints have faded to shades,
 The pinks to old golds;
 Yet the hope of a cloudless morn
 The beauty still holds.

There were clouds in my life today
 With moments of peace;
 There were storms that broke over my soul,
 Yet there came release.
 For the promise of God's great grace
 And of deathless morn,
 Broke through the clouds in my heart,
 And peace was born.
 Thank God that the clouds of life
 Give sunset peace!
 Thank God that his promise of love
 Makes fears to cease!

CORINTH GIRLS CARRYING WATER FOR SATURDAY "CLEAN-UP," NEAR EAST RELIEF

The Devotional Life

Knowing One's Self

BY OWEN PHILIPS EACHES

AT the national gathering of the American Legion a few days ago in Philadelphia at which 50,000 people were present, a pitiful and tragic incident occurred. Standing on the platform in the presence of 5000 comrades, a man asked their help in finding out who he was. During the war he had lost all remembrance of his name and his past life. His appeal was, "Help me to find out who I am!" There was the consciousness that he was a person, but he did not know what person. He had lost the sense of personal identity.

There comes a time in the lives of most men when there is a desire to know one's self, to find out who one really is, what, one's character and limitations.

Paul Discovers Himself.

For the first twenty years or more of his life, Paul's estimate of himself is found in Philipians 3:4-6: "Though I myself might have confidence even in the flesh; if any man think to have confidence in the flesh, I yet more; circumcised the eighth day of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; as touching zeal, persecuting the church; as touching the righteousness which is in the law, found blameless." He took a census of his moral and spiritual condition. He found a life beyond reproach, an unquestioned orthodoxy, an intense earnestness, a blameless righteousness. He was a self-satisfied soul until he met Jesus, the Christ. A light shone about him and a light shone within him revealing to him his real condition. For the first time he had a consciousness of the real self. He had found himself out. His judgment now was that he had been deceived, that the soul with whom he had been acquainted was an unreal soul.

A Scottish writer has said that in every man are four distinct men: the outer man as seen by the public at large; the second man seen by the intimate friends; the third man as known to himself; and the innermost man, the real man as known to the judgment of God. Paul got a sight of Jesus' conception of his nature. Concerning his newly discovered self he wrote: "Though I was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor and injurious; howbeit, I obtained mercy because I did it ignorantly and in unbelief" (I Timothy 1:13). "For I am least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle because I persecuted the church of God" (I Corinthians 15:9).

A marked instance of a man not knowing himself is found in the case of David. If one had asked David the question, "Who are you?" the answer would have been, "I am David, the conqueror and ruler, the head of God's outward kingdom, leading in public worship, writing the hymns of the temple. Sometimes my conscience has accused me of complicity in the death of Uriah, but I brush this aside saying that he would have been killed at any rate."

The Real David

The seeming David had never met the real David until a brave man, Nathan, showed him who he really was. And then David saw his weakened moral nature: his hands, touched with blood, raised in prayer; the nation's moral life injured; a home broken up; a friend traitorously killed. For 3000 years the world has seen him on his knees uttering the fifty-first psalm. It was a great blessing when David discovered, with Nathan's courageous and tactful help, who he was on the inside of his life.

Dr. Henry G. Weston said publicly near the end of his life that he had two things for which he was especially thankful: the gift of friends who had enriched and enlarged his life and God's gift of the sense of his sins. Through this revelation, Weston the sinful man, became Weston the forgiven man, Weston a twentieth century saint.

The difficulty of truly knowing ones' self and the importance of this knowledge was seen in the inscription in gold letters in a Greek temple, "Know Thyself." A friendly Nathan and a friendly Holy Spirit may assist us in getting a just estimate of ourselves.

LIVE CHRIST—and though the way may be
In this world's sight adversity,
He who doth heed thy every need
Shall give thy soul prosperity.

Live Christ—and though thy path may be
The narrow street of poverty,
He had not where to lay his head
Yet lived in largest liberty.

Live Christ—and though thy life may be
The straight way of humility,
He who first trod that way of God,
Will clothe thee with his dignity.

Live Christ—and though thy life may be
In such a valedictory,
The heavy cross brings seeming loss
But wins the crown of victory.

Live Christ—and all thy life shall be
A highway of delivery—
A royal road of goodly deeds,
God paved with sweetest charity.

Live Christ—and all thy life shall be
A sweet uplifting ministry,
A sowing of the fair white seeds
That fruit through all eternity.

—JOHN OXENHAM.

Young People and the Kingdom

CONDUCTED BY EDWIN PHELPS, GENERAL SECRETARY, B. Y. P. U. OF A.

"Meeting Helps" on Devotional Topic for Nov. 28 FOLLOWING THE FRONTIER

(Note: These "helps" are built around the material given in "Young People's Leader" the official magazine "For All Baptist Young People." Subscriptions to the "Leader" may be made through the B.Y.P.U. of America, at $1 per year.)

If you will read the material as presented in the Leader and the leaflets suggested for further reading, you will learn some astounding facts about the frontier as it is today—that part of the country which we think is completely conquered. In addition to this reading, if you have time (and it would be well to find the time), read "We Must March" and "Pith and Pathos of Frontier Missions." Both of these books are on the national missionary reading contest, so by reading them you will be helping both the meeting and the efforts of your church in the contest. These books may be had from the literature department of the Board of Missionary Cooperation if your pastor or other church members do not have them.

Several stories in "Pith and Pathos of Frontier Missions" are especially good for this meeting. Those beginning on the following pages will make good examples for your meeting: pages 18, 23, 26, 37, 49, 61, 70, 73, 81, 117.

In presenting the topic, tell first of the early pioneer days as told in "We Must March." Several of the incidents showing the hardships to be encountered and the problems confronting the missionaries may be told in an interesting way.

Then show that although the missionaries today do not have quite as hard a time as the early missionaries, they have many problems to face and many disagreeable tasks to perform. As many as possible of the stories as given in the leaflets and in "Pith and Pathos of Frontier Missions" should be told. Bring out the fact that although we live in comparative ease amid many modern improvements, the missionaries must face some of their difficulties with few tools or conveniences.

Point out that even though many young people are volunteering to take the Christ to these frontier fields, the denomination does not have the money, and unless every one gives something, the work will have to remain unexpanded. The story given on page 66 of "Pith and Pathos of Frontier Missions" is a good one to tell in this connection.

Although the article "Unsung Heroes I Have Known" in the November, 1926, issue of the American Magazine speaks especially of foreign missionaries, the same points would be applicable to home missionaries. It might be a good idea to read part or all of this article at this meeting in order to show the young people that our missionaries are really accomplishing many worth-while things, and that people are beginning to appreciate their efforts.

A "Year Round" Convention

For four days each year, thousands of Baptist young people gather to learn of Christ and his kingdom; to become acquainted with the best methods of training; and to receive inspiration for that training. Many look forward to the Baptist Young People's Convention.

It occupies four days out of a year—not much time. Is it enough, you may ask, to make any impression on these young people? Are they able to learn enough in these few days to last them even a short time? Here's an answer:

As you know, the key-note of the Los Angeles Convention was "Adventure for Christ" and the convention hymn, "Lead On, O King Eternal."

At a recent meeting of the West Washington B. Y. P. U., the motto for the year was chosen—"Adventuring with Christ," in Evangelism (every member a Christian), in service (every member a worker) and in education (every member trained). The aim is to have all unions, senior, intermediate and junior, adopt and use the Christian Life Program. The hymn for the year is "Lead On, O King Eternal" and the scripture, Exodus 14:15 and Matthew 28:20.

Here the convention will last a whole year—and possibly longer—for we never know how far influence extends. Not only will those who attended the convention profit by the experience, but others, too, will have a share in the profit. Throughout one whole year the inspiration of that convention will be kept clearly before the young people, and by the light of that inspiration they will be able to go forward as never before. In other words, although the convention actually lasted only four days, it will last much longer than that theoretically; how long, we cannot know. Surely the convention is worth while.

Suggestions

"That the spirit of good fellowship now shown to foreign students as group be extended to them as individuals; that the denominational system be not imposed upon mission countries since the desire a united Christian church; that considering the fitness of any candidate the mission boards seek the advice of some national from the country to which he desires to go; that the emphasis of missionary agencies must be on meeting human needs in the spirit of Christ rather than on building an organization for the propagation of Christianity; that a national movement of the churches be made to open representative American homes to the foreign students; that Christians make a more personal application of Christian principles in their own lives before they call themselves followers of Christ; that the movement for exchange of students and professors between countries be encouraged, especially the sending of American students abroad and the bringing of foreign professors to this country; that students themselves make request for courses in their colleges giving them a sympathetic understanding of other cultures; that more use be made of the foreign students on the campuses in interpreting foreign cultures; that the record of a missionary candidate's relationship to the foreign students on his campus be investigated before he is accepted."

Theodore Roosevelt, the American, by Edward H. Cotton. Boston: Beacon Press, $2.

The author has caught the enthusiastic, daring, battling spirit of the man and has given a readable account of Roosevelt's main achievements. Facts and incidents have been honored but have been kept subordinate to personality. The book in size is less than one half of the usual biography, but the work has been so well done that one gets an admirable view of the man who was declared by Baron Rossetti to be "one of the most powerful personalities . . . in the whole world." A peculiarity of this book is the Italian translation opposite each page of English. One of the purposes of the book is to help Italians understand America through a knowledge of the man who said of himself: "I am an American and nothing else. . . . I am straight United States." I wish all our young people could and would read this book.

—H. L. STETSON

November 14 Topic
RECREATIONS FOR YOUTH

November 21 Topic
THE THANKFUL HEART

For a full treatment of these topics
see Young People's Leader.

BOYS and Girls

Won't You Please Give Me a Shower of Stamps?

BY MARGARET T. APPEGARTH

OF COURSE I might come asking you for something difficult; suppose I wanted Russian sables or Alaskan seal-skins or Pierce Arrow automobiles or phonographic victrolas or Chinese rugs or oakwood chests or Carrara marbles! You could then shrug your shoulders in a hopeless way as if to say: "Of all impossible persons! She doesn't want much, does she?"

Whereas I really want something justly bigger! I want a postage stamp— a nice jolly little red postage stamp which can work the biggest kind of a fairy tale for somebody I know, many somebodies, in fact. So couldn't you send me a stamp, every one of you who is reading these words? If one red stamp looks a mite lonesome in the envelope, remember that three is said to be quite a crowd; don't send three if you can send six; and don't send six, if you can send ten. I don't care at all how many you send, I'm becoming with a tremendous Beggar, with a capital B. I stand with my hands held out, waiting, for you will send me a shower of stamps, won't you? You see, it's the first begging I've ever done, and I should like to feel I was a success at my new trade.

But as for waiting, I haven't waited as long as some one about whom I want to tell you, or another some one. They've been waiting so long. It makes a simply long to shine like Mr. Wilton Shakespeare's little candle: "How that little candle throws its light! It shines a good deed in a naughty world." I, I'd love to shine that way! I'm going to. So are you. Oh, I know you are, when you realize that a boy, a brown boy. He's been at school. It's our school, too, yours and mine. For every single Sunday morning when we go to church and lay an envelope on the offering plate, part of the money in that envelope goes to the world to support that particular school which teaches that particular boy. That brown boy thought that he was never going to learn to read; not a single person in his family could read, and it was a tremendous adventure for him to go to school. His teachers were overwhelmed with the importance of having a scholar in the family, even an A B C scholar who had learned his alphabet in the sand with his finger. But he did learn to read, by and by—thin school books and fat school books and the Bible. He wanted to read more books, stories! But there wasn't another book for him. School books, fat and thin, and the Bible—enough in one way, but not nearly enough in another way. For if you multiply him by a million other bookless boys and then add a million bookless girls, you can see how sad it must be to have all these would-be-readers with nothing to read.

The Explorers' Club

CONDUCTED BY MARGARET T. APPEGARTH

Suppose it were with us as with that boy, year in, year out, arithmetics, grammars, geographies, Bibles. It really makes each of us feel quite rich, doesn't it?

Children's book week in America is such a marvelous week: hundreds and thousands of books are recommended to American boys and girls. And the brown boys and girls of the Orient have nothing. They are waiting for a book, for they have no library with a special children's room where the shelves are brimful of fairy tales and adventure tales and hero tales.

We need books to help us grow, to put new ideas into our heads. That brown boy is not getting what he needs to help him grow. But I know how he can get it. He can get it through stamps—stamps from every Baptist boy and girl who reads these words, stamps from your mothers and fathers, stamps from your neighbors. So now you see why I'm turning into a beggar. It's for that boy, and a million other boys in India, a million girls in India, a million other boys in every one of those lands tinted pink, green, yellow, lavender and brown on the maps, where other children are bookless.

Suggestions for Sending Stamps.

1. Put them loose in an envelope addressed to Miss Margaret Applegarth, 14 Arnold Park, Rochester, N. Y. This envelope must be sealed and stamped with a two-cent stamp. Please do not attach the stamps inside the envelope to the letter, however. Each envelope will be opened carefully so that none will be lost or overlooked.
2. Please give your name and address. Acknowledgments will be made in this column.
3. Those who prefer to send checks or money orders will, of course, confer a favor.

Even this is only half my idea; now is the time to tell you the other half. A certain committee has asked me to write a book and a set of programs for all the denominations to use with the juniors in their churches next year. I'm going to suggest that every denomination set its own boys and girls to collecting money to translate a book into some foreign language, so that each denomination can give that one book as a present on Christmas day, 1927, to some country where boys and girls are bookless.

Now you know as well as I do that those other boys and girls may not get thrilled over the idea. They don't know me quite as well as you know me! But suppose I could write in that book: "This is a perfectly workable plan, all you Presbyterian and Methodist and Lutheran boys and girls, because on Christmas day, 1926, Baptist boys and girls gave enough money to translate a book! And if they could do it a year ago, surely you can do it in 1927!"

Don't you think it would be great fun to be held up as a model to all the other denominations? Think how proud I should be of you! "They did it so eagerly and willingly! Every mail brought a perfect avalanche of envelopes, and out of those envelopes came the reddest two-cent stamps! The postman smiled all over his face; I smiled all over my face; and as for the faces of the brown boys and girls, well—!!!"

It costs about $300 to translate a children's book into a foreign language. There is a special (interdenominational) committee on Christian literature to which the money will be given, for this committee attends to all the details and knows where and when and how books should be translated and distributed.

Again I ask you to read the rules, and please give a shower of stamps to

Your very hopeful friend,

M. T. A.

The Christ of the Children

The Christ of the Children, by J. G. Stevenson. New York: Doran.

In language simple and clear, the author interestingly paints pictures of the important incidents in the life of Jesus. Portions of the Sermon on the Mount are given in plain words, easily comprehended by children. "Blessed are the poor in spirit" is explained: "Blessed are those who are never proud, but always think little of themselves, for they belong to that kingdom of heaven over which Jesus is King."

—F. H. FAHRINGER

Churches at Work

If your church has developed interesting and effective methods of carrying on its work, we shall be glad to have an opportunity of telling other churches about them through the medium of this page. Material should be addressed to the Board of Missionary Cooperation, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

WORLD TOUR ATTRACTS

WIDE INTEREST

Churches in every part of the country report keen interest in the January world tour, and a record registration for this novel journey to Northern Baptist mission fields is confidently expected. The good airship Evangel will carry on this voyage as many Northern Baptists as are willing to enroll for the tour—the only instance, we believe, of an airship or any other kind of ship which does not limit the number of people who can be accommodated. It is true that the Evangel can be seen only with the eye of the imagination, but it is a stanch craft nevertheless, safe beyond any other method of transportation and positively certain to return its passengers to their homes on time. Every church has been asked to appoint a tour committee, which in turn designates booking agents who will issue tickets to all who enroll. All you have to do to engage passage is to put down your name, receive a ticket and exchange the ticket coupon for a copy of the log. This log, it must be owned, is the substance of the world tour, and reading a section of it every day in January will carry one on the pinions of thought to every part of the world where Northern Baptist missionaries are at work. It is hoped that families will carry on the reading together and that the Bible references which are provided for each day will be read faithfully also.

During January, THE BAPTIST will publish each week interesting supplemental material touching the different mission fields that are to be visited, and the January number of Missions will also have special articles which should be read by those who make the tour.

THE HONOR ROLL

The New York Metropolitan board leads the Northern Baptist Convention in the percentage of gain shown in the report of missionary receipts to Sept. 30. For the first five months of the current fiscal year Metropolitan's increase over the corresponding period last year exceeded 100 per cent. There are no other percentages of gain so large as this, but many evidences of healthy growth. Twenty organizations are on the honor roll, an increase of one for the month, the list in the order of rank being as follows: New York Metropolitan, West Washington, Illinois, Iowa, Delaware, Rhode Island, North Dakota, Michigan, Nevada, New Jersey, Idaho, Nebraska, Massachusetts, Missouri, Pennsylvania, New York state, Northern California, West Virginia and Vermont. On the basis of returns received Indiana and South Dakota are ahead of last year, but definite rank cannot be given them because of delayed reports.

Taking the five months' period as a whole, the report is a cheering one, for total receipts from donation sources show a gain over last year of $170,587.77, or $1,332,298.95 against $1,161,711.18. There is still room for improvement, as nothing less than "one-twelfth on time, every time" should satisfy us, but there is encouragement in the moderate gain we have made during the early months of the fiscal year.

Why not have every state on the honor roll Dec. 31 or sooner?

CREDIT DUE

Some time ago we commended Washington Avenue church, Huntington, W. Va., for borrowing from the bank when necessary to pay one-twelfth each month, even during the lean months. We also wish to congratulate First church, Springfield, Ohio, J. S. Braker, pastor, for following a similar policy.

AN INTERESTING SERIES

At Roxborough church, Philadelphia, Rev. James Foster Wilcox has popularized missionary education in a way that strongly appeals to his congregation. Mr. Wilcox has been giving a series of Sunday evening sermons on missionary heroes. Pictures of the missionaries chosen for his subjects—Judson, Carey, Moffat, Paton, Grenfell and Livingstone—appear in advance notices in the church bulletin and Mr. Wilcox also makes a lantern slide of each portrait. In addition, he uses appropriate hymn slides.

A LADDER OF SUCCESS

- 100 per cent—I did
- 90 per cent—I will
- 80 per cent—I can
- 70 per cent—I think I can
- 60 per cent—I might
- 50 per cent—I think I might
- 40 per cent—What is it?
- 30 per cent—I wish I could
- 20 per cent—I don't know how
- 10 per cent—I can't
- 0 per cent—I won't

—Reprinted from calendar of First Presbyterian church, Sioux City, Ia.

INTERESTING DEVELOPMENTS

A tithe's league was recently started by Oakland Park church, Kansas City, and all deacons and trustees have adopted the program. The income for current accounts has increased 35 per cent. Olivet church, also in Kansas City, almost doubled its income for current accounts by a thorough every-member canvass.

ANOTHER STANDARD CHURCH

There has been further comment on the question of a standard church, discussed several times on this page. Cambridge Association, Ohio, has endorsed the plan and is making an effort to lift the membership of the churches in the whole association up to the standard set. Cards are printed with spaces to record attendance at Bible school, morning and evening Sunday attendance, prayer meeting and to indicate whether a contribution was made. Other churches have raised their standards; the Lawrence, Kan., church has 97 per cent standard membership.

WHAT DOES A DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT DO?

There appeared on this page a paragraph on how a pastor spends his time. Many people also ask, "What does a district superintendent do?" Rev. Norton J. Hilton, superintendent of the Southern district of Illinois, reports, "During the year we traveled over 25,000 miles nearly 14,000 in our Ford coupe. We visited either once or more 287 churches attended seventy-three conferences and associations; delivered 162 sermons and addresses; baptized two, and administered the communion service once. We assisted in the two summer assemblies. One of our most important duties is to assist pastors to locate and also to help churches to find pastors. These are just a few of the things which occupy the time of a district superintendent."

DEDICATE CHURCH

The dedication services of the Jordan Grove church, Jordans Grove, Iowa, were the climax of nearly a week of activities to which the surrounding community was invited and in which it had part. "Music night," "fellowship night," "home church night," and "home-coming day" led up to Sunday, Oct. 3, when the dedication services were held. This is a rural church, situated five miles from the nearest railroad town, doing a fine piece of work ministering to the community in which it is located.

Among Ourselves

A British Causerie

BY FREDERIC C. SPURR

Dr. Carnegie Simpson and Lambeth

NO finer utterance has been given by any public man upon the subject of church union than that delivered by Dr. Carnegie Simpson before the Federal Council of the Free Churches. In the simplest manner he reviewed the progress of the conversations which have been held during the last few years between representatives of Free and Anglican churches. He regards these as having accomplished much good both in clearing away misunderstanding and in creating a new spirit of friendliness and understanding. Whatever happens in the future there can be no going back upon the kindly spirit of the Lambeth atmosphere. But it has become clear that for the present these conversations have reached their term and they therefore cease. The final conclusion reached by Doctor Simpson will commend itself to all men of good-will. He said that unity is not an end in itself, nor is the church an end in itself. The great thing is the kingdom of God.

Let us turn our attention to the problems of the kingdom of God for it is just these churches feel the common burden of these problems that they will be drawn together to meet them. The common Christian conscience about the kingdom of God is what will make intolerable any separations which impede the reach of the gospel, that sole hope of the world. These noble, Christian words find an echo in all Christian hearts. It would be treason for any church to be recreant to the truth committed to it. But it is increasingly evident that the way must be found to meet the urgent needs of the world, and it is in cooperative service that this can be done. In service lies the solution.

A Soul Tragedy

I have finished reading the remarkable book, told by himself, of a French priest, Albert Houtin, who, commencing as a Benedictine monk ended as a complete agnostic, and renounced everything that is fairly be called Christian faith. His biography, "Une vie de pretre," is a rare document which all who would understand the trend of things in France should read. I have read few things so sad as this story, which is told without rancor and with perfect frankness. M. Houtin devoted himself to Biblical criticism, but of a "wrong kind. He set upon a wrong track by concluding the so-called miracles of the New Testament church with the miracles recorded in the gospels. He failed to distinguish between the two and came to regard them as alike legendary. It seems to me that his point of departure was entirely wrong, and therefore his conclusions were false. In the end he threw off his soutane and became a writer and lecturer. The value of his life story, however, does not lie in the account of his opinions, which in England as in France can never win acceptance because they are quite unscientific, but in the revelation it gives of the training given to the Roman priest. In this it is illuminating. A jumble of legend and theology and philosophy can only result, when the sorting out comes, either in skepticism, or in a divided mind, the one part of which refuses commerce with the other. In the case of M. Houtin, it was skepticism. Had he only encountered a first-class scholarly evangelical, such as we could have found him by the score in England, he might have become a great Christian force. His life seems to me to have been a tragedy from this point of view. According to M. Houtin's story the training of a Roman priest leaves much to be desired. Enquiry is taboo. The alternatives seem to be the closing of the mind to truth, other than that which Rome officially teaches, or a break away sooner or later. I do not suppose that this life will be translated into English for its subject is not sufficiently well known in England to warrant that; but those who read the original well should peruse these pages which convey a great deal of enlightenment. I am sorry for these priests who, knowing nothing whatever of evangelical religion, drift from Romanism into skepticism. M. Houtin's book will show why.

What Youth Is Thinking

It is the day of the questionnaire. Some think the thing is becoming a nuisance. I must plead guilty to joining in the fray to the extent of issuing a series of questions relative to the thinking of youth about some of the things that matter. The questions first appeared in my own church manual. The press copied them and so gave me a wide constituency. There were six questions: What are young men and women known to you thinking and saying about, first, religion in general; second, Christianity in particular; third, Jesus Christ; fourth, the church; fifth, the Bible; sixth, the meaning of their lives? Replies have poured in from all over the country and from all classes in the community. In most cases they are courteous; in a few cases, rude; in one or two cases, insulting. Still I do not complain since I asked for complete frankness. If these replies are at all representative, then it means that we shall have a great deal of missionary work to do. They reveal a colossal ignorance about the elementary things of our faith. One wonders who is to blame for this. Somebody has badly blundered. Scarcely a single person who has replied gives the true place to our Lord. He is a "good man," or "an impractical idealist," or "too far away from us to be of use," but there is no mention of him as the world's Redeemer. A number of my correspondents say frankly that if they play the game and live a decent moral life they can well do without religion, and as to any future life, they will take their chance. I find that the war has soured many men. They gave up all for their country and now find it difficult to obtain a decent job. This has naturally embittered them. On the other hand, many frankly state that they have no interests in life beyond sport, pleasure and gambling. A single reply stresses the glory of service. One writer sends me a full report of a court case as typical for his district. If it be really typical, then it is lust and indiscipline that are responsible for the present indifference to religion more than anything else. It is difficult to fix responsibility for the paganism that is recrudescing in Europe (and elsewhere), but the situation calls for the most careful and prayerful thought on the part of the church.

The Church Congress

The Anglican Church Congress has been held at Southport. The main subject for consideration was "The Eternal Spirit," an indication of the trend of thought among earnest people on this side. Some of the most notable contributions were made by high churchmen who are showing an increasing interest in all theological subjects. The key-note was struck when the statement was made that a general confusion reigns as to the person and work of the Spirit of God. The average Christian, I am afraid, could not give a coherent account of his belief in the Holy Ghost, although he professes it as part of his creed. It was therefore a timely topic to introduce to the congress, although, strangely enough, the attendance fell far below that of last year at Liverpool. One church paper thinks this may be due to the topic, which promised little excitement. One scarcely likes to take this view, which if true reflects upon the intelligence of the absentees. A great point was made in insisting upon the word of our Lord that the Spirit is given to guide into all truth, and that progressively. A courageous acceptance of this word would save us from many controversies and help to bring to a synthesis certain truths which now are separated in many minds. At the same time, this truth needs guarding from the use made of it by Newman who could make it cover all the accretions which have degraded Christian doctrine in the Roman church, and which some advanced Anglicans seem so anxious to incorporate into the English church.

Church Visitation

The Baptist Union is now in the full tide of its great visitation of the churches. A number of men have been appointed as messengers with a view to deepening the spiritual life of the Christian people. A static membership, a decreasing Sunday-school attendance and a lack of apostolic zeal have so impressed the council of the union, that it has appointed a day of prayer for the churches and also sent out a number of messengers for the purpose I have indicated. A wiser step could not be imagined. Judgment must begin at the house of God. Many reasons have contributed to the present lukewarmness, but nothing can excuse a continuance of it. If intense desire is the first step toward revival, then a revival is imminent, for the desire is undoubtedly intense. It has been my privilege to visit three centers and in each case the response has been remarkable. I hope that other denominations will follow the example of the Baptist Union. The result could not be other than great.

The Industrial Situation

As I write, the coal situation, due to the miners' strike, has taken a turn for the worse. The strike has lasted six months and the leaders on both sides are obdurate. Meanwhile the nation is suffering. Trade is badly hit and the domestic promise for the winter is unhappy. In certain districts the men are returning to work, driven by hunger. But in this there is no real settlement of the dispute. At present we have no statesmen capable of handling the situation.

Pacific Coast Letter

BY LEONARD W. RILEY
The Way to Do It

IF THERE were more congregations like that of the Davis Memorial church, Mount Vernon, Wash., the average pastorate would be materially lengthened. Perhaps, on the other hand, the same result would be secured if there were more pastors like Rev. J. E. Noft-singer, who is now entering upon the thirteenth year of his work with this particular church.

Sept. 12, a special home-coming service was held celebrating the twelfth anniversary of Doctor Noft-singer; evidently the people remembered that "he can't read his tombstone when he's dead." They passed resolutions so gracious and commendatory that when I began to read them my heart almost stopped beating. But as I read on I discovered that Doctor Noft-singer was alive and doubtless happier than any other pastor in the state of Washington. He has reason to be. His people thank God for a pastor who has been "a friend to the friendless, a helper to the needy, a sympathizer with those that sorrowed, a comforter to the bereaved and an adviser, leader and assistant in the many phases of the work, and who has been kind, pleasant and agreeable but firm in his trust in an obedience to the Master." They assure him of their heartfelt love and confidence and pledge to him and his family their zealous and whole-hearted support in carrying forward the work of the kingdom. The present membership of the church is 447. The net gain for the twelve years is 295. Such splendid co-operation should guarantee another twelve years of fellowship with even larger results achieved.

Interesting Comparisons

The Methodist annual conference has been held recently and the shifting about of their pastors has taken place. At the reception given to the new pastor at McMinnville, an address of welcome called forth some interesting facts as to the four leading churches in this community.

The Methodist church during the past twenty-five years has had eleven past-torates. The average term of service is two and one-half years. The membership during the quarter of a century has increased from 150 to 280. The Christian church has likewise had ten pastors and the membership has grown from about 200 to 342. The Presbyterian church has had eight pastors and two supplies with an average term of service of approximately three and one-half

THE BOARD OF MISSIONARY COOPERATION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

CONTRIBUTIONS TO UNIFIED BUDGET

Rank	States	1	2	3	4
		Amount paid to Sept. 30 Last year	Amount paid to Sept. 30 This year	Quota for This year	Amount Quota due to Sept. 30
1.	N. Y. Metro.	$ 28,992.60	$ 60,777.28	$ 290,744.00	$ 121,143.3
2.	W. Washington	12,109.64	18,295.97	55,000.00	22,916.0
3.	Illinois	56,077.83	72,627.26	320,500.00	133,541.0
4.	Iowa	15,674.65	20,066.39	90,000.00	37,500.0
5.	Delaware	2,211.74	2,609.00	9,500.00	3,958.3
6.	Rhode Island	25,528.56	29,877.62	115,000.00	47,916.0
7.	North Dakota	3,066.24	3,531.25	21,500.00	8,958.3
8.	Michigan	46,992.32	53,576.82	200,000.00	83,333.3
9.	Nevada	884.59	962.08	3,800.00	1,583.3
10.	New Jersey	84,426.25	91,463.87	303,000.00	126,250.0
11.	Idaho	5,845.84	6,168.18	18,000.00	7,500.0
12.	Nebraska	13,679.54	14,365.55	80,500.00	33,541.0
13.	Kansas	28,489.28	29,889.45	175,000.00	72,916.0
14.	Massachusetts	84,610.31	88,064.43	480,500.00	200,208.3
15.	Missouri	7,581.33	7,793.92	35,136.00	14,640.0
16.	Pennsylvania	127,772.06	129,383.63	527,000.00	219,583.3
17.	New York State	147,460.67	149,324.95	609,000.00	253,750.0
18.	N. Calif.	27,852.34	28,128.14	121,000.00	50,416.0
19.	West Virginia	25,970.34	26,142.49	140,000.00	58,333.3
20.	Vermont	10,742.19	10,770.13	45,000.00	18,750.0
21.	S. Calif.	84,939.92	83,894.18	330,756.00	137,815.0
22.	Montana	2,933.65	2,878.73	15,500.00	6,458.3
23.	New Hampshire	13,011.66	12,667.86	45,000.00	18,750.0
24.	Minnesota	22,151.39	21,491.10	125,000.00	52,083.3
25.	Maine	19,383.50	18,724.48	110,000.00	45,833.3
26.	Ohio	75,948.26	72,668.02	355,500.00	148,125.0
27.	Colorado	17,002.09	16,220.92	95,000.00	39,583.3
28.	Wyoming	1,523.69	1,456.61	8,700.00	3,625.0
29.	Connecticut	32,788.79	31,160.60	161,000.00	67,083.3
30.	Wisconsin	17,057.43	15,744.22	72,000.00	30,000.0
31.	E. Washington	6,786.64	5,204.56	34,000.00	14,166.0
32.	Arizona	5,915.40	4,200.46	19,500.00	8,125.0
		1,362.76	807.57	5,000.00	2,083.3
33.	Utah
Not ranked on account of delayed reports*
	Dist. of Col.	4,642.00	3,070.67	30,000.00	12,500.0
	Indiana	42,850.84	45,485.82	165,000.00	68,750.0
	Oregon	9,804.61	8,182.28	60,000.00	25,000.0
	S. Dakota	3,809.21	6,352.39	31,500.00	13,125.0
	Individual and Miscellaneous	43,837.02	138,270.07
Total		$1,161,711.18	$1,332,298.95	$5,308,636.00	$2,209,848.3

* Delayed reports either last year or this year make comparison with previous year impracticable. The order in which the states are listed is determined by the percentage relation of amounts paid this year (Column 3) to amounts paid last year (Column 1).

ears. The present membership is 207. The Baptist church in the twenty-five years has had seven men including an acting pastor of one year and not including the present pastor whose work has recently begun. Here again the average term of service is about three and one-half years. This membership has increased from 208 to 815. The average term of service for the whole group is slightly over three years.

The Methodist system, according to his study, works out near the general average. Its chief advantage seems to be that the church has never been without a man in charge. The judgment of the bishop and the presiding elder seems also to compare favorably with that of the pulpits and committees of the other churches. The influence of Lincoln College in the community is seen in the fact that whereas a quarter of a century ago the Baptist church was about equal in strength to the others it is now reporting a membership equal to the total of the other three churches.

Dr. H. F. Stilwell Honored

MEMBERS of the board of managers and officers and secretaries of the American Baptist Home Mission Society joined with representatives of eight national and local boards, the Federal Council of Churches and Home Missions Council in paying deserved tribute to Dr. H. F. Stilwell, at a special meeting of the board of the Home Mission Society, Monday, Oct. 18. Doctor Stilwell, in retiring as superintendent of evangelism, continues active participation in the work of the denomination in his position as a member of the faculty of the Eastern Theological seminary at Philadelphia. Among many messages from friends unable to be present, conveying to Doctor Stilwell expressions of appreciation for the service he has rendered in the field of evangelism, were communications from C. L. Goodell of the Federal Council of Churches and F. P. Beaver, Dayton, Ohio, president of the Home Mission Society. In referring to the work of evangelism with which Doctor Stilwell especially has been connected both in denominational and interdenominational capacity, the speakers mentioned the personal fellowship and inspiration which Doctor Stilwell in his helpful contacts has brought to them. This thought was carried farther when one of the speakers expressed his gratitude that Doctor Stilwell's influence had not been merely within a home constituency. He told how often he had heard missionaries about to go for their appointed fields abroad express the hope that they might carry back to their work the earnest enthusiasm for the hearts of men that they had not fail to catch from the many contacts with Doctor Stilwell during his various speaking tours here.

At a testimonial dinner given Oct. 18, the following tribute to Doctor Stilwell was voted by the board of managers of the American Baptist Home Mission Society:

Dr. Herbert F. Stilwell came to the American Baptist Home Mission Society ten years ago, when plans for aggressive evangelistic work long contemplated were approaching their conclusion. His interest in evangelism dated from his youth when from the plow he was called to the gospel ministry. His struggles for an education had so hardened his body and so strengthened the pinions of his Christian faith, that he began his ministry with a burning desire to win souls to a life-long and world-wide devotion to Christ. From the first his services as a pastor and preacher were fruitful. He built well his part of the wall. His patient labors and tireless devotion to his Master brought their spiritual aftermath. He served faithfully several of our strongest churches and wisely taught them the way of the Lord. His interest in the evangelization of the world was unflagging and the spiritual harvests of his pastorates always encouraged his fellow pastors to labor with increasing devotion.

Into the service of the society, first as general evangelist for the central division and two years later as its superintendent of evangelism, he came as one whom the entire denomination honored as a faithful minister of Christ. The decade of his unceasing labors has seen a rising tide of evangelism sweep through our churches, and the conferences he has promoted in every state throughout the area of the Northern Baptist Convention have resulted in such an improved spiritual vision among our pastors and laymen, that their standards and methods of Christian service have been widely revised. Doctor Stilwell's acquaintance among the ministry gave him his immediate and happy entrance into his ever-expanding work and his contacts were so wisely made with our state conventions and city mission organizations, whose leaders have always welcomed him as their fellow worker, that his constructive plans have borne gratifying spiritual fruitage.

During these eventful years the admissions by baptism into our denomination have been greatly increased and it is not too much to believe that there are many thousands of people in fellowship with our churches at the present time who might never have known the joy of the Lord had it not been for the ministry of our beloved brother and friend.

A great company of men in our own and other denominations could probably say, as did Dr. Charles L. Goodell, secretary of the commission of evangelism of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, in a recent address at a Baptist gathering in this city, that the outstanding quality of Doctor Stilwell's life has been that spiritual gentleness that has made him great and which has knit their hearts to him as the heart of Jonathan was knit to the heart of David.

During his years as a pastor, Doctor Stilwell lived at home but during the years of his service with our society he has been seldom at home. These sacrifices attending his new work were, however, borne cheerfully by our superintendent and his devoted wife, who, in the midst of his years of wandering service in the vineyard of our Lord, passed to another room in her Father's house.

The board of managers and officers of the American Baptist Home Mission Society are deeply moved today as we contemplate Doctor Stilwell's retirement from our work, but, like Doctor Morehouse when he reached the goodly age of three score years and ten, he can sing his Song at Seventy, and looks forward with us all to enlarging years of service until he shall hear the summons of the Master to join the faithful company of those whose lives have been devoted to the extension of the kingdom of God.

H. F. STILWELL

Montana News and Notes

By ROBERT W. SHAW

A YEAR ago last summer the little Baptist church building at Manhattan was badly damaged by the earthquake, as were many of the other public buildings in the village. This summer the state convention sent Rev. E. Clutterbuck on the field and for a month he labored to secure funds with which to make the necessary repairs. These have all been made and the church building was reopened Oct. 10. Rev. Thos. Huxley, moderator of the association, presided; the building was filled, not only with people of Manhattan, but representatives of all the churches of the association. Rev. Robert W. Shaw of Bozeman preached the sermon, and Dr. E. R. Curry presented the matter of the finances. These were not much stressed since the people had given so generously in the earlier campaign. Enough was secured so that less than $80 remains unpaid. The total expense was over $650. Rev. Wayne Dalton has come from Iowa, and is working on these fields with zest and earnestness.

New Faces

The October bulletin presents the faces of Rev. G. Elton Harris, recently settled as pastor of First church, Billings; Rev. B. F. Jones, who came to Miles City last summer; and Rev. and Mrs. Wm. Dawson, who have come to the church at Lewistown. Besides these Rev. Edward Derbyshire has come from Ohio to Roundup. There are so few churches in Montana that the pastors are close to each other. We are always sorry when a man feels that he must move, and we are always glad to welcome new faces.

The Associations

In many localities the association has come to be a problem. The question of continuing or abandoning it has been debated frequently. Some are saying that in many places all the service it renders is to give the state workers a chance to be heard. But be that as it may the churches in this great state are organized into associations and during October are holding their meetings. Dr. E. R. Curry, the executive secretary, reports good attendance at all of them. Mrs. Carrie Robinson is speaking in behalf of the Board of Missionary Cooperation.

Other Notes

Rev. H. Van Engelen, pastor of the church at Missoula, gave several addresses at the Idaho convention. He was formerly pastor in that state.

Good word comes from the Timber Creek district, Hardin and Lodge Grass, where there have been baptisms in recent weeks. The churches and pastors go forward hopefully.

The ministers' retreat and evangelistic conference will be held in Billings the middle of November. Pastors of Wyoming and Montana will hold meetings together. Each group will probably hold one session together.

Montana is facing the question of prohibition enforcement. It is proposed to wipe all the liquor laws off the statute books except the one which relates to the sale of liquor to minors. Temperance and church people are putting forth every effort to defeat the proposed amendment.

Rev. Robert W. Shaw is giving a series of sermons on the general subject "Ancient Messages to Modern Churches," using the churches of Revelations as the background. Several members were received at the October communion.

Idaho Convention

By HENRY JACOBS

THE eighteenth annual session of the Idaho State Convention, held with First church of Pocatello, Oct. 11-14, was in many respects the best gathering of Idaho Baptists since the organization of the convention. The attendance at the evening meetings taxed the building to its capacity, while at the day meetings the church was comfortably filled. The spirit of prayer prevailed at every meeting and manifested itself repeatedly in calls for special seasons of prayer. The discussions were entered into heartily, with a frankness and earnestness which revealed a determination to find the right solution to the problems which confronted the denomination.

Ministers' Conference

The ministers' conference, occupying the morning and afternoon of the first day of the convention, was voted the best and most profitable conference of its kind ever held in the state. The addresses were of a high order, deeply spiritual and constructive. In the address of Rev. Henry Van Engelen, Missoula, Mont., the program of evangelism was presented. The discussion which followed showed that the message had gripped the hearts of those present and had aroused in them a passion for soul saving. It was clearly seen that the program of evangelism should not be confined to a sporadic effort once a year but should be the program of the church during the entire year.

The address of Dr. J. D. Springston was a passionate appeal to present the claims of a personal Saviour at every opportunity. The weakness of much present-day preaching is due to the failure to hold up Jesus Christ in a personal way. Dr. Geo. L. White made a plea for higher educational standards for the ministry, declaring that much of the failure among ministers is due to lack of proper training.

Women's Session

The meetings of the Women's Baptist Missionary Society of Idaho were held in the First Methodist church while the ministers conference was in session in the First Baptist church. Idaho Baptists owe much of their progress to the work of their women. The program of the women revealed careful preparation and consecrated effort. Reports from the churches of the state indicated that this work is well organized and fruitful in results. The discussion of goals revealed a determination to achieve greater things during the coming year.

The Convention Proper

The convention proper began Tuesday evening, Oct. 12, with the address of welcome by Judge R. M. Terrell, Pocatello. Following the response by Rev. A. F. Colver, Boise, the work of the Ministers' and Missionaries' Beneficial Board was presented by Dr. Geo. L. White, whose remarks were introductory to the showing of the moving picture, "Soldiers of the Cross," which made an appeal for the support of retired ministers and missionaries.

The daily sessions began with a devotional period conducted by Rev. Geo. L. Barton, Blackfoot, whose messages were deeply spiritual, making fitting preparation for the addresses which followed. In practically every address, evangelism was emphasized, revealing a deep conviction that soul saving should be the chief business of the church.

Acting upon recommendation of the board of managers, the convention voted to amend the articles of incorporation in order to provide for gifts on the annuity plan. At the close of the session, a gift of $1000 was received on the plan from Rev. W. F. R. Hartley, pastor at Rupert. The recommendation for repayment of contingent gift loans was heartily approved. Thirty churches have been recipients of contingent gift loans from the Home Mission Society, gifts ranging from $100 to $2000 and reaching a total sum of $17,000. The churches will be asked to repay the loans in small monthly sums which will become a part of a sinking fund for aiding Idaho Baptist churches in the erection and improvement of their church buildings.

Young People's Rally

The young people's rally was held the last evening of the convention. With characteristic enthusiasm, the young people came with their songs and yells, but these soon gave way to prayer at the opening of the devotional period. The topics presented for consideration revealed a deep insight into the needs of the young people and offered helpful suggestions for meeting those needs. The closing address of the convention was delivered by Dr. M. D. Eubank of Missouri.

Pennsylvania Baptist General Convention

By HENRY W. STRINGER

THE outstanding features of the Pennsylvania state meetings this year were the fine "get together spirit," unmarred by "crash or slash," the spirit sessions full of "pep and purpose," the high level and inspirational eloquence of all of the addresses; the complete carrying out of one of the best, if overcrowded, programs ever arranged for a Pennsylvania convention; the delight in meeting with Pastor O. C. Horsman and his gracious people in the beautiful "White Temple" in which the First church, Erie, worships; and the adoption of a plan to raise $100,000 in Pennsylvania the coming convention year to mark the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the organization of the state mission society and the Twenty-fifth anniversary of the administration of General Secretary C. A. Soars, which will be jointly observed in October, 1927, in the Chestnut Street church, Philadelphia, where the next annual meeting of the convention will be held.

Pastor Ivan Murray Rose, First Church, Philadelphia, was appointed head of the committee on ways and means to carry the project across. The committee includes Ralph L. Mayberry, Williamsport; Max C. Wiant, Harrisburg; Joseph S. Wilds, Philadelphia; Mrs. C. C. Hodgins, Philadelphia; W. H. Minis, Bradford; Walter S. Bauer, Philadelphia; with the secretaries, C. A. Soars, W. G. Russell, F. W. Tomlinson, T. Steward and W. C. Chappell, as officio members.

The convention proper was preceded by the third annual convention of the Pennsylvania B. Y. P. U. held, Oct. 16-17, in First church, Erie, at which the principal speakers were Miss Edna M. Umstot of Chicago; J. Sherman Wallace, for young people's publications of the B. P. S.; and Education Secretary, F. W. Tomlinson. Special stress was laid on the coming national convention of the B. Y. P. U. in Philadelphia in 1927. A large banner was prominently displayed. The women workers' conference on Monday afternoon and evening was crowded with reports, discussions and speeches, a missionary education pageant and a delightful, informal supper over which the president, Mrs. H. C. Hodgins, presided.

Sixtieth Anniversary of Ministers' Union
The sixtieth anniversary of the ministers' union of Pennsylvania was held on Monday evening with Pres. P. C. McKeesport, presiding. Austin Blois, new president of the Eastern theological seminary, Philadelphia, gave the address of the evening on "A Changing World and a Changing Task." Executive Secretary C. A. Soars introduced a group of new ministers in the East and Pastor C. W. MacGeorge of Good City presented the report of the committee on necrology in which tribute was paid to a long list of ministers and men who had died during the year. Those elected were Burton C. Barrett, Erie, City, president; first vice-president, George E. Boddie, Marcus Hook; second vice-president, M. C. Wiant, Harrisburg; secretary and treasurer, H. W. Stringer, Pottsville.

The convention proper opened on Tuesday with Pres. Arthur L. Bates, of United States congressman of Pottsville, in the chair. A stranger to most of the delegates, he soon won the attention by his fine personality, genial manner and fair rulings. He was re-elected president for another year. After a stirring devotional service conducted by S. Brownlee, addresses of welcome were delivered by O. C. Horsman, pastor of the entertaining church and Mayor E. C. Williams of Erie. The convention sermon was preached by Max C. Soars of Harrisburg on "Christ, the Everlasting Image of God."

On the report made last year of the commission of nine appointed in 1924 "to make a study of the form of organization and the methods of work of the Pennsylvania Convention," was forestalled by a statement made by Raymond M. West of Lewisburg, chairman of the commission, to the effect that the committee believed a better and more comprehensive report, making for greater efficiency, could be prepared, and requested the permanent withdrawal of the report of last year. The report, on motion, was withdrawn from further consideration, and the following resolution adopted: "Resolved that the commission of nine be continued and that it be requested to present to the convention at the next annual meeting a suggested form of organization such as will in its judgment enable the convention to function most effectively in carrying on the great and increasing work to which it is committed. And, further, that this convention express itself as eager for the progress of this enterprise and express its unqualified conviction as to the desirability of the same. And, further, that all necessary expenses of the commission be met by the convention."

Lack of space prevents a detailed story of the convention sessions but the "high spots" fairly bristling with good things must include the Bible studies by John Snape, famous pastor of Euclid Avenue church, Cleveland, Ohio, which held the delegates spellbound by their searching truth; the evening addresses of Ivan Murray Rose, Philadelphia, on "What Price Victory?" and of Mrs. Clayton D. Eulette, Chicago, on "Heritage and Horizon;" the stirring speeches on "Week-End Evangelism" by C. H. Stull, Ohio, C. W. Sheriff and John Crosby, in connection with the ninetieth anniversary of the state mission society; by Johnston Myers, Chicago, boosting the Northern Convention at Chicago in 1927, and by W. H. Bowler, in connection with the report of W. G. Russell for the Board of Missionary Cooperation; the introduction of the new secretary of the board of education, F. W. Tomlinson; and the addresses by Miss Edna M. Umstot and Thos. S. Young. The splendid program in connection with the annual meeting of the Woman's Baptist Missionary Society of Pennsylvania, culminated in the introduction of a group of visiting missionaries, followed by the World Wide Guild banquet and the evening pageant, "A Dream with a Mission," splendidly presented by a group of World Wide Guild girls from Williamsport. The laymen's conference and the evening banquet were held in the dining hall of the beautiful new Wayne Park church, where John Snape and William Travers Jerome of New York made ringing speeches. A symposium on Baptist schools in Pennsylvania was conducted at which Pres. Milton G. Evans spoke for Crozer seminary, Bucknell university and Keystone academy; Ralph L. Mayberry for Eastern Theological seminary and Ivan Murray Rose for the Baptist Institute for Christian Workers.

Erie is in the far northwestern corner of the state. This accounted for the reduced registration of delegates and the general exodus at noon on Thursday. Those remaining heard four of the best addresses of the convention from Arthur D. Harris of New York, treasurer of the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board; Fred F. Shields, Bellevue, on "An Eight Cylinder Church;" H. W. Funk, Greenville, on "Royal Ambassadors;" C. H. Sisson of Wilkesburg on "Missionary Cooperation."

Officers Elected.

The music at all of the convention services was in charge of Rufus Sam Raborn, southern gospel singer and evangelist, who caught the heart of the convention with his fine voice, genial personality, inspiring leadership. He received a substantial offering in recognition of his splendid work. By courtesy of the American Baptist Publication Society copies of "The New Baptist Hymnal" were used at the convention with great appreciation.

A number of resolutions were adopted, those opposing the repeal, or modification, of the Volstead act and the candidacy of William S. Vare for senator being adopted with general applause.

The officers elected by the convention, are: President, Arthur L. Bates of Meadville; first vice-president, Mrs. Joseph S. Wilds, Philadelphia; second vice-president, G. M. Walker, Philadelphia; third vice-president, Mrs. W. E. Geil, Doylestown; secretary, Henry W. Stringer, Coatesville; treasurer, Joseph W. Hill, Philadelphia; executive secretary and general secretary of state mission board, C. A. Soars; director, Board of Missionary Cooperation, Wm. G. Russell; general secretary, Board of Education, F. W. Tomlinson. The usual list of associational and special members on the various boards and the full list of officers, secretaries, and directors of the state B. Y. P. U., laymen's council and women's missionary society were elected at the annual meetings of these organizations.

Royal W. Jessup, Pittsburgh, was chosen to preach the convention sermon, with O. S. Roush, Wilkes-Barre, alternate. The Erie convention, in spirit and

To the Trees in Autumn

BY MRS. J. H. CHAPMAN

*In golden heaps they pile the leaves
That formed thy springtime glory,
While bare and brown thy branches stand*

*Like watch guards bald and hoary.
Softly the sunbeams peer between
Where now thy veil is lifted,
And deep blue spaces of the sky
Thy shadowy depths have rifted.*

*Yet though they rob thee of the gift
With which gay youth adorned thee,
Thy greater beauty stands revealed
With strength of age around thee.*

*For lifted upward toward the sky
Thine arms in wide-flung splendor
Make us to long like thee to stand
In storm-born strength and grandeur.*

*Oh soul of mine, that wind that steals
The springtime joys you cherish,
May hold the gift of heaven's strength
That never more shall perish.*

action, was a fine preparation for the 1927 convention to be held in the Chestnut Street church, Philadelphia, which, because of the state mission centennial and important matters to be considered, will doubtless prove the greatest Baptist convention in attendance, interest and importance ever held in the Keystone state.

Iowa State Convention

By JAY A. LAPHAM

THE new building of First church, Waterloo, commanded the admiration of every one. For beauty, good taste, comfort and convenience, it is not surpassed in the state. Pastor W. E. Williamson and his people may thank God for such a temple in which to worship. A hearty welcome was extended to the delegates and visitors. Walnut Street church and Burton Avenue church helped royally in caring for the large attendance, as did others in the city.

Pastors Warren L. Steeves, Waterloo, George E. Dawkins, Muscatine, A. C. Wickenden, Mason City, and H. C. Rice, Grinnell, made the seasons of worship refreshing and uplifting.

Peter C. Wright of New York gave a picture of what the denomination is doing in a "Pageant of Triumph." It was a review of the way in which God has blessed us the past year. Evangelism was treated in a masterly way by J. C. Massee of Boston, who stirred the great audiences to the depths and paved the way for heartier efforts to win souls in many of our churches. G. A. Huntley, medical missionary, and Samuel G. Neil of the Publication Society, added much to the interest. Doctor Massee declared in his conference on evangelism that the way to start the revival for the six months' campaign is to get at it. Methods may vary. Have men confess Christ publicly. Stress genuine conversion.

John Elliott of Philadelphia, who succeeds Doctor Batten, gave a stirring message on religious education. Vacation Bible schools were enthusiastically discussed. The need is great on every hand. Ignorance of the Bible is appalling. Out of a half million people in Chicago 400,000 have had no religious training whatever. All who have had experience in the schools urge pastors and Sunday-school workers to provide for such schools. Teachers can be found if we pray for them sincerely and then look for them. Iowa is making rapid progress in this direction under the competent leadership of Director Victor N. Witter.

C. R. Parker of Cedar Rapids gave a hearty welcome to the new executive secretary, Frank I. Anderson, and to Mrs. Anderson, to whom a bouquet was given in behalf of the convention. Secretary Anderson gave a good report for the board of managers, touching achievements, plans, and programs for the new year. He has been heartily received by our pastors and people. Reports from the field workers, A. W. Caul, A. G. Lagerquist, and H. F. Moore, showed much useful service.

A long and interesting discussion centered around Des Moines university. A detailed report on behalf of the university board was given by A. M. Piper, touching financial conditions. The board asked the convention to share more largely in the financial support of the university. At the laymen's banquet the men voted to raise $50,000 for the current expenses of the university for 1926-27. Matthew Westrate, convention president, urged prompt and united action to this end. During the convention Frank W. Padelford, executive secretary of the Board of Education, visited Des Moines campus in order to see the fine new building for physical education that is nearing completion. Doctor Padelford gave unstinted praise to Dr. Frank E. Foulk whose untiring efforts in the herculean task have been so richly rewarded. Doctor Padelford also met the executive committee of the university board to consider the interests of the institution. The board is facing serious problems that must be met, problems of interest to the whole denomination. The school year has opened with a large body of students and an excellent spirit prevails. The long list of missionaries on the foreign field, on the home field, and in the pastorate of our Baptist churches, is one of which any Christian college might well be proud. And this does not include the thousands of fine Christian men and women in other walks of life.

The young people enjoyed hearing E. Leroy Dakin, Brooklyn, N. Y., whose plain, practical and inspiring addresses called upon them to serve our Lord in every walk of life.

The women's sessions were largely attended, and Miss Ina Burton was heard with interest. Enthusiasm was manifested over the "Golden Trees" and the success attending the plans for

Mabel H. Parsons

AN APPRECIATION BY THE W. A.
B. H. M. S.

FOR twenty-eight years Mabel H. Parsons had served the negro race and the Baptist denomination to the time of her death, Oct. 23, at Wolfville, Nova Scotia, after a few months' illness.

Miss Parsons received her education in Halifax and the Acadia seminary of Wolfville. Later she studied at Columbia university and abroad. For six years she attended the summer school at Chautauqua.

After her graduation, Miss Parsons entered her work under the appointment of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society. In the pioneer days of 1899 she was commissioned as a teacher at Spelman college. As traveling secretary and finally as principal, she served that school for twenty-four years. Three years ago she accepted a call to become dean of Hartshorn Memorial college in Richmond.

Her earnestness and sincerity combined with enthusiasm made her career one of marked success. Her magnetic individuality and stimulating teaching left its mark upon her pupils.

the golden jubilee of the Women's Home Mission Society. Mrs. F. R. Asquit Waterloo, president, met a large number of the women and the W. W. G. girls at the joint banquet. Mrs. S. E. Wilcox is proving a capable leader in raising Iowa's share of the $100,000.

I do not recall another time in fifty years when a note was sounded for hearty working together of all of our Baptist papers. G. Clifford Cress, financial editor, spoke for THE BAPTIST and state papers generally. He showed the function of the state paper and the large place for THE BAPTIST as our national organ.

A resolution was passed endorsing our new enterprise, the Baptist Orphanage and Home for the Aged, with the understanding that a report is to be made annually to the convention.

The attendance was the largest in recent years and every session held the close attention of delegates and visitors. The keynote sounded at Washington, D. C., was welcomed by all and plans for revivals are being made by many pastors and churches.

St. Louis

By W. E. DARROW

BAPTISTS of Missouri were guests at St. Louis Baptists, Oct. 18-22, at the annual meeting of the Missouri Baptist General Association, preceded by meetings of the pastors' conference and the women's missionary union of the state. The total enrolment was 772. Deacons A. W. Payne and his local committee of 100 workers worked faithfully for the success of the meeting. Walter C. Goodson, Macon, was elected moderator. Judge David W. Hill, St. Louis, assistant moderator; Dr. S. E. Ewing, St. Louis, recording and statistical secretary. Resolutions opposing the adoption of proposition No. four, to be voted on Nov. 2, which would nullify all temperance legislation in Missouri, were unanimously adopted. The proposal to change the constitution and by-laws of the association failed of adoption, and was referred to the executive board of the association for further consideration and report. Provision was made for Hardin college and LaGrange college to change their charters, and to become more closely identified with the association. There is a hope on the part of many in the state that Baptist schools in Missouri may have the largest freedom consistent with proper superintendence and direction on the part of Missouri Baptists. A fine spirit of fellowship and good-will prevailed during the association meeting, despite all differences of judgment in regard to particular action. The introductory sermon by Dr. H. Porter of Third church, brought to a vision of Baptist heritage and possibility. Other sermons and addresses were of high character and import. The next annual meeting will be with First church, Kansas City, with J. B. Trotter of Hannibal as the preacher of the annual sermon.

St. Louis Association met with Euclid church, Oct. 14-15. Harold L. Read

Webster Groves preached the introductory sermon and D. F. Risk of Waverly Tower church, the missionary sermon. An important change in the constitution of the association, permitting representation on the part of the churches, especially in respect to the organizations of the churches such as Sunday school, B. Y. P. U. and women's missionary unions, was unanimously adopted. Dr. R. B. Whiteside, Euclid church, was reelected moderator; W. L. Smith, Maplewood, assistant moderator; E. Ewing, clerk-treasurer; W. E. Darby, assistant clerk, and L. E. Gieding, auditor.

Some Changes

F. Breen, formerly pastor of Tabernacle church, is now pastor in Illinois. Watson has retired from the pastorate of Grand Avenue church. Both churches hope to have pastors soon. A. Pegg, for some time assistant pastor of Lower Grove church, is at school for ministerial training. A new pastor has come to Temple church.

New Buildings

West Park people are in their new building, which will be dedicated, Nov. 17. The educational building of Delmar church is in process of erection. The addition to Lafayette Park church is under construction. A chapel for a Baptist interest northwest of our city has been erected. It houses a devoted and earnest people.

Annexation Defeated

The question of the annexation of St. Louis county to make it part of our city was voted on, Sept. 26. It was favored by one by city voters, but defeated by one by county voters. Under the provisions of the state law, it cannot be voted on again for five years. In the meantime, it is hoped that both city and county will see more fully the need of closer relationship.

Ministerial Alliance

At the last meeting of the ministerial alliance, held at Second church, Gerald Smith of the University of Chicago was the guest and speaker. He spoke to the pastors of the city a message of considerable interest and value. T. Ashby Jones, at a recent meeting of our ministers' conference, spoke fully on the subject of race relationships, members of the Negro Baptist ministers' Conference being in attendance.

Indianapolis News Letter

BY FREDERIC ARTHUR HAYWARD

The Signs of the Times

ENTERPRISING gasoline merchant nearby has a sign where the drivers may easily see it. It reads, "In and gas with us awhile." It is a beautiful thing or a correct bit of wit but it has a happy familiarity that catches the eye. When I think of McBee of Bluff Avenue church, I realize he has advertised in some such way. His church has recently published a regular bulletin for the Sunday and it has an easy, happy way of writing. This church (with a question before its future) now has a comfortable building, a steady congregation and the pastor baptized one person, Oct. 24, and five, Oct. 10.

Pastor George C. Chandler of Memorial church is in the midst of meetings. D. K. MacGregor is assisting him. Memorial is a growing church and the spirit is always spiritually directed. A fine parsonage next to the church with the grounds well cared for makes an attractive church center. Chandler has always done this type of work. His ministry in Indiana over many years is a trail of consecrated good sense. Everybody loves him and Mrs. Chandler.

Emerson Avenue church has completed a series of successful meetings with Evangelist and Mrs. A. W. Miller in charge. Several members have been added to the church. This church is without a pastor. In a growing section of the city, with an incomplete building program, it is an opportunity of a lifetime for some consecrated man who would like to invest his life in the things of God. Dr. J. W. Webb, Banker's Trust Building, is chairman of the pulpit committee.

Perhaps the names of other churches looking for pastors should be given at this time. Second church is located in an old residence section of the city; has a good equipment and needs a pastor looking for a real task. Crooked Creek church, "the church in the wildwood," wants to call a leader soon. This church is in the midst of a fine residence district and can easily build a $40,000 church one of these days and pay a pastor a good salary. It needs the constructive work of a year or two first. W. J. Fink, New Augusta, Ind., is chairman of the committee. The Thirty-first Street church, with its fine gymnasium and model educational plant, is without a pastor. The new church building has been delayed but the present one has been redecorated and is a pleasant place to meet God. J. W. Hutchinson, 608 State Life Bldg., is a good man to communicate with regarding this pulpit. Garden church, near the old military park, is without a pastor. Supplies have been obtained but W. T. David, 225 Minerva St., will be glad to receive inquiries. Indianapolis is a good city in which to work and we pray that God may bring into these vacant churches men of vision and deep spirituality.

Evangelism

Evangelism has taken hold of the city. Many of the churches are engaged in meetings or will begin them soon. First church, under the leadership of Dr. F. E. Taylor, has crowded Sunday evening services. It is the leading service of any denomination in the city.

Colorado Letter

BY F. B. PALMER

Pastoral Changes

CHARLES R. STEPHENS has closed his work at Vona and has accepted a call to Steamboat Springs.—W. Harley Smith of Clay Center, Kan., is located at Sterling.—J. R. Pennington of McPherson, Kan., has been called to Monte Vista.—W. C. Pinson has closed his work at Olathe.—George W. Bird, after seven years at Lafayette, will move soon to Lander, Wyo.—James McPhail of Ohio has accepted a call to Bethany church, Colorado Springs.—Emra Coltrin of the Northern Baptist Theological seminary, Chicago, is located at Briggsdale.—J. Walter Field has moved from Colorado Springs to Lamar.—C. L. Flanders closes his work, Nov. 1, at Dolores.—P. E. Mundy closes his work, Nov. 1, at La Junta to accept a pastorate in Canada.—Fred Chambers, a graduate of Dennison, is now university pastor at Boulder.

Ordinations

Emra Coltrin was recently ordained at Briggsdale.—Ernest Klein, a missionary from Assam home on furlough, was ordained in September at Greeley.—W. J. Peterson is to be ordained, Nov. 17, at Vona.

Dedications

The new Boulevard church, worth $75,000, was dedicated Sunday, Oct. 17. Secretary Palmer raised $3000 in the morning to apply on the indebtedness. Dr. C. B. Miller preached the dedicatory sermon in the afternoon, while Dr. W. J. Bingham, a former pastor and a recently returned medical missionary from old Mexico, spoke in the evening. This new church is located at a strategic point in north Denver on Federal Boulevard and was formerly known as the Bethany church. R. O. McCray recently came to this field from Sterling. Revival meetings are now in progress, the pastor being assisted by Dr. C. B. Miller.

Secretary Palmer will dedicate the new edifice at Ordway, Sunday, Nov. 7. This field has made remarkable progress under the pastoral care of James M. Bennett.

Deputation Work

Dr. M. D. Eubank is making a tour of the churches of the Southern and Gunnison Associations for two weeks beginning Nov. 14. Secretaries Palmer and Ripley will visit the churches in the Southeastern Association and a small group in the Southern Association for two weeks beginning Nov. 7. Dr. Bruce E. Jackson, director of field activities, held conferences with a large group of pastors at First church, Pueblo, Nov. 1, and in Denver, Nov. 2. Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher of Oakland, Calif., will be a guest of the pastors of the Rocky Mountain Association in Denver, Nov. 22, and will occupy the pulpit of First church, Colorado Springs, Sunday morning, Nov. 21.

Chicago Letter

BY C. T. HOLMAN
"Wasted Votes"

THE expected has happened and Frank L. Smith's $200,000, received from the Public Utility Corporation which, as chairman of the state commerce commission, he was supposed to regulate, plus the backing of the Anti-Saloon League, has elected him to the United States senate from Illinois. Whether or not he will be seated is another matter. Should he not be seated, Governor Len Small, he of the missing million-dollar interest on state funds, will nominate a substitute. What a pretty mess we are in! Meanwhile, we are being told that more than 100,000 votes were wasted on Hugh S. Magill, independent Republican candidate, a man of unquestioned integrity, recently general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, former state senator with a record as author of progressive legislation and leader in the fight on the corrupt Lorimer combine in former years, and a leading educator. But was a vote for decency in public affairs ever wasted? The only effective protest against the scandalous practices in politics in Illinois is the absolute refusal to condone them. No votes cast and no efforts or sacrifices made for the right are ever "wasted." There are some things that matter more than apparent success. The kingdoms of this world were once offered to One if he would bow down and worship the god of political expediency but he chose rather to "waste" his life upon a cross.

"Say It with Machine Guns"

Such seems to be the slogan of Chicago gangsters. The rival beer-running gangs have been shooting it out again on a magnificent scale. Our sensibilities were a bit shocked a few months ago when a machine gun was used in a Cicero killing. Now it is said that gangland has eighteen such guns; two were in the nest in a second-story window from which four beer barons and an attorney were shot, Oct. 11; another machine gun nest was discovered a bit farther up the street to be used, no doubt, if the first attempt failed to attain its objective. The chief beer baron, who is reported to have made $1,800,000 bootlegging, was killed. The killings occurred almost under the spire of Holy Name cathedral. Indeed the inscription on the corner-stone of the cathedral—

"In the name of Jesus every knee should bow—those that are in heaven and those on earth"— is scarcely decipherable as a result of scars received in the rain of bullets. It is now over twenty days since the killings occurred, but nothing observable on the surface has been done about it. It is generally believed that nothing effective will be done about it until some group shows the courage and resolution necessary to drag out into the clear light and expose the exact nature of the relationships that exist between organized crime, bootlegging, and politics, and to make known the names of the persons, the politicians particularly, who are involved and are the beneficiaries of the system. "It is," as an editorial in the Chicago Daily News said, "incredible that little gangs of savage lawbreakers should find themselves free to go on killing one another as an incident to amassing wealth through traffic in booze and commercialized vice, if they were not able to command protection in high quarters."

Come to Chicago Anyway.

We are hoping that the kind of toys used by our playful gangsters will not keep any good Baptist from coming to Chicago for the Northern Convention next May 31-June 5. We have never heard of a delegate or visitor to a religious convention being shot down in our city; not even when one million attended the eucharistic congress! These gentlemen shoot it out with on another, and we cannot conceive of church members being involved. Johnston Myers, executive secretary of the general committee of arrangements, is pushing forward with characteristic vigor plans for an attendance of 20,000. J. L. Kraft, chairman, and other members of the committee are leaving nothing undone to assure a great and successful convention.

Chicago Losses

I have not attended a meeting of the ministers' conference this fall in which I have not felt keenly the absence of brethren who have recently gone from us. Robert N. VanDoren, who passed away, Aug. 31, almost never missed a meeting until his fatal illness seized him. He was a brother beloved and respected.

Smith Thomas Ford, retiring from the active ministry and taking up residence in Sycamore, N. Y., leaves a gap in our ranks which no one can fill. Both Doctor and Mrs. Ford will be greatly missed in Chicago Baptist gatherings.

Willard R. Jewell, until recently director of religious education for the Executive Council, leaves a position in which he has rendered distinguished service to take up work in a local church which is more in accord with his heart's desire. He has accepted the associate pastorate and the directorship of religious education of Euclid Avenue church, Cleveland, Ohio.

Dedication of Bond Chapel.

The beautiful Joseph Bond chapel of the divinity school of the University of Chicago was dedicated, Oct. 21. The presentation was made in Mrs. Bond's behalf by Prof. Edgar J. Goodspeed. President Mason, President Emeritus Judson, Dean Mathews, Professor Soares and President Hunt of Bucknell university participated in the impressive dedication service. This Gothic chapel dedicated, as the order of service said, "to be a shrine set in the midst of the busy ways of scholars and the passing feet of youth, that it may bear its silent witness to the ever-present God and those realities that are unseen and eternal" is a noble memorial to a great and far-visioned Christian layman.

The chapel has been in use for part of the summer and all of the autumn quarter. The opening exercises of the divinity school were held in the chapel, Oct. 5, with an address by Prof. Edgar J. Goodspeed, closing with a memorable communion service conducted by Prof. Charles W. Gilkey.

The autumn quarter of the extension lectures in religion began Tuesday evening, Nov. 2, and are being given in the chapel. There has been a large registration for these lectures which are open to people of all churches. Dean Mathews and Prof. G. B. Smith discuss "Christian Doctrine in Modern Thought"; Prof. H. L. Willett is conducting a class in "The Old Testament in the Light of Today"; and Prof. W. C. Bower has a class in "Religion and the Education of the American Child."

Notes.

Miss Alice W. S. Brimson has taken over the presidency of the Missionary Training school in a masterly way. Every one speaks in the highest terms of her work in the short time that she has held this office. It was my privilege to attend the inaugural services of the new president and to listen to an admirable address by F. W. Padelford. An unusually large number of ministers and lay delegates from Chicago attended the state convention in Mattoon, one of the best conventions in recent years. The Chicago Church Federation conducted a profitable conference on church publicity, Oct. 25. William H. Lea, editor of Church Management, and Charles L. Stelzle, well-known church publicity expert, were speakers.—The Northern Baptist Theological seminary reports increased enrolment this fall. Stiansen of Tromso, Norway, has been elected Dean of the Norwegian seminary to succeed Dean Gunderson. William Rice, formerly of Wheaton college, William F. Privett and W. E. Loucks have been added to the faculty.—Morris Park church has demonstrated its missionary spirit once more by opening extension work in North Mt. Greenwood. The chapel and furnishings were provided by the Executive Council. Money and an abundance of service contributed by the members of the Morgan Park church. The divinity school of the University of Chicago is providing Daniel L. Eckert, a missionary student in the divinity school, as acting pastor. This helping hand reached out to a new community promises to render a great service.—Perry J. Stackhouse, pastor of the First church, was featured on the editorial page of a Sunday edition of the Chicago Tribune in an article entitled "Drama in the Church." Doctor Stackhouse has a question box in his church and among the questions which have been recently propounded are: "Should a voter who believes in the eighteenth amendment ignore the anti-Volstead referendum now being submitted in Illinois?" "Do you think the church should permit dancing in our community houses?" "Is modern youth going to the devil?"

Clark's Famous Cruises

By CUNARD-ANCHOR LINES new oil burners at rates including hotels, guides, drinks and fees.

62 days, $600 to $1700 MEDITERRANEAN ss "Transylvania" sailing Jan. 29 23rd cruise, including Madeira, Lisbon, Spain (Madrid—Cordova—Granada), Algiers, Tunis, Carthage, Athens, Constantinople, 15 days Palestine and Egypt, Italy the Riviera. Europe stop-overs.

7th Round the World Cruise

Jan. 19; 121 days, $1250 to $2900.

3d Norway—Mediterranean Cruise

July 2; 52 days, $600 to $1300.

FRANK C. CLARK, Times Bldg., N.

Here, There and Everywhere

AT A MEETING of the board of directors of the Minneapolis Baptist Union, Oct. 29, J. Runyan, executive secretary, tendered his resignation to take effect, Dec. 1. He resigns to become associate pastor, First church, St. Louis, Mo. A committee was appointed to draft resolutions expressing appreciation of Mr. Runyan's faithful and efficient work as director of the union.

W. POWELL CLOSED HIS work at Lancaster, Wis., Oct. 3. During the nearly ten years of his Lancaster pastorate, twenty new members were welcomed and $100 was paid on the church debt. He has begun his pastorate at Woodville, Wis.

A. STEPHENS, formerly of Lead, S. D., accepted the call of First church, Bisbee, N. D., beginning his work there, Oct. 1.

CLINTON AVENUE CHURCH, Trenton, N. J., recalled as pastor, Wayland Zwyer of Clarion, Pa., church. Judson Conklin ended his pastorate of forty-one years with Clinton Avenue church when he resigned, Oct. 1, and the church has elected him pastor emeritus. Under his leadership Clinton Avenue has become one of the city's outstanding churches with a membership of 800.

THE CHICAGO BAPTIST MINISTERS' conference held an unusually interesting meeting, Oct. 1, Nov. 1. The special feature was the address by York A. King on evangelism, which was followed by a lively discussion, proposing a great variety of views, but all the utmost harmony of spirit. Evangelism broadly conceived is the dominant theme among the Baptists of Chicago. Wm. Bill of Rochester, Minn., spoke of his unique hospital ministry which he is carrying on in that city. Melville E. Eidson, who has just come to Macomb, Ill., from San Antonio, Tex.; Anthony Lipinski, formerly of Cleveland, but settled within the last two weeks with the First Polish church, Chicago; Elias Revy of East Chicago Hungarian church; E. R. Hyde of Racine, Wis., and other visiting ministers were welcomed. A new president for the current term is Arthur Shulls and the secretary is Daniel Griffin.

A. D. CASE has received a call to the pastorate of Central church, Quincy, Ill.

THE NORWEGIAN BAPTIST of Minnesota held a conference of the executive committee in Minneapolis, declared themselves in full sympathy with the plan of evangelism as adopted by the evangelistic department of the Northern Baptist Convention and recommended it to all of their churches. Their declaration is communicated to Fredmund, chairman, and Harold Griffin, secretary.

CLINTON AVENUE CHURCH, Binghamton, N. Y., celebrated its thirty-fifth anniversary Oct. 1. Organized in 1891 with forty members, 800 are now enrolled; the Bible class is the largest in the city and 933 persons attended the rally day service, Oct. 6. F. N. Darling, pastor, teaches the senior Baraca class which has an active membership of 260.

C. H. LOUCKS WAS ORDAINED at St. Albans, Vt., Oct. 22. W. A. Davison was moderator; W. W. White, clerk. R. E. Snethen, Middlebury, preached the sermon. Other parts were taken by Grace Brooks, C. J. Oxley, and George Russell.

WILLIAM T. DORWARD, who has been occupying the pulpit of First church, Milwaukee, Wis., since the close of the vacation period, has been engaged as stated supply. As a result of his series of sermons on prayer, the mid-week prayer meeting is largely attended.

A. H. NEWMAN, MERCER university, and Daniel Evans, Harvard university, have been appointed professors in the divinity school of the University of Chicago for the fall quarter.

DURING THE FIRST YEAR of M. J. McPike's pastorate at First church, Gooding, Ida., eighteen new members have been received into the church. M. D. Eubank, Kansas City, held a week's meeting with the church during October, giving lectures at evening services on the life of Christ and upon Baptist and world-wide missionary work.

TWENTY PERSONS HAVE registered for the three-year teacher training course at First church, Newark, Ohio, Harvard Griffith, pastor.

DR. SMITH THOMAS FORD, who recently resigned the pastorate of First church, Wheaton, Ill., has been secured as permanent supply of First church, Penn Yan, N. Y. W. H. Wheatley, former pastor of this church, is suffering from a nervous breakdown.

AT A RECENT BUSINESS meeting of First church, Robinson, Ill., it was voted to ask that the pastor, W. B. Morris, be released from his position as field secretary of the Illinois Baptist Sanitarium in order that he might devote his entire time to the church. A new $60,000 building has been dedicated by the church.

WILLIAM CLARK WILKINS was ordained, Oct. 28, by request of the United church, Auburn, Me. Parts were taken by N. G. French, Auburn; C. Harry Atkinson, Livermore Falls; A. D. Paul, Saco; G. F. Finnie, Lewiston; G. H. Hamlen, Lewiston. Mr. Wilkins is a graduate of Tufts college and Newton Theological institution, 1926. He has been pastor of the United church since June.

NORMAN F. HOUGH passed away at his home in Fenton, Mich., at nearly ninety-three years of age. In early manhood he had been deacon of the Hadley, Mich., church. For fifty years prior to his death he served as deacon of the Fenton church, attending services regularly until his ninety-second birthday.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE Bennington, Vt., church staged a mock trial, Oct. 17, before a large audience of young people and adults. Youth was charged with the crimes of irreverence, disrespect, misconduct, disobedience and laziness. In the opinion of the judge, Pastor W. G. Towart, the defense had the best argument although he could not give youth a clear slate. The sentence was a year on probation during which time youth should be responsible to the church, the school and the Y. M. C. A. for good behavior.

MEMORIAL CHURCH, BRIDGEPORT, Conn., unanimously adopted resolutions, Oct. 24, granting a preacher's license to William H. Jones, a member of the church who has served the church for several months during the illness of the pastor, J. W. Grainger. Mr. Jones has been elected assistant pastor and will continue in that position until the pastor's recovery.

C. J. HILL, MCINTOSH, MINN., resigned his position as convention missionary, Oct. 29, when he reached the age of seventy. The convention board granted him November as a vacation with full salary. He has served the denomination for more than thirty years and is one of the veteran colporters of the Publication Society. When he first entered upon his work as colporter, he received a $400 a year salary and paid expenses for himself and his horses. He will continue to serve as supply pastor.

HOME-COMING AT WAYLAND academy, Wisconsin, Oct. 23, was a great success; in the football game against St. Albans academy, Sycamore, Ill., the score mounted to 29-0 in favor of Wayland. R. C. Speer of Tabernacle church, Milwaukee, spoke twice at the academy on Friday, at the banquet on Saturday, and at both services in the Baptist church on Sunday.

FIRST CHURCH, DES MOINES, IOWA, Harold N. Geistweit, pastor, reports large attendance at Sunday services. October was devoted to a series of sermons on "The Message of the Colors." The week is well filled in this church. Monday evenings the young women's class with about 100 members meets; Tuesday is men's day and a fellowship luncheon is held; Tuesday evening, Dr. Frank E. Foulk has charge of the boys' program; Wednesday night is for church worship; Thursday evening is devoted to special events; Friday evening is given to young people's recreation.

C. T. HOLMAN OF THE divinity school of the University of Chicago, spoke at Tabernacle church, Milwaukee, Oct. 24.

LONE STAR, AN INDIAN, held meetings with Immanuel church, Springfield Association, Ill., resulting in forty professions of faith, culminating in thirty-seven baptisms.

SINCE TAKING UP WORK at Mt. Airy, Iowa, last April, Wm. J. Coulston has received forty new members, twenty-five by baptism.

FRANKLIN COLLEGE EXPECTS to have a new science building soon. Of the $200,000 needed, $150,000 has been subscribed and the Indiana Baptist Convention has undertaken to raise the rest. C. M. Dinsmore and S. G. Huntington have been appointed to lead the campaign for funds.

COWLITZ ASSOCIATION, West Washington, met with Centralia church, Oct. 4-6. F. E. Dark was moderator. Evangelism was stressed; plans were made for the organization of laymen's leagues in each church. The association will meet at South Bend

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Immanuel Bldg., Chicago.

"Tonight we have some interesting suggestions for our radio fans. Our radio family is out to win. It believes in the power of printers' ink. It believes in the value of team-work. All our fans who tune in on WCOY show thereby that they have the spirit of youth. And youth finds a way to win.

"This is the time of the year when you ought to have a table somewhere in the vestibule of your church for the display of the current issue of THE BAPTIST, Missions and your local state and city bulletins. Subscribe at once for a bundle of five, ten or twenty-five and sell them at 5 cents per copy. Special rates upon request. Distribute the unused copies each week when you call on the shut-ins, sick and the strangers within your gates. DO IT NOW. Procrastination never shocked any corn or gathered any golden grain.

"The men's class is getting under way again for the winter season. What better investment could you make than to have the secretary of the Sunday school instructed to place an order for as many copies of THE BAPTIST as could be advantageously used in the class for free distribution at the close of the discussion period every Sunday? It would add zest to any Bible class to spend fifteen minutes every week discussing the items under 'The World in Transit.' If you think those items are dry, just start considering the principles involved and you will have a hard time closing on time.

"Henry Alexander is the genial agent for THE BAPTIST in Ninth Street church, Cincinnati, Ohio. He and Pastor John Herget make a fine team. They keep the subscriptions coming along, since the pastor stirs up the pure minds of the brethren and sisters and Brother Alexander collects the shekels and sends them in.

"Mrs. E. Chesney of Adrian, Mich., sends in a list for THE BAPTIST, Missions and the Michigan Baptist. This is the ideal combination. It ought to be the goal in every church. Enlist the maximum number of members to read this minimum list of periodicals. The state bulletin for the local programs and news items, Missions for that intimate presentation of our varied world-wide task in missionary service, and THE BAPTIST for a faithful reflection of the programs, policies and achievements of our world fellowship. How can any Baptist feel that he is treating himself on the square with less than these three sources of information at his disposal?

"Dr. Herbert W. Hines of the Central church, Springfield, Ill., writes: 'Enclosed find $3 for one year's subscription for THE BAPTIST and Missions for the Kings Daughter's Home for Women of our city. This subscription is donated by the young mothers class of our Sunday School.' In every community there are institutions where THE BAPTIST would be more than welcome. It would carry its wholesome contents to hungry hearts that would be fed by it. Have you supplied the institutions in your community? And what finer service can you render than that of tying up a Sunday-school class to such a service 'in His name?' Do it now.

"Memorial gifts for our loved ones who have slipped away! What could be more beautiful? Mrs. Louis J. Goux, of First church, Detroit, Mich., has again sent in annual subscriptions for THE BAPTIST and Missions for twenty-two public libraries in that city. She has been doing this for a number of years. But we did not know until this year that this service was in memory of a loved one. Mrs. Goux concluded her letter: 'This is a memorial gift in memory of my husband, Dr. Louis James Goux, who was born Nov. 2, 1871, and who died Dec. 1, 1919.'

"The office boy will now recite a stanza from one of Edgar A. Guest's poems:
 'There are thousands to tell you it cannot be done;
 There are thousands to prophesy failure;
 There are thousands to point out to you, one by one,
 The dangers that wait to assail you.
 But just buckle in with a bit of a grin;
 Just take off your coat and go to it;
 Just start to sing as you tackle the thing
 That "cannot be done"—and you'll do it.'

"WCOY now signs off. Doer or deadhead? It is up to you. Good night."

next year with B. M. Godwin, Chehalis, as preacher of the annual sermon and Hugh P. Andrews, South Bend, moderator.

IRENE CAIN OSBORN, wife of Rev. Willard Osborn, Bancroft, Iowa, gave a sacred song recital in Tabernacle church, Minneapolis, Oct. 22, before an appreciative audience.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN IMRIE, evangelistic singers of Springfield, Mo., have taken part in successful evangelistic meetings at Sterling, Kan.; Adrian, Mo., and Medicine Lodge, Kan.

FIRST CHURCH, SPOKANE, WASH., John Newton Garst, pastor, held "Pay-up" Sundays, Oct. 24, 31, and Nov. 7, at which time it was hoped to raise indebtedness for current expenses and missions amounting to $1028 and for bills, salaries and missions, $968.

THE TEMPLE, LOGANSPOUT, IND., reports

230 additions during the present pastorate. The church held a series of "good news" meetings, Oct. 17-31. During the week of Oct. 3-9, nine Protestant churches, under the leadership of Dr. Guy Black, Graceland, cooperated in a campaign of personal evangelism with over 200 additions.

ALVA J. BRASTED, who has been divinity student and post chaplain of Fort Sam Houston, Tex., since June, 1922, will sail for Mexico on March 31, to serve two years in the Philippines. Mrs. Brasted and their three children will accompany him. Mr. and Mrs. Brasted still retain their membership in the church of Lisbon, N. D.

NEARLY 500 DELEGATES OF FRAMINGHAM Association, Massachusetts, met at First Street church, Framingham, S. Paul, Mass., Oct. 12, for the fifty-fourth anniversary of the association. The meeting centered around evangelism. Addresses were given by H. A. Spinney, Hugh Heath, Miss E. M. Allport, Denton Neilly, Charles L. Page, and George Huntley of China. Conferences were held by I. W. Williamson, Helen W. Murray and Charles L. Page. Officers are Al C. Comey, Holliston, moderator; George E. Ladd, Southville, clerk; Fred MacLaughlin, Marlboro, treasurer; L. Bragdon, Milford, Bible-school director. New ministers welcomed by S. James C. were A. A. Morrison, Natick; A. Murray, Bellingham; L. W. Blackburn, Ashland; R. F. Palmer, West Medford. The association will meet with Framingham church, E. M. Hand, pastor, next year.

FIRST CHURCH, Pittston, Pa., is in the midst of a revival campaign under the direction of the Crabill evangelistic party. Twenty churches of different denominations joined in the campaign. The tabernacle built for the occasion seats 3000. Pastor Jones is beginning his twelfth year at the church.

PASTOR HERBERT W. HINES of Central church, Springfield, Ill., and about fifty of his members went to Chatham church, N. C., to hold a planning conference. The conference was in the nature of a retreat. Chatham people provided a fried chicken supper.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN association at its session passed a resolution declaring that baptism was instituted by our Lord for churches, that it is not optional but obligatory upon all who accept Christ as a personal Saviour and that only such churches as make baptism by immersion a prerequisite shall receive the hand of fellowship in the association.

SINCE PASTOR J. E. Dillard began work at Southside church, Birmingham, Ala.,

Want Ads

Pentecostalism. Scriptures analyzed and divided. Thirty-page pamphlet ten cents. Wallace Pence, San Miguel, Calif.

Collection Envelopes at 25 per cent discount if ordered this month. Samples furnished. Dufold-Trifold Co., Trenton, N. J.

Chaplain Frank M. Wells, "The Soldier's Evangelist," National Military H. Leavenworth, Kan. Twenty-fifth session open for fall and winter meetings with pastor wanting Bible evangelists. Terms: Entertainment and $50 up according to financial strength of church.

years ago, there have been 3133 additions to the church. The average Sunday-school attendance has increased from 5 to 1211; the grand total of money raised for all purposes is $791,549.

EV. ALFORD ROBERT GEORGE, a leading minister of England, preached at Marcy Avenue church, Brooklyn, Oct. 17.

DURING THE SUMMER the building at Mt. Lebanon, Pa., was redecorated and renovated at a cost of $3000. On a recent Sunday Pastor R. G. Pierson baptized two persons and gave the hand of fellowship to fifteen.

HOMESTEAD, PA., Pastor H. E. Shade presided at prayer meeting by 109 people present.

W. W. H. BARRETT has closed a three-year pastorate with Derry and Latrobe churches in Pennsylvania.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON vesper music hours were held in the First church, Worcester, Mass., and it is hoped this season that the churches may fill the 1400 seats in the auditorium.

FIRST CHURCH, White Plains, N. Y., dedicated a new house with an elaborate program, noted speakers and much enthusiasm. The baptistry was dedicated with a musical service.

FIRST CHURCH, Chicago, held a "rainbow" service in the community building, Oct. 22. At 11:18 at the men's club dinner, to which guests were invited, Mr. Wensel Morava presented motion pictures taken in various parts of the world.

GOOD PROGRESS is reported in the construction of the new building for Immanuel church, Brooklyn.

A RECENT REPORT of the Federal Government, Ottawa university is classed as one of the three schools in Kansas in the A.

FIRST CHURCH, Hutchinson, Kan., maintains a mission on West Second street, the Friendly Cottage Mission, with Mrs. Ryan as superintendent. The mission church dedicated its new building Nov. 7. It will entertain the state convention next year.

BIRNEY HUDSON, associate pastor of Temple church, Los Angeles, has been elected president of the Los Angeles association.

CLIFFORD CRESS, field editor of THE BAPTIST, is spending several weeks on the west coast, where he is being cordially received.

R. P. POPE of Pomona, Calif., now in California, visited his old home in the Middle West a few weeks ago and preached a series of sermons where he was formerly a boy. There were many conversions, and among them a family of eleven.

ACCOUNT of the rapid growth of Los Angeles there are now seventeen districts with at least 10,000 people where no work of any sort is done.

A BUDDHIST TEMPLE has been erected in Los Angeles at a cost of $150,000, and is costing $250,000.

FOURTY-FOUR CONVERTS were baptized at the same ceremony by five preachers following a recent successful evangelistic campaign at the Priceville schoolhouse, Morgan county, Alabama. There were eighty-three additions to this rural church, seventy-eight by baptism.

LAST DECEMBER the Holly Grove church near Wisner, La., G. H. Couch, pastor, organized with ten members. The membership has already increased sevenfold and now numbers seventy-one. Forty additions were the result of a revival.

H. WYSE JONES, who served the Home Mission Society for seven years as general evangelist, and New York state as director of evangelism for seven years, has been appointed by the Home Mission Society and the Pennsylvania State Convention as superintendent of evangelism for Pennsylvania with headquarters at 1710 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

JOSEPH H. BEAVEN, former pastor at Rochester, Minn., took up his work, Oct. 15, as acting assistant pastor of First church, Cleveland, Ohio. After leaving the Rochester church, Mr. and Mrs. Beaven took a trip to England, Egypt and Palestine where Mr. Beaven was taken ill, remaining a patient for a month in the American hospital at Constantinople.

H. SCHUYLER FOSTER, formerly of First church, Cleveland, Ohio, has become pastor at Delaware, Ohio.

E. A. FRIDELL, back from Europe, Egypt, Palestine and Syria, is giving a series of Sunday evening talks at First church, Fresno, Calif.

SECOND CHURCH, Holyoke, Mass., John Sycamore, pastor, reports a bright outlook for the year; 230 people attended the first "church night" for the season. Miss Ellen S. Daniels who graduated from Newton last spring is assistant to the pastor.

KANSAS CITY THEOLOGICAL seminary reports an enrolment of 118, the largest in its history; seventy-six men and forty-two women are registered.

HAROLD L. PROFFE began a Sunday evening series of eight sermons Oct. 3, on the beatitudes, or "The Secret of Happiness," at College Avenue church, Indianapolis, Ind. Dr. Peter C. Wright of New York City, secretary of the Minister's and Missionaries' Benefit Board, preached in the church, Oct. 10.

JEFFERSON AVENUE church Detroit, Mich., A. V. Allen, pastor, cooperated with several other churches of the city in an interdenominational rally, Oct. 11-16. The church also participates in the interdenominational Tuesday evening training courses for church work which are given at five community training schools.

C. A. SALYER, formerly of Three Rivers, Mich., has accepted a call to Montpelier, Ind.

EUCLID AVENUE CHURCH, Cleveland, Ohio, John Snape, pastor, celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary, Oct. 15, with C. Wallace Petty of First church, Pittsburgh, as speaker. The church reports a thriving men's brotherhood class; 156 were in attendance on a recent Sunday.

F. A. MAIER has declined an invitation to become pastor of Immanuel church, Marietta, Ohio.

BRANDON AND MARTINSBURG CHURCHES in

Mt. Vernon Association, Ohio, are pastorless.

THE BOARD OF MANAGERS of the Ohio State Convention will hold its quarterly meeting at Columbus, Nov. 16.

R. H. TRACY of Hubbard, Ohio, was re-elected moderator of the Trumbull Association, Ohio, at its annual meeting. The 1927 session will be held with First church, Youngstown, in May.

NORTH SHORE CHURCH, Chicago, Herbert Whiting Virgin, pastor, carries in its bulletin for Oct. 10 approximately 350 names of paid-up subscribers to the unified budget.

HOMEWOOD CHURCH, Lima, Ohio, Amos Oyer, pastor, was organized May 13, 1925, as the outgrowth of a small Sunday school held in a schoolhouse near Lima. Before the end of the first year, fifty-two persons were added to its membership. Oct. 3, it dedicated its new building, valued at $4000. Pledges and cash contributions practically cover the indebtedness. Dr. Warren Steeves, Waterloo, Iowa; Robert Hughes, Bucyrus; and Dr. J. H. Deere took part in the services.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED at the eighty-third annual meeting of Auglaize Association, Ohio, reaffirm loyalty to the principle of believers' baptism and immersion as a prerequisite to church membership and "repudiate any attempt within the Auglaize Association, the Ohio State Convention or the Northern Baptist Convention to permit baptism to become an optional matter on

(Continued on page 1234)

We Raise Money

For sixteen years the Ward Systems Company has successfully directed dignified fund-raising campaigns of the higher order. During these years it has raised millions of dollars for Colleges, Churches, Hospitals and Charitable Institutions.

Let Us Solve Your Financial Problems

Our latest Church fund-raising campaign plans have been very successful and economical. Write us stating your requirements. All correspondence treated confidentially. Our latest booklet "and confidential analysis blank sent free.

The Ward Systems Co.

28 E. Jackson Blvd., Dept. D., Chicago, Ill.

$100.00 for your Church or Sunday School

12 ADDITIONAL AWARDS $50.00 RANGING DOWN FROM

You can make big money for your church or its organizations by selling our beautiful colored

Christmas Seals at 10c per ass.

Any child can easily sell a dollar's worth. We send 100 ass'ts., easily sold for $10.00, without any advance payment, to any responsible adult in your church. When sold, send us only $5 and put $5 in your church or S. S. treasury. In addition we give a cash award of $100 to the church selling the most before Christmas, and 12 other awards as explained in circular sent with seals. Get started at once. SEND NO MONEY. We trust you till seals are sold.

American Specialty Co. Dept. 468-R Lancaster, Pa.

New Books

The Child in the Temple, by Marion Gérard Gosselink. New York: Doran. $1.50.

Fifty-two four-minute sermons for children of the junior age emphasize the thoughts that are uppermost in the child's mind at each season of the year, including the national holidays, April Fool's day, Children's day, vacation time, Hallowe'en, etc. Each scriptural text makes its practical appeal direct to the heart of the child.

—F. H. FAHRINGER.

The Best Sermons, 1926, by Joseph Fort Newton. New York: Harcourt, Brace and Company. $2.50.

In the selection of the best sermons, as they are euphemistically called, the one making the selection was unhampered by any limitation of race or creed. Here are found sermons by twenty-four white men and by one negro, and all types of creed are represented from Methodist to ethical culture. The sermons, therefore, are typical of the kind of preaching at its best which is heard in the pulpits of America today. A wide range of subjects gives the volume a value above the ordinary book of sermons. From "Christianity and War," by Fosdick, the sermons run the whole gamut of themes usually covered in pulpit ministrations. Edgar Y. Mullins, a theologian, furnishes one of the best sermons on "Faith and Science," while Bishop Brent gives a superlative message on "The Authority of Christ." "Prophets False and True" is the characteristic offering of that militant fundamentalist, J. Gresham Machen. And so they run, each sermon revealing the mind of the preacher and expressing the dominant thought by which he was controlled when the sermon was in course of preparation. Perhaps it is due to the age in which we live, but one misses in most of these sermons the note of appeal which has always been one of the distinct marks of gospel preaching. There is no end of intellectualism, but the passion of a dying man preaching to dying men is largely absent.

—JOHN EARL.

Jesus a Myth, by Georg Brandes. New York: Albert and Charles Boni. $2.

From a critic of such note as Georg Brandes one expects a critic's discrimination, and is disappointed. The writer has committed himself to a theory and writes in the spirit of an indiscriminating partisan. For the sake of maintaining the credit of Mr. Brandes as a reliable theorist, Jesus must not exist. In instance, he finds no authentic evidence to Jesus or to the main facts of the gospel in either Hebrew or Palestinian literature of the times outside of the New Testament. But Rabbi Jos. Klausner of Jerusalem has recently written a scholarly book on "Jesus Nazareth," in which he finds such evidence in ample measure. He devotes forty-four pages to a critical discussion of the external sources, and concludes by enumerating eight determining factors about Jesus and the beginning of Christianity which are imbedded in Jewish history even if we had no New Testament records. The book is recommended to anybody who wants to find the truth in the New Testament which he has put in such a light as to make the look silly, and who needs an ingenious writer to help him.

—U. M. McGUIN.

Chinese Culture and Christianity, by J. Livingston Stewart. New York: Rev. $2.50.

The professor of philosophy and comparative religions in West China University has presented a comprehensive and semi-popular survey of the elements which compose the cultural heritage of China. The work is an admirable endeavor to minister to the need of understanding China, a need so expressed in John Hay's words: "The world's peace rests with China, and whoever understands China socially, politically, economically, religiously, has the key to world politics during the next five centuries."

The only negative criticism which occurs to the reviewer is that the place which Christianity plays in China is largely taken for granted. There is the slightest indication of the origin and development of the Christian movement and its interaction with the other longstanding factors which in their turn have been so fully and carefully treated.

—GEORGE EMERSON HAYN.

Christian Song, by Louis F. Benson. New York: Century. $2.

Doctor Benson has unusual ability as editor and author of hymn books. His quotation from the preface to "Christian Song" is suggestive and luminous: "The editor's aim has been to rid our hymns of the burden of sorrow and disillusion."

A Service for Christmas

Joyful Voices

This service presents the Christmas Story in a most attractive manner. Six tableaux are provided for in the Pageant, but are not necessary if merely a service of song and recitation is desired, though they add greatly to the attractive features and are easily prepared. The music is most charming, though not difficult.

$6.00 a hundred
80 cents a dozen

$3.25 for fifty
Single copy, 7 cents

Send for a copy of our Holiday
Catalog, listing our large line of Books and Supplies for the Holidays.

We have a complete stock of the latest holiday supplies for the church and Sunday School.

Greeting Cards	Services	Dialogues
Candy Boxes	Calendars	Novelties
Holiday Booklets	Testaments	Bibles

The American Baptist Publication Society

1701-1703 Chestnut Street, PHILADELPHIA

16 Ashburton Place, BOSTON 1107 McGee Street, KANSAS CITY
125 N. Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO 439 Burke Building, SEATTLE
313 W. Third Street, LOS ANGELES 223 Church Street, TORONTO

Order from Our Nearest House

SERMONS in ACTION For Young Folks

Henry T. S.

Five-Minute S

VOL. II

"Dr. Seil is a part in five-m sermons for and girls. He

how to hold u

mirror to every-day life. There is action, quick in every talk."—Boston Transcript.

Vol. I. Sermons in Stories Vol. II. Sermons in O

3 Volumes. Each, Cloth, $1.25

F. H. REVELL CO., 158 5th Ave., N.Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., C

the sturdy laws of the everlasting are written into this poem, which als at "The Threshold" of the Psal-and Doctor Howard shows us vivid-hat these accurately reflect the er laws of the human spirit.
le writer builds these ten devotional ons on the first psalm, and carries the great contrasts of that hymn—asted choice, contrasted character, asted conduct, and contrasted des-
The godly on the one hand, fall ith "the law of the spirit of life" ind all forces of the universe with
The ungodly by contrast, oppose aws of God, and inherit "the law of nd death." A stimulating study.
—W. F. HUXFORD.

THE JOHN C. WINSTON COMPANY 120 Winston Bldg., Phila.

Here, There and Everywhere

(Continued from page 1231)

the part of any affiliated church." The resolutions also discourage any church which sets aside the requirement of immersion as a prerequisite to church membership.

FIRST CHURCH, Seattle, Wash., A. M. Bailey, pastor, prints in its bulletin for Oct. 17 answers to a well-rounded questionnaire on giving, taking as authority first, second and third Corinthians.

AT THE RALLY DAY SERVICES of First church, Riverton, Wyo., Arthur Hodgson, pastor, a postcard size kodak with accessories was presented to the superintendent of the Sunday school, C. M. Jack, in appreciation of his seven years' service with the school. During his term of service, Mr. Jack has built up the school to such an extent that Miss Mary E. Balch, director of religious education for Wyoming, declares it the best equipped Baptist Sunday school in the state.

A. P. HOWELLS, formerly pastor at Jacksonville, Ill., is now interim pastor at Gardenia church, Los Angeles, Calif. During his two months there, twenty-one have united with the church, Sunday school attendance has tripled and church finances have taken an upward trend.

CHARLES H. HEIMATH, pastor at First church, Bridgeport, Conn., is concentrating attention during the fall on the Sunday evening services. He plans to make the various major organizations of the church responsible for the services. Oct. 17 the women had charge of the service. Howard M. Freas, medical missionary sent by the church to Banza Manteke, Congo Belge, West Africa, reports that he has performed eight operations recently.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL attendance reached 210 on rally day, Sept. 26, at First church, Oelwein, Iowa, C. E. Hillis, pastor. Thirty are enrolled in the men's class and attendance is increasing.

GREECE CHURCH, Rochester, N. Y., held its first church night, Oct. 13, with a fellowship dinner, a program of three-minute talks by various members of the congregation, old-fashioned songs and games.

IMMANUEL CHURCH, Scranton, Pa., Harold R. Husted, pastor, held its third annual negro program, Oct. 10, with Mrs. Drusella Porter, director of the colored playground and recreational work in the city, in charge. A special program of music was furnished by Miss Alyce Anderson, Philadelphia, Mr. Johnson, New York City, the negro girl scouts, the ladies' sextet and Mrs. Porter.

PROSPECT AVENUE CHURCH, Buffalo, N. Y., G. A. Leichter, pastor, holds a fellowship hour every Sunday at noon in the Sunday-school rooms to which every one who has worshiped at the morning service is invited.

FIRST CHURCH, Carbondale, Ill., J. Scott Ebersole, pastor, celebrated its sixty-fifth anniversary, Oct. 10. Special honor was given to five persons who had been members of the church for over fifty years. The fellowship dinner was attended by 300 people.

SIX MONTHS' special effort in evangelism has been begun by Calvary church, Norristown, Pa., Henry G. Weston Smith, pastor, with stress on the twenty-seven prayer meetings to be held during that time. The church will hold a special two weeks' effort at personal evangelism, Mar. 27-Apr. 10, ending with Palm Sunday. Seventy-five church members attended a recent prayer meeting.

BEULAH BROTHERHOOD, Detroit, has challenged Jefferson Avenue brotherhood, Detroit, to a thirteen weeks' attendance contest Oct. 24-Jan. 9. The losing class will entertain the winners at a chicken dinner.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL attendance at Jefferson Avenue church, Detroit, Mich., A. V. Allen, pastor, reached 584, Oct. 17.

"THE LARGEST CROWD ever gathered for a religious service in Centralia" was the newspaper reporter's verdict on the Sunday evening service held by H. Lee McLendon,

(Continued on page 1235)

Notes on the Lesson for November 21

JOSHUA RENEWING THE COVENANT
Lesson Text: Josh. 24:14-25. Golden Text: Josh. 24:15

Having arrived at a point in the conquest of Canaan where he could stand and take stock, Joshua brought the people face to face with the duty of loyalty to the God of Israel.

God on Our Side

The argument that Joshua used to prompt action on the part of his people to pledge their loyalty to Jehovah was a utilitarian argument. In these days, it would be called the Rotarian argument, namely, boost for them that boost for you. But in the days of Joshua the argument had no distinctive name. It was just the old method of appealing to service and worship on the basis of having been prospered by the one who commanded service and worship. The success which had accompanied the Israelites because they had forsaken the gods of Mesopotamia when Abraham became an emigrant, and because they had followed Moses away from all the Egyptian gods, and because they had far refused to be entangled in the lascivious worship of the gods of the Amorites, and because they believed that the God of Success was on their side, was the dominant motive in their pledge to Joshua to serve Jehovah. Do we blame them? Considering the times in which they lived and their lack of knowledge of the universal God revealed in Jesus Christ, they did what was natural. There are millions of people today in so-called Christian countries who worship God because they believe him to be on their side, and who fear that if they did not worship and serve God, he would turn against them with consequent disaster to their prosperity. The question about all questions during the world war was "Whose side is God on?" No one dares to face the question, "Who is on the Lord's side?"

We on God's Side

When Lincoln was asked if he thought God was on the side of the North, he replied that he was more anxious always to be sure that the North was on God's side. No covenant is worth much if it is not based upon the recognition of truth that God is sovereign, that sovereignty rests upon holy love, that his holy love never errs. That the side all men ought to be on, whether it brings prosperity or adversity. And not the heart of Christianity just that men take the side which God revealed in Jesus Christ as his side—side of spirit as against form, of integrity as against pride, of mercy as against judgment, of love as against selfishness. Who is on the Lord's side?

A GRATIFYING INCOME

Missionary Annuities have been attractive to hundreds of Baptists. Constant inquiries are made concerning them. Have you the facts?

When making wills please remember the corporate names of your national missionary organizations:

The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M. D., Home Secretary (re annuities); George B. Huntington, Treasurer, (re wills), 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society, Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th Street, New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society, George L. Estabrook, Treasurer, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention, E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, Frank W. Padelord, D.D., Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

Annuities

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these Single and Double Contracts will be sent to you on request.

"Where your heart is, there should your treasure go."

WINSTON-INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOLARS' BIBLES

SELF-PRONOUNCING
Contain specially prepared Helps to Bible Study and many Attractive Illustrations suitable for children.

Send for Illustrated Catalog
THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO., Publishers
American Bible Headquarters
120 Winston Building Philadelphia

FOR OTHERS

Put THE BAPTIST into your Public Library. Do it Today.

Annual Subscription, $2.50

THE BAPTIST

2320 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Here, There and Everywhere

(Continued from page 1234)

tor of First church, Centralia, Ill., Oct. in the largest down-town theater of the city. His subject was, "Is Mussolini to Be the Coming Anti-Christ?"

FRANK LINDEN, Chicago, was the principal speaker at the sixth annual fellowship dinner of the twin city Swedish Brotherhood held, Oct. 18, at Bethel institute. Others on the program were Albin Tiner, Topeka; Dr. J. C. Oster and Eric Lindholm, St. Paul; N. W. Nelson, Minneapolis; G. Arvid Hagstrom, president, Bethel institute; Alvin S. Pearson, independent candidate for congress; and Dr. Frank Peterson. A. J. Wingblade, president of the brotherhood, presided.

CALVARY CHURCH, Davenport, Iowa, celebrated rally day and the first-anniversary of E. Codd's pastorate there, Oct. 3, with 100 people present during the day. At the Thursday evening prayer meeting following rally day 110 were present. The time covenant meeting has been repeated and all business matters are brought before the church for approval or rejection.

ALBERT H. GAGE, pastor of First church, Brattleboro, Vt., was one of the principal speakers at the regional evangelistic conference held in New York City. Henry E. Tralle declares that Doctor Gage is "the practicing, heralding prophet of the new evangelism that embodies all the values of the old, and he ought to be used in every community in our land."

BERNARD C. CLAUSEN, First church, Syracuse, N. Y., advises college students to "eager service in definite church work" at the college course if they would reap the greatest benefit.

WOMING AND MONTANA will hold their evangelistic conference in Billings, Mont., Oct. 16-17. The Billings church will furnish lodging and breakfast for all who attend the conference. George Elton Harris has been pastor of the church for a little over a month. During this time there have been additions to the church every day while the growing congregation necessitated the placing of extra seats in the auditorium. The church has decided to proceed with work on its educational unit.

WILLIAM J. DAY began the fourteenth year of his pastorate at First church, Winthrop, Mass., Oct. 3.

SUNDAY SERVICES will be conducted on weekdays from 12:20 to 12:50 during the fall and winter at Calvary church, Lawrence, Mass., by Arthur T. Fowler, pastor. "The Method of the Master."

BETH CHURCH was host at the 137th annual meeting of the Hartford Baptist Association, Connecticut. J. C. Worden, pastor, gave the address of welcome, and Wm. Ross was moderator. A mission-institute and young people's banquet were features of the program.

BETH CHURCH, Sacramento, Calif., Bryn Williams, pastor, hopes to raise $10,000 between Oct. 1 and Mar. 1 so that building operations may begin Mar. 1. From

When writing to advertisers please mention "The Baptist".

Oct. 24 the church bulletin will publish weekly the contributions made and the amount still to be raised.

FIRST SWEDISH BAPTIST CHURCH, Minneapolis, Minn., Eric Carlson, pastor, conducted a Bible conference Oct. 26-Oct. 31 with Dr. Olof Hedeon and V. E. Hedberg of Chicago as speakers. Sessions were held in the afternoons and evenings each day, with three sessions on Sunday.

PRES. ERDMANN SMITH, Ottawa university, attended the Colorado State Baptist Convention at Pueblo, Oct. 19-21.

MISS GENEVIEVE SHARP, Ottawa university, '25, is now in the Chicago Training School for Women, preparing for missionary work. She will also take work in the University of Chicago with a view to securing her A.M. before going abroad.

The Saving Sense

Never look for a broad mind in a big head—alias, swelled.

Don't pray cream, and live skim-milk. —Spurgeon.

Fashionable dogs who are taken out for an airing on Piccadilly or Rotten Row in London now have dainty little handkerchiefs tucked in their collars. Their mistresses argue that if men and women carry handkerchiefs, why shouldn't Hector or Rover?—The Outlook. At that we've known dogs to carry worse things than handkerchiefs.

FOR SALE

One Ford car, with a piston ring, Two rear wheels and one front spring. Has no fender, seat, or plank; Burns lots of gas and hard to crank. Carburetor busted half-way through, Engine missing—hits on two. Three years old—four in the spring. Has shock absorbers and everything. Radiator busted, sure does leak. Differential dry, you can hear it squeak. Ten spokes missing, front all bent; Tires all blown out, not worth a cent, Has lots of speed, runs like a moose; Burns either gas or any old juice. Tires all off, been run on the rim, But it's all a dandy Ford for the shape it's in!

—Indian Witness.

A school teacher relates that she was giving her small pupils a lesson on birds, and after telling about the hatching of the eggs, the care of the mother bird and the first lessons in flying, she said: "Now, children, I am the mother bird and you are the little birds nestled in your cozy nest. I want you all to spread your wings and fly away."

Each child, waving arms to the music she beat, skipped to the dressing room, with the exception of one little fellow who remained motionless in his seat. Turning to him she said: "Donald, why didn't you fly away with all the other little birds?"

"'Cause," came the prompt and unexpected reply, "'Cause I was a bad egg."—Boston Transcript.

Rastus and his wife, driving to town in their decrepit flivver, had parked it casually in the first available space. While they were away, a traffic officer attached a number tag to the vehicle for parking in a prohibited zone. On their return, Rastus noticed the tag and was for throwing it into the street, but Rebecca restrained him. "Sabe de ticket, Honey," she said. "Dat number might win something'."—Life.

"Mother," said a little girl, "why can't the candy shop man and the toy shop man call for orders every morning the same as the butcher and grocer do?"

CHRISTMAS MUSIC FREE

FREE SAMPLES TO SUPT. PASTOR or COM.

Sample of 6 Services, 66 pages, Music, etc., free to Pastors, Superintendents, and Committees.

Not Free Samples, but sent for examination, are the following new publications:

"Christmas in Cherryland," 35 cents, $3.60 the dozen. A charming cantata, Japanese in part with snap and go in words and music.

"A Trip to Santa Claus Land," 35 cents, $3.60 the dozen. Very easy, for younger folk.

"The Word Fulfilled," Dr. Geibel's story cantata. For Sunday service if desired. 30 cents each, $3.00 the dozen.

These new publications not sent for examination:

Christmas Helper, No. 14—25 cents.

More than 100 selections in one book—6 songs included.

Christmas Specials, No. 3—25 cents.

5 Special Numbers in one book.

"Come Any Time," A play, 25 cents. They come all at once to spend Christmas. Very funny.

HALL-MACK CO., 21st & Arch Sts., Phila., Pa.
National Music Co., Western Selling Agts., Chicago, Ill.

PIPE ORGANS

of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.

Electric Organ blowing out-lets for organs of any make.

Write, stating which catalog is desired.

Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO., HILLSBORO, OHIO

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS
SWEETER, MORE DUR-ABLE, LOWER PRICE.
OUR FREE CATALOGUE
TELLS WHY.

Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Dept. 12, Cincinnati, O.

"Pews, altars and pulpits from the largest exclusive church furniture factory. Write for catalog and particulars. Manitowoc Church Furniture Company, Waukesha, Wisconsin."

GET Russell Conwell's FIELDS of GLORY

Who does not know Conwell's "Acres of Diamonds"? "Here are ten of his great sermons, heart-moving, soul-stirring messages with a wealth of illustration, and a spiritual fervor seldom found in the printed page."—Christian Index. $1.25
F. H. REVELL CO., 158 Fifth Ave., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Recent Books of Outstanding Worth

Growing a Soul

By Matthew T. Andrews

Fourteen sermons that throb with the convictions and purposes that gave them birth. They are more than illustrations of method, they are types of effective address and appeal. Cloth, $1.25 net

The Brightening Cloud

By Russell H. Conwell

A remarkably interesting study in the Ninth Chapter of John. Charmingly written in Doctor Conwell's most pleasing style. Cloth, $1.00 net

Seams of Glory

By Philip Wendell Crannell

A series of thirty-four practical religious essays. Cloth, $1.50 net

Forest Friends

By H. R. Evans

Refreshing tales from the North Woods. Vivid, intimate nature stories of Animals, Birds, and Fish from the valleys of the Pacific Coast by one who has spent six years among the scenes of which he writes. Fifteen full-page illustrations from original photographs. A splendid Gift-book for young or old. Cloth, $1.50 net

Baptist City Planning

By Charles Hatch Sears

The outcome of a study undertaken by a committee of one hundred and fifty Baptists. Cloth, $1.00 net

Bible Dramas in the Pulpit

By Perry J. Stackhouse

Here are eleven drama sermons on familiar themes that have had the test of actual use. Cloth, $1.25 net

Bible Object Book

By C. Herbert Woolston

Illustrated. Approach to mind and heart through eye-gate is the idea Doctor Woolston emphasizes in these pages. Some well-known principles of magic and mechanics have been made preachers of morals and religion. Cloth, $1.75 net

Pillars of Gold

By Mitchell Bronk

A collection of charming sketches of Christian people, places and experiences. Here is variety—from the home of Francis of Assisi to Jacob Stainer and his violins; from an oxcart on the way to a New England Meeting-house to Rheims Cathedral. Cloth, $1.50 net

The Playtime Guide Book

By Frederic K. Brown

The author aims to present a practical graded course in play such as will help church workers to forestall the evils of wrong methods of recreation and capture the play spirit for God. Nearly one hundred games are described. Cloth, $1.50 net

Church Work with Intermediates (A JUDSON TRAINING MANUAL)

By Elizabeth M. Finn

First is presented a study of the intermediate, then is discussed the construction and presentation of a program of instruction, the pupils' own participation, organized play, worship plans and programs, adult leadership, and finally the organization of the intermediate department. Cloth, $1.25 net

FOR MISSION STUDY

All Missionary Books for Study or Reading Courses, whether published by the Society or not, can be supplied promptly by our nearest branch.
Send for Circular

The Second Century of Baptist Foreign Missions

By William B. Lippard

A careful, comprehensive survey of the development of Baptist foreign missions from 1914 to 1925. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 60 cents

Early Baptist Missionaries and Pioneers. (Volume I)

By W. S. Stewart

Adoniram Judson and Ann Hasseltine, Jonathan M. Peck and Isaac McCoy, and others who wrought abroad and on the American frontier, are shown in narratives of striking appeal. Cloth, $1.50

Early Baptist Missionaries and Pioneers. (Volume II)

By W. S. Stewart

Brief accounts of men and women who have been prominent in mission work at home and abroad, but whose stories must often be sought out with difficulty. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.50

The Baptist Family in Foreign Mission Fields

By Nellie G. Prescott

Through a series of letters the author sets forth the different phases of mission work, such as evangelism, medical missions, industrial missions. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 60 cents

With Christ in Assam

By E. Elizabeth Vickland

Miss Vickland's chapters will enable the reader to gain a more penetrating understanding of the spirit and the results of that which Christian missions are seeking to bring to pass among India's masses. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.50

God's Dynamite; or, Changing a World by Prayer

By P. H. J. Lerrigo

The story of one mission station in each of eight countries is told, showing the part of faith's prayer in leading to its occupation and development. Illustrated. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents

MISS APLEGARTH'S POPULAR BOOKS

Merry-Go-Round

A pilgrim's progress through mission fields around the world is contained in this book of stories, programs for special occasions, activity outlines, memory hymns and Bible verses, handwork, posters, games. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.50 net

A China Shepherdess

Twenty-two Missionary Stories,
Ready to Tell

The work and results of a missionary school in an inland Chinese town will be understood and appreciated by those who read or hear these chapters. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.75 net

Friday's Footprints

Missionary stories, told by a master of storytelling who has so coordinated her work that to read her chapters is to take a personally conducted tour around the world of missionary interest. Cloth, $1.50 net

The home office and six branches of your Publication Society are well equipped to supply all of your needs, not only for Books, Bibles, and Testaments, but for everything required in the Church and Sunday School. Send for Catalogs.

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY

1701-1703 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia

16 Ashburton Place, Boston
125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

313 W. Third St., Los Angeles
1107 McGee St., Kansas City, Mo.

439 Burke Bldg., Seattle
223 Church St., Toronto

ORDER FROM OUR NEAREST HOUSE

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the North American Baptist Convention

Show your Thanks by Giving—Observe Golden Rule Sunday, December 5

Folks, Facts and Opinion

The earthquake in Armenia devastated Leninakan, Erivan and thirty-seven towns in that region. A blizzard following caught 50,000 people homeless, with 9000 scantily clad orphans huddled in tents. In one village 105 blind and crippled persons were buried alive by the earthquake.

One of the most fearful indictments of our civilization appeared in an editorial in the Baptist and Reflector for Oct. 28. If Editor John D. Freeman would change it slightly so as to eliminate its sectional reference and would print it in leaflet form for wide distribution, he would be rendering a public service. He uses black ink for the picture, but that is the only appropriate color.

Thanks are due to the American Israelite for calling attention to "the fact that of all the orthodox Christian sects, the Lutherans and the Baptists are the strongest advocates of the absolute severance of church and state." Whether in view of the history of the Lutheran state churches in Europe, the Lutherans would join the Baptists in appreciation of this friendly Jewish compliment, may be a matter for further inquiry.

English Congregationalists are moving with rather unusual radicalism against war. At Wyclif church, which at considerable sacrifice maintained a pacifist attitude throughout the world war, 100 ministers enlisted in a "crusade" against war, to the following sentiments voiced by Rev. Stanley Russell who supported the war: "We have come to believe that there is no allegiance that can be entertained the moment it conflicts with the Lord we serve and the gospel we preach." And 116 ministers, after communion, signed an out-and-out covenant of refusal to participate in another war.

The European tour of President Mullins of the Baptist World Alliance closed in a blaze of enthusiasm. After speaking to crowds in several of the continental countries the party in addition to President Mullins, composed of Messrs. Gill, Lewis, Rushbrooke, Franklin, Aubrey and Major Town, returned to England where at Bloomsbury, Oct. 21, representatives of several general organizations of the British Baptists were assembled for conference and promotional activity. Addresses from President Mullins and a number of the most noted British Baptists, including Lloyd George, emphasized anew the growth, principles, tasks and problems of the denomination. A general impression which the party has received from the tour is that the Baptist cause is distinctly advancing in Europe. It is significant that the growth

Scotch Te Deum

BY WILLIAM KETHE, 1560

*ALL people that on earth do well,
Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice;
Him serve with mirth, his praise forth tell,
Come ye before him and rejoice.*

*The Lord ye know is God indeed,
Without our aid he did us make;
We are his flock, he doth us feed,
And for his sheep he doth us take.*

*O enter then his gates of praise,
Approach with joy his courts unto;
Praise, laud and bless his name always,
For it is seemly so to do.*

*For why? The Lord our God is good,
His mercy is forever sure;
His truth at all times firmly stood
And shall from age to age endure.*

—From Macmillan's "The World's Great Religious Poetry."

of the denomination is most conspicuous in that country in which Baptists are subject to the most bitter persecution, namely, Roumania.

IN response to many requests THE BAPTIST begins this week an experiment devoting some space in "Folks, Facts, and Opinion" to a kind of Who's Who.

No contributions are read with more interest than those of Robert Gordon, pastor of the First Baptist church of Fond du Lac, Wis. This week his offering on "Paths to the Place of Praise" is in true thanksgiving mood heightened by a fine note of reasonable optimism. During the past summer Dr. Winfred Ernest Garrison, dean of the Divinity School of the Disciples of Christ, which is affiliated with the University of Chicago, left the beaten paths of tourist travel in Europe, and sought the less frequented ways. His valuable observations have appeared in a series of six articles published in THE BAPTIST. The article in this issue is the final one of the series. Dr. Thomas Hull, state biologist, physician, layman of Central church, Springfield, Ill., writes out of a rich professional as well as a deep Christian experience on "Malnutrition." Other outstanding articles of interest in this number are Joe Taylor's letter from West China, and Dr. Watson's interpretation of things going on in and around Boston.

Pres. F. J. White of Shanghai Baptist college reports an enrolment for the current year of 435 in the college and 310 in the middle school. This compares with 400 in the college and 265 in the middle school, a total gain of 12 per cent. Notwithstanding the unsettled condition throughout China, there appears to be no diminution in the popularity of this Baptist institution, in the maintenance of which northern and southern Baptists in the United States cooperate.

Rev. Arthur Driver Gee of Pittsburgh, Pa., contributes to the vocabulary the word, "pulpitudes." The occasion was the installation of a colored minister. The speaker was thinking of the attitude of mind toward his hearers which the preacher has when he stands in the pulpit. These "pulpitudes" as named by Mr. Gee are preaching "at the people," criticizing or scolding them; "to the people, to teach, console, enlighten and edify," "for the people," as when in the evangelistic sermon he appeals invitingly to their name; and "through the people seeking through their character and enlistment to make them witnesses of Christ to the world. He would make use of all of these "pulpitudes."

Is the tariff a moral issue? THE Christian World raises the question again and says, "We have always insisted that economic freedom (free trade) is a moral even more than it is an economic issue." And it is moved to this reiteration by the recent manifesto of a group of international bankers who say, "There can be no recovery in Europe till politicians in all territories, old and new, realize that trade is not war, but a process of exchange." How far has the world gone since the not distant past when business men generally spoke of trade as war and discussed calmly the "conquest" of the world's markets? In the way, how far has such language ceased to be spoken by business men?

Prof. Jerome Davis of Yale headed a commission of prominent Americans who visited Russia a few months ago on a tour of observation. Having returned he communicates some findings to the press. Facts reported are about as the public generally knows them. But the group is unanimous in recommending that the government of the United States enter into conference with the soviet government with a view to recognition. Mr. Davis recalls the fact that President Coolidge in 1923 offered to reach an agreement with the soviet government that the soviet authorities immediately accepted his offer and asked for a conference which up to this time our government has refused.

Among noteworthy achievements in Baptist journalism mention is due the Baptist Messenger of Oklahoma for its jubilee convention number issued Oct. It has forty-eight pages, well printed on good paper and profusely illustrated. It ought to be, and doubtless is, a source of pride to the Baptists of Oklahoma.

A request for a "brief audience to a small official delegation of American Baptists on behalf of their Baptist brethren in Roumania who suffer persecution and religious disability in that country," has been refused by Queen Marie, it is announced by Dr. George W. McDaniel, president of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Armenian and Russian refugees, numbering 1,500,000, are reported to be in exile from their native countries and scattered among twenty-six countries. Of this number 250,000 are without employment. The League of Nations has a commission at work trying to devise plans for identifying them, ascertaining their number and situation, and by a tax on the self-supporting refugees to provide a revolving fund to take care of the less fortunate.

A Baptist exchange appeals to editors of religious papers to join in a crusade against the present fashion of short skirts for women. Let us listen and react. Why is the visibility of a woman's skirt worse than of her wrist; of her arm worse than of her elbow; of either the color of her face? Why are knickers worse than skirts of whatsoever length? Why can a woman be modest and virtuous, otherwise, and can show the kind of woman she is, however amply or modestly clad. What is the matter with a man who finds himself disturbed over these particulars?

An international committee of 1000 members is being organized to be composed of Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, Buddhists, Confucians, Shintoists, Hindus, Parsees, Jains and others, to bring together adherents of the world's living religions to discuss questions of international justice and goodwill, to make known the content of each religion relating to these questions and to compare the ideals of human brotherhood and world peace. Dean Shailer Mathews is chairman of the committee preliminary organization.

A debate between Clarence Darrow and Clinton Wunder, pastor of the Baptist Temple, Rochester, N. Y., was held at the Temple, Friday evening, Oct. 30. The subject was, "Has Life a Purpose?" Wunder took the affirmative side, Darrow the negative. By a vote of three to three the judges gave the victory to Mr. Darrow. Thus one of the human problems was at last settled. But local ministers continued the discussion on the following Sunday evening. Some of them scored Mr. Wunder for consenting to hold the debate in his church. Nobody seems to have checked up on the gains accruing to our knowledge from the series of discussions.

Trustees of Brookline, Mass., public library refused to accept as a gift a copy of Professor Barnes' book, "The Genesis of the World War." That such library trustees exist is hardly a novel discovery, but that they exist in Brookline, Mass.!

Plainfield, N. J., has a war memorial. On it are inscribed the words of Isaiah: "They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." A local military organization protested against such pacifism. The reader, according to his mood, is permitted in view of such patriotic exaltation of militarism to indulge in laughter, disgust or alarm.

A revolution is said to be in progress in church buildings and in plans for church work in Brooklyn and Manhattan. The tendency is for the little congregational plant to give way to great metropolitan buildings and community projects of service. The value of congregational properties worth $200,000,000 are affected by the tendency. The smaller congregations are alarmed and a conference is under way to consider the situation. Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Congregationalists and Baptists are considering the practicability and the problems of the new policy.

Mothers' pensions as administered in Canada have a provision that the continuation of a pension depends upon the maintenance of satisfactory home conditions. Administrators hold a sort of friendly guardianship over recipients. Results reported are that "homes are kept together and improved, and children are kept in school until they have something beyond the bare minimum enforced by law. Moreover, when they do leave school, it is not a matter of necessity for them to take the first job which offers, regardless of its possibilities. On the contrary, it is often possible to place them at work suited to their tastes and capacities, in which they have a good prospect of advancement."

Index

	Page
FOLKS, FACTS AND OPINION.....	1238
EDITORIAL	1241
THE WORLD IN TRANSIT.....	1243
PATHS TO THE PLACE OF PRAISE, BY ROBERT GORDON.....	1244
MALNUTRITION, BY THOMAS G. HULL	1245
THE POOR'S LUNCH, BY HENRY STRONG HUNTINGTON	1246
ON THE TRAILS OF THE PROTESTANT MARTYRS, BY WINFRED ERNEST GARRISON	1247
THE DEVOTIONAL LIFE — THE GRACE OF APPRECIATION, BY GEORGE H. MORRISON.....	1249
CHIMNEY CORNER	1250
BOYS AND GIRLS	1251
YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE KING- DOM	1252
CHURCHES AT WORK	1253
AMONG OURSELVES	1254
NEW BOOKS	1264
NOTES ON THE LESSON.....	1265

THE DINING HALL

Thanksgiving At Pacific Palisades

"God's Garden by the Sea"

Folks at Pacific Palisades can't get lonesome unless they want to. Community celebrations are held frequently. One of the most inspirational of these good fellowship gatherings in the annual Thanksgiving service, when the entire community, like one great family, unites to thank God for His many goodnesses and for His supreme generosity in giving them such a year round Garden of Eden as Pacific Palisades—a resort, educational and residential community, founded on Santa Monica Bay in Southern California by Methodism for Christians of all denominations.

To secure a copy of our new folder, "Winter at Pacific Palisades", simply tear out this ad, write your name and address on it, and mail to the Pacific Palisades Association, Pacific Palisades, California.

Those persons who find decisive results on prohibition in the elections are invited to consider Chicago. Mr. Brennan, uncompromisingly and actively wet, running for senator, carried the city by 100,000 majority. Mr. Yates, uncompromisingly, actively and notably dry, running for congressman-at-large, received a majority in Chicago of more than 100,000.

Are the universities saturated with liquor? Here is the latest answer. The University of Illinois has just expelled four students for drinking. Dean Clark, commenting, says that there is not as much drinking among the students as before prohibition. President Mason of the University of Chicago says there is little drinking among students—"decidedly less drinking now among college men and women than before prohibition."

Race adjustment proceeds here and there in places and ways to a large extent unobserved. For instance, it is in the news that Rev. H. H. Proctor, a negro and the son of slave parents, was elected moderator of the New York Association of Congregational Churches at its last meeting by the unanimous vote of 400 delegates, mostly white.

Educational economy is coming up for air. Miscellaneous herds of students have been rushing into the colleges and universities, drawn by every lure from the love of learning to the love of pleasure. In the rush the university has lost its bearings if not its soul. But a new reckoning is at hand. There is a tendency to restore scholarship to the school and to eliminate the slothful, the defective and the mercenary, and to organize education for life.

The story of First Baptist church, Phoenix, Ariz., under the leadership of Pastor Richard E. Day, reads like romance. Among the most recent events affecting its work is the opening through Phoenix of a new branch of the Southern Pacific railroad, and "Phoenix has the dash of Los Angeles." Coincidentally or consequently First church held a "main-line service" with a sermon by the pastor to an audience that packed the house to the doors. The annual church dinner was held in the local armory with 1000 at the tables. Three hundred new members were added last year.

Within half a century Denmark has been transformed from a nation of peasant farmers to a nation of prosperous independent freeholders. The Ohio Farmer tells how it was done: "First, of course, came the breaking up of the large estates and the settlement of these on easy terms by the farmers of the nation. Then under the leadership of a far-seeing, patriotic leader, community high schools were established. Here for fifty years has been the nucleus of Danish life and agriculture. Here is the basis of the widespread cooperation in Denmark. Here all the social and religious life of the community centers. The educational system of Denmark is the key to the transformation that has taken place."

Baptist progress has been remarkable in New Mexico. In 1900, there were three associations, twenty-four churches, thirteen ministers, thirty-four baptisms and 882 members; in 1925, ten associations, 175 churches, 128 ministers, 1128 baptisms and 11,469 members.

Texas Baptists may scan with pride the convention number of the Baptist Standard of that state. It comes with forty-eight pages of live matter, illustrated with a host of cuts, and on better paper than usual. Incidentally, so multitudinous are Texas Baptists that a table of their contributions fills more than five pages, printed in six-point type.

Here is a gem from the Alabama Baptist which shines best in its own light without any additional setting: "So, trust your own soul. After you have read all the law of Moses and have studied all the sayings of Jesus, the soul is still susceptible of a continuous revelation of the divine. The law was a pedagogue to lead to the Christ, and the teaching of the Galilean is both amplified and enriched by the Holy Spirit whose office it is to make known truth to the soul."

G. Clifford Cress, field editor of THE BAPTIST, is doing a fine bit of kingdom service in California in conjunction with P. A. McDiarmid, one of our missionaries from the Congo, and with C. W. Brinstad, executive secretary of the Northern California Convention. Under the direction of Doctor Brinstad a series of missionary conferences are being held at such points in Northern California as are accessible to all the churches in certain districts. The following telegram from J. Whitcomb Brouger, pastor of First church, Oakland, Calif., and president of the Northern Baptist Convention, speaks for itself. "Fine crowd of San Francisco Bay Baptist churches heard Cress and McDiarmid last night. (Nov. 7) All were gripped and inspired, and went home enthusiastic for missionary program and for THE BAPTIST. Their addresses are really great. Never heard any better. They are rendering a great service. Boost them, they are worth hearing."

Southern Baptists having cast about for a man of outstanding fitness for the position of director for the southern Baptist cooperative work, have settled upon Dr. A. J. Barton, and he has accepted. He is known throughout the South and will be welcomed everywhere.

The first meeting of the new Australian Baptist Union have been held at Sydney. All of the denominational interests and activities are provided for in the organization. The union stands for spiritual rather than formal oneness among Christians and while maintaining the historic Baptist witness will cooperate with other denominations. It is formally affiliated with the Baptist World Alliance. The president is Rev. J. H. Goble of Victoria.

"The Great Commission," by Prof. Frederick L. Anderson, which first appeared in the Crozer Quarterly is now issued in pamphlet form. It is a successful attempt to put into words that any layman can understand, a scholarly argument for the authenticity of what has come to be called "The Great Commission." Professor Anderson in his own clear and penetrating style faces all the arguments designed to prove that the words found in Matt. 28:18-20 are not the words of Jesus, and with painstaking care he adduces the arguments on the other side. We quote his concluding paragraph: "There is, then, no valid argument which makes it impossible that we have in the Great Commission the very words of Jesus. Still, when we reflect that these words were spoken by our Lord in Aramaic and were then after some years, perhaps, translated into Greek; when we find in them some of the stylistic peculiarities of Matthew; when we have long accustomed ourselves to the constant variations of the Lord's words found in parallel passages in Mark, Matthew and Luke, . . . truth will not allow us to say that the Great Commission surely gives us the very words of Jesus; but our whole paper has proved that in these verses as they stand on the pages of our Bibles we have not only the mind of the Master and the very spirit of Christianity, but for substance the Great Commission of our Lord."

The President's Thanksgiving Proclamation

FOLLOWING custom, President Coolidge on Oct. 30 issued a formal Thanksgiving proclamation setting Thursday, Nov. 25, as the date on which all Americans should give thanks for a prosperous year. The proclamation reads:

"As a nation and as individuals, we have passed another twelve months in the favor of the Almighty. He has smiled upon our fields and they have brought forth plentifully; business has prospered; industries have flourished; labor has been well employed. While sections of our country have been visited by disaster, we have been spared any great national calamity or pestilential visitation. We are blessed among the nations of the earth.

"Our moral and spiritual life has kept measure with our material prosperity. We are not unmindful of the gratitude we owe to God for his watchful care which has pointed out to us the ways of peace and happiness. We should not fail in our acknowledgment of his divine favor which has bestowed upon us so many blessings. Neither should we be forgetful of those among us who, through stress of circumstances, are less fortunately placed, but by deeds of charity make our acknowledgment more acceptable in his sight.

"Wherefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, president of the United States, do hereby set apart Thursday, Nov. 25, as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer, and I recommend that on that day the people shall cease from their daily work, and in their homes or in their accustomed places of worship, devoutly give thanks to the Almighty for the many and great blessings they have received, and seek his guidance that through good deeds and brotherly love they may deserve a continuance of his favor."

The Baptist

TOR: JOHN A. EARL
LD EDITOR: G. CLIFFORD CRESS

ASSISTANT EDITOR: U. M. McGUIRE
OFFICE EDITOR: JANET T. VAN OSDEL

red as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

LISHED EVERY SATURDAY BY THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION AT 2320 MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Subscription, $2.50 a year. Clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries, postage is $1.04; in Canada, 52 cents.

Our Annual Attempt at Appreciation

OW quickly some words, especially when spelled with a capital letter and nationalized by custom and law, lose their simple significance and become burdened with the accumulated weight of institutionalism! Thanksgiving is no exception. The Anglo-Saxon terms which make up the compound structure of the word were primarily simple and direct for the expression of worthy emotions. The giving of thanks from time immemorial has been a mark of a progressive culture of the race. But it remained for America to lift this natural personal acknowledgment into a calendar and officially recognize the custom followed by the Puritans of New England as worthy of national status. So Thanksgiving day is set apart legally on the last Thursday of November each year as a national day, and the people are urged in messages issued by the president of the country and by the governors of each state, to observe the day religiously by offering to God in places of public worship the thanks due to him for the blessings of the seasons. These official messages vary a little from year to year because they necessarily deal, for the most part, in generalities. Hence the tendency is to follow the established custom a bit slavishly and thereby to lose the keen enjoyment that comes from the turning of old things to new uses.

Thanksgiving, after all, is nothing more or less than an annual attempt of the American people under government sanction to emphasize and express their sense of appreciation. Business firms take stock at the close of each calendar year in order to determine the current value of their business. Assets and liabilities are made to face each other at the hands of a relentless audit with the sole object of arriving at a true balance. Indeed, in business does not wait for twelve months to pass before it discovers the actual state of affairs. By improved methods of what has come to be loosely called "cost accounting," the gain or loss may be known at the close of every day. Without some such system no adequate system of appreciation could be established. Appreciation is a sense of values. Carried up to the spiritual values of Thanksgiving day, our annual attempt at the true expression of appreciation ought to have behind it revealing reports of spiritual cost engineers who speak with as much authority in that realm as the industrial cost engineers speak in the realm of business. Appreciation feeds on facts correctly interpreted.

Therefore, if we are to continue to observe Thanksgiving day in perpetuity as a national institution, does it not seem increasingly necessary that some wise system should be devised by the government to provide the citizens of the United States with such quotations of spiritual stocks as shall enable the people to arrive at some honest judgment with regard to their real value? Is it not somewhat of an anachronism for the government to appoint one day in the year for the official recognition of God and then leave the people without authoritative information about the moral and spiritual values which lie implicitly in the words "Almighty God"? It is a fancy with us that the eternal assets of the kingdom of God are as tangible and real as the assets of the business world. The state need not break over into the preserves of the church and thus violate the principle of the separation of church and state in order to speak with the authority of truth on the value of spiritual realities. Is not character as real as crops, manhood as tangible as money, goodness as genuine as gold? Does the state leave its function and trespass on the function of the church when it speaks in clear and definite language on the virtues and graces which constitute the character of its citizens? Character is not sectarian, manhood is not ecclesiastical, goodness is not peculiar to Baptists. All the fundamental elements of spiritual values are universal and because they are universal, they may be appraised by the state as well as by the church.

To this end the president of the United States in conference with a reasonable number of men and women known for their spiritual leadership, might prepare a Thanksgiving message for 1927 which would appraise the great spiritual values of life in a form brief enough to be read without weariness and in words that the average citizen could understand. This one official message should be sufficient for the whole country, and the custom of individual governors issuing Thanksgiving messages should be discontinued. The governors of the various states might affix their signatures to this unified message and let it go out to the people as the one great spiritual utterance of the nation speaking through its highest officials. We can see inestimable good in something like this. No religious sect need feel nervous over such a departure from the usual custom of dealing in the jejune platitudes which have marked official Thanksgiving messages, because the new message would deal only with the appraisal of the vital spiritual values common to all mankind. With such a message in his hand to read and digest, would not the average citizen look forward to Thanksgiving as a day of intelligent appreciation of those eternal values which enrich personal character, ennoble the social order and establish the state upon a foundation which neither material prosperity nor adversity can shake?

The Aim of Evangelism

EVANGELISM is in the air. With other great Christian communions, Baptists are giving preferential treatment to evangelism this year in the program of organized denominational activities. The phrases common to evangelistic effort are heard on every hand—"soul-winning," "seeking the lost," "conversions," "regeneration," "conviction of sin," "repentance," "decisions," and all the other terms that have come to be associated with a revival of religion. Possibly the aim of evangelism is described in part by the words that have been used in the past to express the objective of a revival effort. But all the terms hitherto used need to be reminded before they can become current in society at par value. The content of a phrase heard yesterday may not be its content today. For instance, take the phrase, "conviction of sin," and study its history. One will not proceed far in the study until he discovers that the conviction of sin in any particular period depended upon the standards which determined sin and the customs that governed conscience. The conviction of sin in any individual at the present time will be something different, no doubt, from the personal experience expressed by that phrase fifty years ago. Fifty years ago sin was determined largely on a theological basis, but today the theology of sin has been greatly modified by the biology of sin. David in his expression of the conviction of sin named his mother as the primary cause of his fall; but had he lived in the twentieth century, he might have involved in his confession of personal sin a faulty social order and an imperfect human race.

We are simply pointing out the necessity of approaching the evangelistic objective with a clear apprehension of what is involved in the terms we use, if we are to continue to use the terms associated with evangelism. If the aim of evangelism is to save the lost, we shall not get far on the right road unless we agree on what is meant by the word "lost" when used to classify the people we seek to save. If we can get together on the basis of the three parables of Jesus in the fifteenth chapter of Luke's Gospel without reading into them more than he had in mind, we shall discover that sheep and silver and sons are lost when they are not in the place where they belong. The aim of the shepherd in his heroic effort was to find the sheep that was not with the ninety and nine in the fold and bring it back where it belonged; the aim of the woman in her anxiety was to find the coin which had dropped from her necklace and put it back where it belonged; the yearning of the father was to have his son come back home where he belonged. So the aim of any worthy evangelistic effort today is to find the estranged children of the Father, bring them into sweet and joyful reconciliation with the Father and restore them to the place where they belong in happy fellowship with the Father.

In reaching this definite and difficult aim a wide range of method and a large variety of agencies may be employed. But the methods and the agencies are only means to an end. Paul became all things to all men that by means he might win some. More important than method or agency is the passion of personal sympathy, enthusiasm and responsibility which must possess those who would accompany Jesus in his sacrificial mission of seeking and saving the lost. We grant that there is a theology of evangelism and a technique of evangelism; but the things indispensable in the present evangelistic campaign being pushed by Northern Baptists, are a clear understanding of what we are seeking to realize and the spiritual power, persuasion and persistence to bring it to pass.

The Dog and the Passenger Train

WITH tremendous speed and energy the collier dog rushes along by the side of the fence that separates the field from the railroad track in a mad effort to overtake the train. This is a familiar sight to all traveler and doubtless many of them have wondered what the dog would do with the train if he happened to catch it. The parable is not without point when applied to the organized effort of Chicago Baptists to bring 25,000 delegates and visitors to the Northern Baptist Convention next May. It already begins to look as though the goal will be reached and that when the convention opens in the coliseum which easily seats 17,000, standing room will be at a premium. Under the efficient and enthusiastic generalship of John H. Myers, executive secretary of the local committee of arrangements, there is little doubt among the most conservative of our leaders who have canvassed the plans that the next Northern Convention will be the largest gathering of Baptists ever assembled in one place and at one time in the history of the denomination.

But we cannot help wondering what is to be done with such an unwieldy mass of delegates and visitors when they come together in Chicago next May. When a million Catholics met in Chicago last June for the eucharistic congress, one motive only drew such an unprecedented crowd, namely, worship. No deliberations were needed, no business was transacted, no debate was permitted, few speeches were delivered. The one great object of the congress was just what its name signified, eucharistic. But Baptists see no such magical elements in the Lord's Supper as Catholics recognize in the eucharist. We are a democratic people who, next to the Quakers, stand for spiritual religion and put slight emphasis upon form. What, then, shall we do with 25,000 delegates and visitors in a great convention which hitherto has been largely a deliberative body, a free parliament, an executive assembly? Debate is out of the question, the reading of printed reports will not hold the crowd, business from the floor will be next to impossible. Therefore, inspirational elements must predominate in the program and one mighty objective should be realized. Music must be utilized. Bands, organ, orchestras, choirs, and above all, worshipful congregational singing under the direction of an able inspirational leader should enrich every session of the convention. And in an atmosphere charged with the harmony of sound and song, masters of assemblies should be released to tell the story of God's grace in sermon, missionary address and in gospel appeal. The one great object of the convention should be the exaltation of Jesus as the only Saviour of men, as the one Lord of life, as the sole Unifier of his people.

The World in Transit

An interpretation of significant events in the light of Christian ideals.

Dove of Peace

Finding Her Wings

If any man has persuaded himself that permanent pessimism is the normal mood for a practical citizen of the world today, he is invited to peruse the story of the post-war European treaties as told by the information service of the Foreign Policy Association. The leading treaties of the years 1919, 1920 and 1921 were treaties bringing down the status quo, built around the maintenance and enforcement of the Versailles settlement. Then they can to be overlapped from 1921 onward by treaties of security and of neutrality. From 1922 and especially from 1924 onward came a series of treaties of conciliation and arbitration. Finally, beginning in 1924, but especially in 1925 and 1926, came a series of treaties culminating at Locarno for mutual collaboration embodying all the great international principles of security, conciliation arbitration, adjudication and cooperation. If Europe can find a way to harmonize and at the same time to conserve all her racial, linguistic and cultural groups, she will become the richest area in social value in the world.

Five-Day Week and the Fate of Unemployed

The statement is made that 25 per cent of the members of trade unions in this country are at present unemployed. The number sounds large. If not exaggerated, it is enormous. It may mean several things. Some union workers are on strike. Some industries are perfecting processes which let out men without reducing the output. Other industries, for instance, coal mining, are overdeveloped, and have a surplus of workers. President Green of the A. F. L. suggests as a remedy the Ford idea of a five-day week at a full week's wage. This promises to be a popular proposal but it does not touch the bottom of the problem. The problem at the bottom of the well is how to compete in competition with all nations, a foreign market sufficient to consume the surplus of our products.

Reactionary, Conservative, Progressive, Radical

The reactionary reacts—of course—with a pronounced opposition against proposals for progress; he wants to keep things as they are, or perhaps preferably, to return to what they used to be. The conservative may admit the desirability, or even the desirability of some progress, but wants to be sure that it be made without serious disturbance to the present order of things. The progressive desires some changes and is willing to make some disturbance in order to secure them. He may or may not have any fundamental reason for wanting them. He is on the way but seldom knows where he is going. The radical desires fundamental changes for fundamental reasons. He may or may not be wise in his method. He knows where he is going but may or may not be on the way. Where the progressive seeks reform the radical seeks reconstruction or revolution. The radical holds the compass; the conservative stirs the fire; the conservative steers the ship; the reactionary manipulates the anchor. They are a motley crew.

Nothing Worse Than the Weevil in Cotton Fields

There was when they burned cotton in the South in order to lift the price. They talk of resorting again to the same device. If they should do so, there would be a outcry at their folly. But would it be justified?

Consider the economic habit of the country. Things are definitely arranged so that, as an inevitable sequence of cause and effect, if the farmers produce an abundance of cotton, corn, wheat or other staple commodity, the market price withers on them. The more they produce collectively, the poorer they are individually. And the blow which thus falls upon them is supposed to come from some cosmic necessity, from the sacred law of supply and demand, from the ordering of an all-wise Creator. It comes from no such source. It comes from economic idiocy on the part of society as a whole. It is a consequence of a competitive market. In any normal and decent family the blessings of abundance are shared by all. Some sweet day, when cooperation has grown from an apologetic and partial experiment to be the principle of the whole economic organization, the nation will quit penalizing its producers for their efficiency.

Can Passaic Teach the World Anything New?

At any time in the last nine months, while one of the most significant strikes in the history of American industry has been in progress at Passaic, N. J., it would have been easy to write a hasty and foolish paragraph about the struggle. But can the world gather from it any items of wisdom? Sixteen thousand working people of many nationalities, races (including negroes) and languages, living near the economic and cultural bottom of American society, have united and stood together in poverty for nine months in a refusal to work longer under conditions which careful outside observers pronounce inhuman. If we can trust reports that seem reliable, they have carefully refrained from violating the law or breaking the peace, although themselves harassed, persecuted and brutally manhandled by officers of the law. With the public press mostly closed against them, they are getting their story to the people on the moving-picture screen, with films of the actual strike. Whatever else their story may teach, it demonstrates by a remarkably difficult test the potential democracy which lies latent in the common people.

A Long Vanished Bridge of the Gods

Recent discovery in the far north has revived the theory that the original Americans came by way of Alaska from the continent of Asia. The roadway of their migration is thought to have been a land passage at Behring strait, which since that early migration has sunk beneath the sea. The theory is highly fascinating. What a weirdly splendid, fruitful and perilous world was that into which the men and women of that primitive day pressed their urgent march! And how many millenniums must have passed away before the descendants of those first fishermen and hunters developed such divergent physical and social types of men as the Esquimaux, the Mohawks, the Aztecs and the towering and wild Patagonians! Were they not, as well as we, children of our heavenly Father? Had he not built that vanished bridge for their feet? Was he not with them in the wilderness as truly as with the Hebrews on the way to the land of promise? Sometime, when the progress of discovery shall have opened to modern men the story of those primitive peoples, we shall be able to trace in their vast racial movement one of the marches of God. And it will be a drama of thrilling sublimity.

Paths to the Place of Praise

Sacrificial service sets one's feet in paths that lead to the place of praise

BY ROBERT GORDON

DRIVING along a rough, cobbled street in that old port city, Brest, France, I saw standing on the curb a fine-looking young soldier in American uniform. Amid hundreds, he got my special attention because the insignia he wore made it clear he belonged in a camp whither I was then bound. Applying the brakes, I offered a ride. He accepted and by the story he thus let me learn, paid full fare, I think, for the trip.

He seemed the most disconsolate man of all the thousands I had met in the camps at home and abroad. There was some real occasion for gloom. Several months had passed since the armistice. He had been two years overseas and, like every other soldier, he had expected that immediately after the order, "Cease firing" they would be marched off toward a ship homeward bound. Instead, his regiment was ordered into Germany. Every day there seemed an age in a bondage sorely resented. Finally, by slow stages, they were maneuvered back to Brest and there he was subjected to the hard necessity of watching his mates go up the gang plank for home while he was compelled to remain in France.

The occasion was this. He had been chauffeur for a major who had grossly violated regulations and was held for court martial. The unoffending driver was detained as a witness. Even in the army, trials could be trials in more ways than one. Red tape often unwound very slowly. At the long last, a verdict was reached and the major found guilty. Then our soldier friend actually held in his hand a paper that meant a berth in a boat for home. When four hours out on the Atlantic, with the prow finely cutting a way toward New York, a wireless message from Camp Pontanezen instructed the captain to put our soldier friend under arrest and send him back to Brest. The transport slowed up. Alongside came a tug. A dangling rope ladder was thrown down. He had to descend and go back to France. The major, it seemed, had influence enough to secure a new trial. The witness would be needed again. All this he told me and then said, "Now they have put my name in a book, locked the book in a safe, and thrown the key away." He cursed the army, the major and the general. He cursed France, the war and the weather. He cursed his luck and the prospects. He was the bluest man on that side of the sea. Words, no matter how cheerful, utterly failed to puncture the gloom in which he was enshrouded.

The Man Transformed

Some time later I was again in Brest. And, lo there he was!—my soldier friend, the exile lost in army statistics. But he had amazingly brightened up and looked like a different man. Again we rode out to the camp together and I learned the secret of this altered appearance. A few days before, he had place in a long line slowly entering Flag Hut where Y workers served some 5000 men at a meal. Looking ahead, he caught a glimpse of one in red cross uniform about whom there seemed to be something familiar. Could it be? Was it she? It was! He had not seen her for two years. He had not heard from her for twelve months. He had not dreamed she was in France. Letters had gone astray. Each had concluded the other had chosen to forget. It did not take long to discover that the old fires still were burning. How his eyes danced as he told of his sweet Highland Mary! He put it all into a sentence when he said, "It is settled now and forever. Today I gave her a diamond."

Maybe you'll think I neglected my duty. I did not preach to him then. But to many another bewildered soul, there and here I have given that page from life as illustrative of the reality of that Providence whose ways are better than whose thoughts are higher than our own poor best ever can be. It is my faith, fixed as the North Star, that "all things work together for good to them that love," really love. There is a Superintendent in the skies, ultimately the universe is friendly, at the center of all the mystery and the unimaginable immensities, there is a beating heart of love that really cares for me and means me well. That conviction sustains and cheers when all else fails. Who can plant his feet on a faith like that and not find himself on a path that leads to some place of praise?

"Progress and Joy"

But what of my brother? Do the generations fall like the season's leaves to moulder into meaningless dust? Is this earth adrift upon an uncharted sea bound no whither? How could one sing with that fear in his heart? Turn to the story of another soldier. Read again one of those old letters he wrote while he too was a prisoner. Even yet they shine as the most radiant pages in all epistolary communication. In that first chapter to the church at Philippi, Paul linked together two golden words, "progress and joy." Clouds hang thick above his head but along the eastern horizon there is a rosy line. It is dawn. Despite deep-rooted paganism and age-old superstition Christ's cause will yet prevail. Though only a little group their "fellowship in the furtherance of the gospel" cannot be frustrated, for in their midst is One who already has conquered sin and the grave. How can one find his way to the place of praise if he does not believe that righteousness shall cover the earth as waters cover the sea?

Yet even in the Christian pulpit there are men who have thrown away that glorious Pauline word, "progress." They deem it a duty to prove the idea of progress a pestiferous postulate. Alas, there is at hand dismal data enough. From the literature of despair, take a chapter at random. Here is a writer of high-sounding name who sets out to establish the thrilling thesis that advanced races are all going backward. He piles up mountainous figures to prove that weaklings, paupers, hoboes and fools are increasing while those responsible for their welfare are decreasing. Our eyes cannot be closed to unpleasant facts. But let us strive to get all the facts. On every one of these disputed fields, there is also a prophet of hope. Hear him to! Don't be dismayed by those who poke fun at Sunny Jim or gay Pollyanna. Better far be their kin than relate even remotely to Miss Much Afraid or Johnny the Doleful. Take it as settled that many peddlers of gloom are as much mistaken as was the freshman who defined an optimist as "a sea monster with a nucleus and any number of long waving legs."

When tried by the times, look back. For a cheering page from our own history, read the life of Augustus Baldwin Longstreet by Wade. For fifty years before the Civil war, Longstreet was a leader in the public life of the South. Are you troubled by school conditions? You will be amazed to learn that in Longstreet's time teachers untrained and unfit, brutal, dishonest, habitual self-drunken, were engaged and paid to sway the minds of little Georgians whither they would. Has some one tried to persuade you that student drinking is purely a post-prohibition pastime? Then note that in the colleges of the South in those days whisky was freely drunk with effective restraint. Are you distressed that so many are so slow to attack social injustice? Read how southern preachers not only used the Bible to justify slavery but used texts to prove abolitionists arch-criminals and traitors. "We are fighting," they cried, "to drive away the devil rationalistic principles which are sweeping over our land!" Are you grieved at the energy wasted in debate about matters that have no practical bearing on the conduct of life? Read of three Baptist congregations torn by life over the following momentous concerns: (1) a girl member bought a parasol, (2) a matron invested in a gig, (3) a preacher appeared in a coat having lapels! Do any of you long for the good old days and the old-time religion? Let me tell them of persons joining the church while under the influence of whisky and of honest men who joining did not limit themselves to less than a quart of whisky a day for to do more they knew would have been stark raving.

One publicly declared the church had at last fully qualified for the museum. Next week with others we raised $10,000 from those dead churches for our Y. Our own church raised $7000 more and paid off its debt. Then I went on a trip to the coast. At Seattle I found the Baptist laying the corner-stone of a Sunday-school building that cost $75,000. At Whittier I preached in the new Baptist church that cost $65,000. That evening I saw the Baptist temple at Pasadena representing an investment of over $200,000. I stopped in Topeka and found our First church had pledges in hand for a five-story Sunday-school plant costing $90,000. At Kansas City I saw going on the enlargement of the First church at an expenditure of over half a million. And soon they expect to put up another great building. In Chicago, high above all the temples of trade, I saw against the night sky an illuminated cross and learned that the Methodists had given seven and a half million to erect that shining symbol. Rounding out my trip, I landed on an island in northern Lake Michigan and found that the handful of Baptists there had raised enough to paint their meeting house inside and out. Yet some say the churches are dying or dead. In "The Everlasting Man," Chesterton records five deaths of the faith. "At least five times," he writes, "with the Adrian and the Albigensian, with the Humanist Sceptic, after Voltaire and after Darwin, the faith has to all appearance gone to the dogs. In each of these five cases it was the dog that died."

All this does not mean we are going to drift into the desired haven. This is a grim and disappointing world. Paul knew his life must be poured out as a libation, yet he was persuaded labor is never in vain in the Lord. Outstanding leaders like Doctor Cadman declare, "We are now on the verge of a religious ascent." Hopeful participation in sacrificial service for the coming of a better day will surely set one's feet in a path leading to the place of praise. At this most promising hour of the decade put your hand to the plough and, face forward.

*Let every broken furrow run:
The strength you sweat
Shall blossom yet
In golden glory to the sun."*

Malnutrition

BY THOMAS G. HULL, M.D.

THE local church, as an entity, is composed of many members. To replace the constant loss of members through death and removals, to furnish materials for normal growth and to supply energy for work, the church must be properly nourished. Malnutrition brings on rickets, pellagra, beri-beri, poor teeth and bow-legs or knock-knees. It often impairs the general health so that a person affected is more susceptible to infectious diseases. In the church it is evidenced by an unbalanced program: The Bible school is unable to hold its young people after high school age; the so-called "young people's" society is dominated by adults; there is no men's organization; the missionary committee functions in name only; fellowship is lacking and the church is cold. The vitality of the church may be so impaired that an infectious "disease" is contracted, or the church may break out in the scarlet rash of discord and a high temperature of dissension, recovering only after severe emaciation of the membership roll.

Among the important components of the nutrition of the church are the two vitamins, foreign missions and home missions. Lack of these bring on a multitude of spiritual ills, some unsuspected until too late. Has the church become afflicted with "xerophthalmia"? Is it losing its vision? The missionary committee is advised to adopt "foreign missions" in constant and repeated doses for a considerable period of time. Is the church suffering from "night blindness"? Just because it is night on the other side of the world when the sun shines here, is no reason to ignore those who live and labor there. A consistent administration of foreign missions in increasing doses is necessary to cure this serious eye trouble and restore to the church its normal vision and perspective.

Has the church developed scurvy? Are there a large number of people about town who have been allowed to "scale" away from contact with all things religious? It is a distressing condition and must not be allowed to go too far because severe emaciation of the membership roll is sure to follow. The remedy is a well planned program of home missions, opening mission stations if necessary for those sections which cannot be reached otherwise. Has the church contracted a case of beri-beri? Is it afflicted with a general weakness and with numbness of its extremities? The missionary committee must change the diet. A one-sided diet of polished rice over a long period of time has the same effect upon a Japanese child as a monotonous, unvarying, neglected program for missions has on the church.

Foreign missions must be "brought home" by a few rapid-fire missionaries from the foreign field, while home missions must be emphasized by actual visits to some of the stations. Just as human life, given all the elements necessary for the production of tissue, of bone, of energy, cannot exist without vitamins, so the church, no matter how elaborate its other organizations, will not develop to its greatest usefulness without a missionary program.

Is the church "underweight"? Something has interfered with attendance at the regular preaching services. Members are not receiving a sufficient number of "calories" for heat and energy to perform properly their religious duties. Is it because of poverty that the church is unable to hire a minister to preach only at intervals, or is it because of "too many sweets between meals" that the members neglect the preaching service and refuse to take the nourishment set before them? Take note of the dietary habits of the church so that they may be corrected.

Is the church bow-legged or knock-kneed? Growing bones need the proper mineral elements and plenty of them. If the Bible school has been furnishing insufficient calcium in its program to build strong and upright characters and to hold the youth through the 'teen years into maturity, the abnormal condition of only babies and bald heads in the church, without the staunchness and power of young manhood and young womanhood, can be expected.

The Poor's Lunch

BY HENRY STRONG HUNTINGTON

A YEAR ago in their report of the tea which Mr. Morgenthau gave at the "little palace" in honor of Harry Emerson Fosdick, the Athens papers recounted: "Mr. Fosdick explained the Golden Rule Sunday. This is a Sunday fixed every year in the early part of December, in which all take a 'poor's lunch.' The amount realized through this economical meal is offered to a special fund for the benefit of philanthropy."

For three years people of good-will have been taking this "poor's lunch" on the first Sunday in December, midway between Thanksgiving and Christmas. The world has grown enthusiastic over it. People find it digests uncommonly well, sits lightly on the stomach and agrees well with the soul.

It seems as though people of all nations have tried it—Koreans, Costa Ricans, Hawaiians, Filipinos, Czechs, Singalese, Brazilians and even Thibetans, as well as English, Welsh, Irish, Danes, French, Germans and Americans.

From India 135 boys in the training school for village teachers at Moga in the Punjab, sent 109 rupees as their part of the Golden Rule fund, money that they had earned themselves and that left many of them with nothing to jingle in their pockets for a month or more.

When the students in the girls' college in Santiago, Chile, heard of the idea, a committee went to the "directora" and asked to go without desert and send the money thus saved to help the orphans. "Are all the girls willing?" asked the "directora." The committee withdrew to find out. Soon it brought in the report, "Yes, every one of them." And for a month 300 girls gave up cake, pudding and the other goodies which usually ended the meal, and went out to play as cheerfully as ever, despite the "more-ish" feeling that they took away from the table with them.

Circle around to Japan. There Prince Tokugawa saw to it that literature about Golden Rule Sunday went to every member of the house of peers, and Viscount Fukuoka put 1000 copies of the Golden Rule appeal in the hands of the peers' club.

Jump to America. The grateful daughter of an eighty-nine-year-old mother sent the Near East Relief $6 as a thank offering. "Mother fell and didn't break any bones," she explained, "and so didn't have any expense for a doctor." If all the money that might have had to go to the doctors, but didn't, went to Near East Relief instead! Well, we don't want to have to organize a relief society for doctors without practice!

The children in a state school for the blind gave up their candy for a week and put the $2 into the Near East treasury to help give rice to orphans.

So it goes around the world. Out in the Levant the needy orphans themselves catch a double dose of the

Has the church pellagra? Possibly the young people's society has not functioned properly in furnishing the right amount of "proteins" for growth. Instead of training leaders to be deacons and church workers and Bible-school teachers, it has degenerated into a small clique bent on having a good time.

Is the church suffering from digestive troubles? Possibly the diet has been too concentrated and needs some of the "roughage" of good fellowship. Has the church halitosis? Horrors! Gargle out that impious old hygienic crite from the official board. Whatever the cause of the trouble, the sooner it is corrected, the sooner will the church return to a normal condition.

One Golden Rule Sunday the director of the Polygon Orphanage at Alexandropol wrote, "It is warm tonight—only twenty-five degrees below zero. There are ten feet of snow on the ground, and the wolves can be heard. The children have no way to dry their wet feet. Under these conditions, can you imagine what it means for them to give up voluntarily, as they have done, nearly 50 per cent of their bread ration for use among needy children in refugee camps?"

When Doctor Fosdick brought his report from the Near East this fall, he told fellow diners at the Golden Rule dinner in New York: "A man who stands in the presence of those (Near East) children and sees what they think of America, what they suppose America is like, the emotion in which they hold our generosity, comes home and gets down on his knees and prays that they may never have cause to be disappointed in us. We have a great reputation to live up to, at least in one place in the world and that is in the hearts of those children of the Near East. They think we are the embodiment of generosity. God help us." Yes, may he help us.

Most of us know already how to observe Golden Rule Sunday. It is simple enough. Here are the specifications:

1. On the first Sunday in December, instead of an ordinary dinner, eat a "poor's lunch": rice, with a little tomato; bread without butter; drink: chocolate; dessert: prunes or dried apricots. Change the meal as you wish so long as it has the flavor of economy.

2. Send the difference between the cost of that "poor's lunch" and an ordinary Sunday meal to Near East Relief, 151 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

3. Discover that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

You will probably discover as an incidental blessing that you don't feel quite so sleepy that day as usual on a Sunday afternoon. So maybe you'll have energy enough to pull out some anthology or other and turn to John Hay's "Little Breeches." After you've read it to the family the children may want to learn four lines:

I think that saving a little child
And bringing him to his own
Is a big sight better business
Than loafing around the throne.

"O SPIRIT of that early day,
So pure and strong and true,
Be with us in the narrow way
Our faithful fathers knew.
Give strength the evil to forsake,
The cross of truth to bear,
And love and reverent fear to make
Our daily lives a prayer."

On the Trails of the Protestant Martyrs

BY WINFRED ERNEST GARRISON

FOLLOWING the trails of the Protestant martyrs is both physically and spiritually stimulating. They were no weaklings. They moved freely in regions that wild goats shrank from as too steep and rugged. Given from the lowlands, they looked to the hills whence came their help. They had trial of bonds and imprisonment; they were stoned, slain with the sword, destitute, afflicted, tormented; they wandered in deserts and in mountains, in dens and caves of the earth, of whom the world was not worthy. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews was sketching in advance the history of the Waldensians. No longer persecuted, many of them still dwell in their mountain villages, and the caves of their former hiding may be seen by one who is willing and able to climb—and hunt. Once before I had come up to these valleys from the Italian side; this time the approach was from the French side (as I told you a few weeks ago) over the lofty Alpine barrier on foot by a little-used trail that led down into the valley of the Pellice at its head. The impression is different this way. One gets a keener sense of the courage and virility of men who could build their homes like eagles' nests on crags, protect themselves from their enemies by sheer inaccessibility, make a living God knows how, and still nourish both a faith and a culture.

From the Col Lacroix—with its refuge hut built from the legacy left by Napoleon for the purpose—the trail comes down 2000 feet into a valley which lies low between its lofty walls yet stands nearly a mile above the plain of Lombardy to which it leads. The valley widens to a field or two; it narrows for a cascade beside which the trail winds corkscrew-wise; it flattens to a fertile terrace; it plunges downward in a gorge. But always there are the mountain-walls rising to vast heights, and here and there, half-way to the top and apparently approachable only by wings, a tiny gray village perfectly matching the gray cliff behind it—protective coloration added to its protective location. One can understand why they built their villages where and as they are in the days of danger, why does any one stay in them now? One cannot live there any more than one can live in the cities of the world. Scenery twelve months in the year. But, for that matter, why do men still live on Umbrian hilltops where towns are located for defense rather than for convenience? Why do the Indians still live on their mesa at Acoma? Why do men everywhere spend their lives and sacrifice their happiness in various kinds of slavery to habit, to custom, or supposed economic necessity? There is no final answer. There is time for many such reflections when one comes to Bebbie, where the trail becomes a

Bebbie begins to be something of a summer-resort, and one can wonder when one considers the beauty and charm of this valley. Terre Pellice, ten miles below, is even more popular and populous with tourists. These places seem remote when one has tramped over the Alps and into the mountains from above, but they are accessible enough from Bebbie by rail and road. It is this combination of accessibility and ruggedness that made this region so admirable for the persecuted. When the followers of Peter Waldo in the thirteenth century began to be harried by ecclesiastical authorities which they at first ignored and defied in their zeal for a simple evangelical religion drawn largely from the Sermon on the Mount, it was to these mountains that they fled. From high points of outlook they could see when their enemies approached far over the plain of Lombardy and flee to the remoter valleys or the loftier ranges. Sometimes, with a blending of caution and courage, they hid in a cave on the mountain overlooking Terre and watched their persecutors go by searching for them.

THE ABBEY OF ST. MARTIN DE CANIGOU

I spent a day looking for this cave. It is not so easy to find even with a trail going right past it. That is just the trouble; the trail goes right past. I gave it up, turned back, became ashamed of my failure, climbed up again, and, by an inch-by-inch search, found the way into it. It is not really a cave, but a ledge on the face of the cliff 2000 feet above the valley. You find it by dropping over the edge of a higher ledge to a yard-wide shelf, creeping along this for a few rods, and slipping down thirty feet through a crevice to a narrow and uneven bench hidden from above by the overhanging cliff and protected from below by a dizzy drop. It was a good hiding-place, but it was found once and became the scene of a massacre.

The Waldensians of today, equally heroic descendants of their heroic ancestors, are the most important Protestant group in Italy, still dwelling in their villages in these mountains, having their church headquarters and institutions at Terre Pellice, and maintaining flourishing missions in all the principal cities even as far south as Sicily. I visited again, as I did three years ago, my friend, Dr. A. C. Tron, the veteran pastor who has not only done a great work in this region but has perhaps done more than any one else to make the Waldensians known in England and America.

There are Huguenot as well as Waldensian trails and cities of refuge in these mountains. After a journey by rail down to Turin, an interesting evening there with an Italian army aviator and a French soprano opera singer, and a seventy-mile automobile ride back to Briançon over Mont Genevre pass, by which Hannibal (perhaps), Caesar, Charlemagne, Charles VIII and Napoleon crossed the Alps, I set forth encumbered only by a knapsack to visit what is said to be the highest village in France and a famous haunt of persecuted Huguenots. I traveled twenty miles by rail down the valley of the Durance, then on foot up into the high hanging valley of Froissoniers. Several hundred level acres are stretched between walls like Yosemite. The valley narrows, climbs, curves, flattens again. We pass through a straggling village of rugged stone and weathered timber, Froissoniers, once all Huguenot, now half Protestant and half Catholic. Then come more miles of stony valley with a fascinating stream. A deep pellucid pool issues an invitation for a swim. An invitation from such a stream is, like a king's, a command, even though its glacier sources are in sight. The road dwindles to a rocky trail. Feathery waterfalls leap from cliffs but never reach the valley. They dissolve in mist midway and float upward again like silver plumes or wind-blown veils of white chiffon, so sheer that they are visible only when the sun shines through them. Pass them and look back with the light behind you, and they are gone, their places marked only by streaks of black wetness on the face of the cliff. The trail winds upwards to a ledge 1000 feet above the stream and passes through the spray of two slender cataracts whose fall is checked and broken by the shelf. Still upward in steep zigzags, and the trail comes out upon a sloping grassy bench at a sharp bend of the valley. There is the village of Dormilleuse. (Pronounce it Dormi-yuze). Whether or not it is the highest village in France, it is high enough.

Tourists talk glibly about getting "off the beaten track." Here is a town that is off any track—a town without an inn, without a shop, without a postoffice, without a place where picture postcards may be bought, without a cafe. I wonder if it is not the only town in France which has no cafe. The reason is obvious. Cafes are usually on the sidewalk. Dormilleuse has no cafe because it has no sidewalk, and it has no sidewalk because it has no street. It is a town reached by no road, a town into which no wheel ever rolled. Two or three dozen heavily built stone houses sheltering men and animals under the same roofs, and a Protestant church—that is all. The village looks across the canyon at a glacier almost level with it. The houses are built to resist avalanches, so far as anything of human construction can resist them, but there are traditions of harrowing experiences when mountainous masses of snow have come crashing down from the slopes above. Half of the houses are empty and some are falling into ruin, for the population has dwindled by emigration, chiefly to Algeria. I found lodging with a hospitable resident who explained his remaining on the ground that he owned so much property that he could not afford to leave. It is impossible to sell, for no one wants to buy, and those who go must simply abandon their property.

In the earliest days of the reformation in France, early in the sixteenth century, these mountaineers of Dauphiné became largely Protestant, and a large proportion of their descendants and successors have remained so. At the time of the dragonades, following the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, when a systematic effort was made to exterminate the French Protestants, many fled from the regions farther west into this district. The trail which leads down to Dormilleuse from the west became known as a "Huguenot trail." I wanted to see that trail. It seemed to me that, even apart from its historic interest, any trail which came down to Dormilleuse would be worth seeing from the scenic standpoint. And it was. Following it in the reverse direction, one goes up 3000 feet, ascending a beautiful but desolate valley, over boulder fields and snow fields to a wind-swept pass from which most of the world seems to be visible. As to the trail, it may have been a famous trail 200 years ago, but it is near the vanishing point now. I went up on one side of the stream and come down on the other without being able to decide which side the trail was really on or which was the harder going. For it required no great effort of the imagination to see that stony path—or upon the stones where there was no path—the foot-prints of those who had kept nothing but the faith. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of those who bring good tidings."

Others besides persecuted Protestants have sought safety or peace in the mountains. The monks, fleeing the snares of the world and the wiles of the devil, often built their monasteries in remote and sightly spots. The Grande Chartreuse, famous alike for its sanctity and its distilleries, occupies a marvellously beautiful site twenty-five miles north of Grenoble. It must have been inaccessible enough to satisfy the most monkish soul till good roads were built through these mountains and it became the object of Grenoble's favorite half-day excursion by auto-bus.

But up in the Pyrenees there is an ancient abbey, Martin de Canigou, which meets every requirement of most florid imagination. In location as in architecture it is exactly right. It was built in the year 1001, on a crag which projects from Mt. Canigou like a thumb of a mountain's clenched fist. For 600 years it was occupied as an abbey. Then it was abandoned and fell into decay. Twenty-five years ago the bishop of Perpignan, then new to the episcopate, bought the ruin and began its restoration. Working with loving and careful study of the plans, he has rebuilt it exactly as it was and has made his summer residence and a place of retreat for priests. One climbs to it, as everywhere in the Pyrenees through forests of magnolias, chestnuts, linden and oak, through deep beds of ferns and banks of flowers—wild rose, wild artichoke, bon homme, mil portuis, and scores of others whose names I do not know in either English or French. And from this fragrant trail one emerges, 1500 feet above the valley, upon the tiny top of the crag, where occupied by the irregular quadrangle of the abbey's Romanesque buildings. The bishop himself was there, and he is even better than the abbey—a man over eighty with the face of a saint and an ascetic, the mind of a scholar, the soul of a Christian, and the manners of a courtier. He received me with both hands outstretched as though to greet a dear invited guest. The bishop had read of the hospitality which the eucharistic congress had enjoyed in my city. Must not he, a Catholic of France, give equal welcome to a Chicago Protestant? We had an hour or more of conversation—for the most part he talked while I listened eloquently or asked questions—of the growth of religious liberty, of mutual understanding among Christians of divergent views, of France after the war, of the abbey itself and his work of restoration, of the view of mountains and valley from his terrace. People had called him a crazy visionary when he began to rebuild the ruin, but now the work speaks for itself. It is almost done, but there is no money with which to finish. It was not time, but men, that had ruined the original buildings. "Tempus edax, edacior homo." And, if sometimes time heals the wounds that time has made and later years restore in fairer form what passing years have carried away, so sometimes the patient and loving workman rebuilds what the avarice and vindictiveness of man has destroyed. The bishop is a builder—in every sense—as it seemed to me.

The Devotional Life

The Grace of Appreciation

"She hath done what she could."—Mark 14:8.

BY GEORGE H. MORRISON

FEW GIFTS are more helpful than the gift of appreciation. It is like rain on the mown grass, or sunshine falling on the flowers. When one of our Scots ministers died, a beautiful thing was said of him. It was said that there was no one left to appreciate the little triumphs of little men. A recent essayist has divided people into minus and plus people. The minus people are those who leave us poorer, and the plus, those who leave us richer. Among the latter, in the common ways of life, where there is little applause and many a weary hour, are those who have appreciating grace. It helps folk wonderfully when things are difficult, to know that somebody appreciates. It is always easier to march to music. A word of appreciation now and then would make all the difference to thousands whose day's round is largely drudgery.

When All Geese Are Swans.

One must distinguish true appreciation from flattery or praise. Flattery is veiled insult, and praise may be condescension in disguise. Newman has said that people shrink from praise because the right to praise implies the right to blame, and scripture warns us with no uncertain voice against coveting the praise of man. But genuine appreciation is different from praise or flattery, and for it every heart hungers. The story is told of Robert Browning that once at Oxford he was given a great ovation, and when some one hinted that he must hate all that, he said, "Why, I've been waiting for it all my life." Men of genius, who would scorn to stoop to the passing fashions of the hour, are as eager for appreciation as the rest of us. Just as everybody yearns for love, so everybody yearns to be appreciated. The drudgeries of life are lightened when there is somebody who understands. There are few nobler heroisms in the world than that of those who toil for years without a single appreciative word.

This gift of appreciation is always the mark of a noble, generous nature, just as the constant habit of depreciating is the sign-manual of littleness. To depreciate is not to criticize, for true criticism has an eye for beauty. To depreciate is to betray an uneasy feeling of inferiority. But generous natures are always self-forgetful, and are touched with a certain sweet serenity, and so have the heart at leisure from itself. "See," said Nelson, "how that gallant fellow Collingwood takes his ship into action." There is nothing harder than to appreciate richly the men who are doing the same work as we are. The noble nature of Sir Walter Scott is never more beautifully evident than in the appreciation which he lavished on the efforts of his inferior fellow-craftsmen. When I went as assistant to Dr. Alexander Whyte, Professor Lindsay laid his hand upon my shoulder. "Never forget," he said to me, "that all Whyte's geese are swans." It was a playful warning not to lose my head when I found that the least service I could render was appreciated with amazing generosity. Little souls delight in fault-finding; big ones in appreciating. Mean folk are always minus folk; it is the great hearts who are the plus ones. They add to life and make it richer; they call out all that is best within us by the sunshine of their appreciation.

The Beauty of the Commonplace.

Then one turns to the story of the Master, and sees how gloriously Christ appreciated. That was why life blossomed in his company. When the woman broke the alabaster box, he alone appreciated what it meant. When the widow cast her mite into the treasury, he saw in a flash the splendor of her giving. Others appreciated a cup of wine; he, a cup of water, and that was characteristic of his life. Hating sin as no man ever hated it, because he knew the Father with such perfect intimacy, the wonderful thing about our Lord is how he appreciated the common heart. He saw the worshiping woman in the harlot, the disciple in the despised tax-gatherer, the rock in the unstable will of Simon. Common things were beautiful to him—the lily was more wonderful than Solomon. Sparrows, a drug upon the market, were in his eyes fed by the catering of God. The love of woman, the wonder of the child, the fine things lurking in the pagan breast, our Lord appreciated them all.

It only remains to add that love is the secret of appreciation. Love is not really blind; it has the most generous of eyes. Prof. Henry Drummond used to say that if you buy a box, it must be flawless. But if your little son with his rough tools makes you a box, probably it has a hundred faults. Yet you appreciate that clumsy workmanship far more than what you purchased in the market, because it's the work of the little chap you love. Love wild flowers, and you come to appreciate what to other people are but weeds. Love the hills, and you find beauties in them that other eyes are powerless to see. When love reigns, as it is going to reign when God's kingdom is established on the earth, there will be such appreciative grace abroad that life and labor will be set to music.

—The British Weekly.

The Chimney Corner

Thanksgiving Jane

WE ANTICIPATE a sermon when we attend church, but we do not expect to find a sermon in the kitchen—at least ordinarily we do not. But the day came when Robert and I knew that every time we entered the kitchen—or it might be the steamy, sudsy laundry room or the dust-filmed furnace room—there would loom up before us a powerful sermon—five feet, eight inches tall and two feet wide—in the form of Jane, our maid-of-all-work. It beamed from her sparkling summer-sea blue eyes, and spilled over in laughter from a wide mouth ornamented by two rows of large, even and meticulously scrubbed white teeth. Even her crisp, crinkly red hair which, like a Mexican firebush, topped off Jane's great height, seemed to signal a message of good cheer.

Now what had Jane to beam over? Why should she personify the spirit of all-thankfulness?

When we sent for Jane upon the recommendation of a friend who had briefly sketched to us Jane's story without commenting upon Jane's reaction to the ways of life with her, we looked for a somewhat dolorous human being. As a deserted baby of shamed parents, Jane had been placed on some one's doorstep and thence in a foundlings' home. When she was twenty years old she was married to a young farmer of the neighborhood who had become acquainted with her through bringing vegetables to the orphanage.

Just to see the bliss spread over Jane's face when she, on better acquaintance, told of the joy of love coming to her, and of being taken away through this love into a home of her own—she who had never known the meaning of mother or father or home ties—gave us a vision of the glorified bride that Jane must have been.

Two boys were born to Jane and her husband, and again the radiance of Jane as she told us of it, gave us to understand something of the welcome that awaited those babies. When the younger boy was two years old the father was killed by a runaway team. Four months later another son was born, but he was a cripple and when eleven years old left Jane for the Summerland of little children.

Working during these years as both mother and father to her children, Jane brought them up as though she were three persons instead of one. After the little crippled boy had been taken from her, she devoted herself still more whole-heartedly, if that were possible, to Bert and Jim. She even sent them to college, supplementing their earnings with her own. And then came the world war, and as bravely as she had done everything in her life, she sent these two boys across the seas to help end war.

The boys were just ready to take their places in the business world when they answered the call. Before they sailed, clutching at whatever good life might have to offer them and heart hungry to carry with them the possessive love of the girls they had anticipated making their wives several years later, the boys were married. And again it was with Jane's richest blessing, although she knew that if the boys did not come back, whatever recompense might be given by the government for sacrificed or injured life would go to these young wives and not to the mother of the boys. Bert and Jim were killed in action exactly ten days apart.

Thus Jane, forty-eight years old, was again alone in the world, and dependent on the labor of her hands for food and shelter.

Did Jane complain?

Never!

She sang, and continues to sing, psalms of praise.

Whenever you approach the kitchen or the basement or whatever place Jane's lowly tasks may have called her to, rolling forth in Jane's rich, untrained voice, you will hear, sung from the first line to the last, such hymns as "I thank thee, O God," "Praise him, praise him, Lord of the earth and the sky," "Love, love, wonderful love," "My blessings are numberless," "The King of Love my Shepherd is," "Glory to God on high," "O could I speak the matchless worth," "Awake, glad soul, awake," "Awake and sing the song"—if there's a praise or adoration song it is doubtless in Jane's repertoire.

One day I asked her why she always sang songs of thanksgiving and praise.

"Could I sing anything else?" she asked, turning from the pantry shelves she was cleaning to look down at me, her blue eyes shining. "Think of what I've had—love, my home, my husband, my sons—why, could I do anything else but sing songs of thanksgiving all the days of my life?"

Eating for Health

BY ELIZABETH COLE

"NOW, Johnny," said the teacher, "there is an argument, what do you call the winner?"

"Ma!" answered Johnny.

"Ma" is certainly called the winner in most families; it is usually the mother or wife who has the final word on questions that arise in the home. Especially does she decide upon questions of food and diet.

The housewife has a great responsibility in planning meals for the family. Intelligence in the choosing of nourishing diet and the proper cooking of food can make or mar the health of the father and the growing boys and girls. It is a big item in the health budget as well as in the family expense budget, for from the food that is taken into the stomach we absorb our nourishment through the blood vessels. If the right foods are selected, we should be healthy people. Nature cannot always do her part; well balanced meals are not eaten, and while the serious results of improper foods may not be seen until later in life they will surely appear some time.

Every normal man, woman and child needs milk, vegetables (both root and leafy), fresh fruit and products from grains, such as breads and cereals. Fat, eggs, meats and sweets may appear in the normal diet in small amounts, depending on whether one is leading an active or a fairly inactive life.

Foods provide heat and energy for the body. They build and repair broken down tissues, and give the mineral elements and vitamins necessary to build strong bodies to resist disease.

Fuel foods are fats, such as butter, oil and milk with the cream not removed. Carbohydrates, sugar and starchy food also produce heat.

The energy or pep-creating foods are breads, cereals, potatoes, rice, butter, cream, fat meats, which all active persons need. To get strong bodies and keep them in repair, eat milk, egg, cheese, meats, fish, beans, peas and nuts. The mineral foods are found in milk, vegetables, whole grain cereals and fruit. In the spring when some people take a tonic for that listless, tired feeling, sensible ones add more of the mineral foods to their diet and get the calcium, phosphorus and iron contained in the tonic. There are four necessary vitamins scattered throughout our varied diet.

(Continued on page 1251)

BOYS and Girls

More About Those Stamps You Are Each Going to Send Me!

BY MARGARET T. APPLEGARTH

IF YOU haven't read already last week's page for boys and girls, please do so now, so that you may be sure to fill in line with my new plan for you to give a book to the boys and girls of the Orient who are bookless. Fancy how absurd it must be to have had your B C's, your grammar, your geography, your scrap of history, and then not another single thing to read, suitable to your years—not a story book, not one, in your own language. Yet in India, China, Japan, and other lands where our missionaries work, this was happening to all the boys and girls in our mission schools. The magic of learning was put in their power, and they would so love to have read something besides school-books. So then you know what happened! Those busy missionaries spent their spare moments hunting up stories and translating them; but it costs money to print books, lots of money. And missionaries are none! And the churches in America did not back them up in this new idea. So even now, several years later, there are only a few books for children; and you know yourself that you can't go on reading one book forever and ever and ever.

Therefore, I now come to you and give you jolly red stamps! Also to an exciting tour I beg you to take at once, over to a bookcase in your own home or to one in your public library. There are to be counted the books you have read and liked. Tick them off on your fingers: one favorite, two favorites, three, four, five; and then why not, in that high gratitude for the wonderful kinds of books are to you, send one stamp for each of the books you have read off, as your own special Thanksgiving present?

Every person who reads this page could do that, I am sure we could easily raise the $300 which it costs to translate and print a book.

It has always seemed to me that at Thanksgiving time we aren't quite thankful enough in definite ways! We are in church and feed thankful; but things are often so cheap and so easy. We don't give thanks this year? And give it in the form of gay red two-cent stamps which can say to the bookless children of the Orient: "I, John Jones, have enjoyed reading five books more than I can possibly tell you, want you to have a book too." And send a stamp for each book.

Who will be the first?

The names of donors will appear in this column, with the city and state.

It will be fun to rope in your friends, too. Suppose some day you should all begin talking about books—you say: "What are your favorite books, anyhow?" They say: "This, and this, and this, and this, and this." You say: "Would you be willing to give a two-cent stamp for each book, because I know of the most splendid scheme," etc., etc. And half the time people will gladly help in a simple way like this.

Of course I told you before how much it matters to me, personally, to have Baptist boys and girls make a success of this scheme, because then next year it will be possible for me to point with pride at Baptists: "If they did it, giving a book to bookless children in the Orient just through stamps, why can't you do it, too? Come now, own up, why not?"

And of course there won't be one solitary reason why Presbyterian boys and girls can't be just as generous as Baptist boys and girls. It has always seemed to me it would be fun to be held up as a model child to somebody somewhere! Here's your chance, and my chance, although the nicer motive is the thanksgiving one. I can't help hoping my postman is going to leave such piles of mail on my porch that he will wonder what in the world is happening.

The Book Box

TURN a letter paper box into a book by making mock covers of lightweight, colored cardboard, folded around three sides, and pasted. Paste a white label on the narrow back where the title usually comes; print on the label in a column eight words deep:

MY BOOK
FOR BOOKLESS
CHILDREN IN

SEND STAMPS AS FOLLOWS:

1. Send them loose in an envelope stamped and sealed, addressed to Miss Margaret Applegarth, 14 Arnold Park, Rochester, N. Y. Please do not paste any stamps to your letter; each letter will be opened carefully so that no stamps are lost.
2. For larger amounts, it may be more convenient for all concerned to have checks or money orders sent. Nothing will be too high! Nothing, too small!

THE ORIENT

Perhaps you would enjoy adding a ninth line in smaller letters reading: "by" and a tenth line giving your own name. On the top of the box make a slit deep enough for a fifty-cent piece where money can be collected for "My Book." In the home, when any one is seen reading a book, you can march up jingling your book: "Two cents for such blissfulness, if you please!"

One family I know has a "spot box" into which each member of the family who makes a spot on the table has to put a penny. You might try this!

Or a Sunday-school class might use such a box as a class tax on late-comers, or for those who "forgot" this or that, or for birthday collections, a penny a year. Other ideas will suggest themselves, especially the Thanksgiving side of the plan.

"He who gives a child a book, gives that child wings! A ship! To sail . . ."

(Continued from page 1250)

ous foods. They help to build up resistance to disease, overcome fatigue and prevent such sicknesses as scurvy, and rickets in children.

It is important for the mother to see that her family eats regularly. A good breakfast is necessary and enough time should be allowed so that it is not eaten hurriedly. Cheerful talk at the table will go far toward aiding digestion and the habit of eating fast can be discouraged by the mother. "Like father, like son" is seen in many families where the head of the home signifies distaste for certain foods. The children think they can say of milk, or spinach, fish or rice pudding, "But daddy doesn't like it!" The mother, in this case, may feel that she is not receiving the support of her helpmate, but if she is a tactful and clever person she may succeed in being a "winner" with him and convince him of the need for taking the lead in enjoying a well-balanced diet.

Proper nourishment has so much to do with the prevention of sickness that every housewife should feel her responsibility in planning the meals. The National Tuberculosis Association with its 1500 state and local associations has found that food plays an important part in the prevention as well as the cure of tuberculosis. Its agencies will be glad to help mothers in meal planning and will recommend books that explain food values and give well-balanced menus. In other words, it will help you to "Eat for Health." The educational campaign to control tuberculosis is supported by the annual sale of Christmas seals in December.

Young People and the Kingdom

"Meeting Helps" for Dec. 5 THE UNIVERSAL SYMPATHY OF CHRIST

(Note: These "helps" are built around the material given in "Young People's Leader," the official magazine "For All Baptist Young People." Subscriptions to the "Leader" may be made through the B. Y. P. U. of A., at $1 per year.)

The material given in the Leader is complete and of much interest. The topic presentation may be made in about the same order given there: The information about the book of Luke, the appreciation of this gospel, and the "skill in living" what is learned. When reference is made to scripture passages, be sure to understand these passages and tell those present the stories of the passages if you do not read them. Mere mention of the scripture references is not enough, for they will probably not convey the point which the writer wishes to bring out.

Perhaps there is one point which may be added to "Skill in Living" as given in the Leader. Dec. 5 is Golden Rule Sunday, when every family is asked to eat a frugal meal and give the difference in cost between this and the usual meal to the Near East Relief. If this project has not been presented to your church, one good outcome of your meeting might be the practice of Golden Rule day some time the following week. All the young people could be urged to have bread and milk for one meal during the week, this meal to be representative of what the people in the Near East have as a regular diet. The money saved should be turned over to the treasurer of the society, who can send it on to the Near East Relief, 151 Fifth avenue, New York City. From this organization material can be obtained giving further suggestions for Golden Rule day and telling something of the work being done for the needy of the Near East.

Try to show the young people that no matter what they do through the regular channels of the society and church, they are helping in the sympathetic way of Christ. Bring in the giving of baskets to the poor, the giving of money through the benevolent budget of the church to missions, the holding of services at hospitals and homes and for shut-ins, the teaching of Sunday-school classes, the sponsoring of junior or intermediate societies, the attending of church services, the following of daily Bible reading and prayer, the study of missions—all of these will help to make the individual sympathetic with his fellow man. Incidentally, in doing these things they will follow the Christian Life Program.

*Whom the heart of man shuts out,
Sometimes the heart of God takes in,*

November 21 Topic THE THANKFUL HEART

November 28 Topic
FOLLOWING THE FRONTIER
For a full treatment of these topics see Young People's Leader.

*And fences them all 'round about
With silence 'mid the world's loud din.*

Practicing the Golden Rule

As is suggested in "Meeting Helps" on this page, the young people are asked to cooperate in the matter of "Golden Rule Sunday." Here is a time when the Golden Rule about which we so often speak, may be put to practical application. Briefly stated, we are asked to eat the sort of a meal which the people in the Near East eat regularly and to give the difference in cost between this and our regular meal to the Near East Relief to help provide food for those who do not have it.

Last year the Tacoma (Washington) young people of all denominations led in the amount of money raised by 76 per cent of the city's population. This is the way they did it: Financial appeals were made and pledge cards passed out by special speakers going to every church (Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, Mormon, Greek Orthodox, and Buddhist), every Sunday school and young people's society, every public and private school, every club or society of whatever nature, and through special dinners, teas and luncheons. Golden Rule packets containing leaflets telling of the purpose, the work and the results of the Near East Relief work, were distributed to every home in the city, through some of the groups mentioned above. The newspapers gave space liberally to the cause. Pictures, stories, and other announcements were made through the daily papers, and also through special papers of business organizations, churches, schools and clubs.

The result was that $15,516 was raised for the Near East Relief. One of the Tacoma young people was sent to the Near East to make personal observations of the conditions and the work which the Near East Relief is doing there. Your group has a chance for some award this year. Send for a packet of materials to the Near East Relief, 151 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Let the Young People Speak

In answer to the question, "What is your idea of a live Bible school?" the following replies were made by young people of the Pittsburgh Association.

1. "One with peppy and varied opening exercises and plenty of Sunday-school socials for different departments during the year."

2. "A peppy session with a good, live orchestra and teachers who know what they are talking about and are able to apply the truth of the Bible to young people's lives in this modern scientific age. Young people are interested in service more than doctrine."

3. "A school which is well organized; one in which every person in the school has a job and is on the job, be it great or small, under the leadership of a consecrated, live, wide-awake superintendent and pastor, all working together for the good of the kingdom of God."

4. "Have all of the offices held by members of the school, and if possible by young people, and have stunts at least once a month. Start all meetings at appointed time."

5. "One that is ready to try anything once. One that is trying to hold its young people's interest and enthusiasm by being up and ready to accept the new things and not holding to the old cut and dried methods entirely. A Bible school that is willing to let the young people take an active part."

6. "The young people want the truth presented in an interesting and practical way so it can be understood. They want the school conducted in a way that will give them an active part in the work. They want instructors whose lives conform to their teachings."

7. "If the teacher would study her lesson at home instead of coming and reading to us the notes in her quarterly, it would help matters considerably. We can read for ourselves and we expect her to give us something besides second-hand information. Why not eliminate all the quarterlies and use the Bible? I consider it more interesting."

8. a. "A business-like organization of departments. b. Class organizations and outside activities. c. Four big times a year: Children's day, the picnic, rally day, and Christmas. d. Teachers who want to teach. e. A monthly teachers conference. f. A definite program or aim throughout the year. In short—guided action!"

9. "Don't have too much routine! It's uninteresting!"

10. a. "Studying Bible, more consecration to the work. b. Missionary study, teachers' training class. c. Teaching of reverence, how to worship, to the younger ones, and training of leaders. d. As many workers in the Sunday school as you can possibly get. e. A vision, a desire to bring in more. f. A school conducted along social, mental, physical, and spiritual lines to take care of all. g. A workers' library, up-to-date in constant use. h. Cooperations."

Churches at Work

If your church has developed interesting and effective methods of carrying on its work, we shall be glad to give an opportunity of telling other churches about them through the medium of this page. Material should be addressed to the Board of Missionary Cooperation, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

MORE ABOUT

THE WORLD TOUR

People are inquiring about the much talked of Northern Baptist airship, "Evangel." They want to know whether there is to be an airship and if they could make preparations to be absent from home during the month of January. They don't pack any trunks for this voyage or neglect to order coal enough, although you are going around the world. The only thing necessary is to buy a ticket which will entitle you to a berth on the log. Then settle down and enjoy a more comfortable trip around the world than the most alluring of the travel posters advertise.

RESULTS OF THE

EVERY-MEMBER PLAN

We have cited on this page many instances illustrating the every-member plan in operation. Other examples of churches which use the plan with beneficial results have been brought to our attention. After the adoption of the plan at Tabernacle church, Utica, N. Y., the number of leaders was increased from eleven to sixty-five. The work was multiplied proportionately and the tasks assigned were not too great for any one. Many who had been irregular in attendance came back to the church services. The inactive list was greatly reduced. There was a great gain financially. During the every-member canvass pledges increased about $2200, with about 100 new subscribers. There was an awakened interest in the financial situation and for the first time the church was able to meet its missionary quota in

The pastor of Baptist Temple, Charles-ville, Va., heartily endorses the plan and calls it an absolute necessity. From 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the members of this church are subscribers of record in the unified current budget.

As a result of the plan, the number of members at Tioga church, Philadelphia, was almost identical with the number of members.

The budget of First church, Dayton, was oversubscribed by between $1000 and $2000 and it is hoped that the next year will reach $5000.

At Chestnut Street church, Philadelphia, the fact that it uses the every-member plan and that practically 100 per cent of the membership is contributing.

After the adoption of the plan in First church, Bloomington, Ill., the current expense budget was raised from $5000 to $10,000 and the money was contributed more cheerfully than ever before. As a further result the church's allotment for missions was oversubscribed, congregations are filling the church, and membership has increased 15 per cent.

First church, Sacramento, Calif., and First church, Visalia, Calif., report that since using the plan they are in a better financial condition than ever before.

Gove G. Johnson, pastor of Immanuel church, Washington, D. C., declares that the plan has been and is a blessing, and that it has developed a sense of responsibility and unity in his church.

Since adopting the plan, First church, Sioux City, Iowa, is in better financial condition than it ever has been and in spite of a financial depression, the church morale and expectancy are much better. It had a fine year due to the plan.

These are only a few of the many churches which have used the every-member plan with beneficial results, but facts such as the above are hard to dispute and the success of the plan is undeniable.

FACTS TO CONSIDER

F. A. Agar reported at the Chicago conference that 27 per cent of Baptist churches have less than fifty members each; 24 per cent have between 50 and 100 members; 36 per cent have between 100 and 300 members; while only 13 per cent of churches in the Northern Convention have more than 300 members. Doctor Agar also stated that out of every dollar contributed by Northern Baptists, eighty-five cents is devoted to local expenses and only fifteen cents to missions and benevolence. In the last five years contributions for local church expenses increased 130 per cent whereas contributions for missions increased only 50 per cent.

A GOOD SUGGESTION

In the weekly paper of Rutherford church, the pastor urges, "Shall we not strive, by example and service, to make this the goal of our church: 'Every member a worshiper, every worshiper a giver, every giver a worker, every worker a spiritual force.'"

LIVE SPIRIT

IN STATE CONVENTIONS

All field workers report exceptional interest in state convention meetings this fall. Attendance has been larger than usual and in all parts of the country the work has been planned on lines that attract the attention of the community. The suburban work which had prominent place in the discussions at the September conference in Chicago is an example. The state convention not only brings into mutually helpful relations all the members of a family of churches, but it is the organization that links the individual church with the nation-wide and world-wide activities of the denomination. The state secretary is the friend of every Baptist minister and the state office is a service bureau for the local church. Every imaginable problem that arises in church life, from the case of the young man who needs help in preparing for the ministry, to the erection of a new church building, comes up for consideration in the state convention headquarters. Missionary effort, evangelism and religious education are promoted, stewardship developed, conferences are arranged and led, summer assemblies managed, missionary speakers engaged and supplied and literature distributed by the state secretary. In practically all of these activities the state conventions and the national societies cooperate. The state office is the collecting agency for all denominational missionary funds, receiving and transmitting the money contributed for every form of Baptist work. In short, the thirty-six state conventions are the channels through which flow the life currents of the denomination.

Jesus

*NEARER than the dearest brother,
Father true, or saintly mother,
Lovelier than any other
Is Christ Jesus.*

*From the morning's first awaking,
Through each daily undertaking,
Christ with me his home is making—
My Friend, Jesus.*

*Sympathy he gives in sorrow,
Needed strength from him I borrow;
Yesterday, today, tomorrow,
The same Jesus.*

*Blessed peace comes with believing,
From his hand all things receiving,
Life and love through him achieving—
My Lord, Jesus.*

*When I reach the realms so vernal,
Dwelling safe mid joys supernal,
There I'll laud, through years eternal,
My King, Jesus.*

Among Ourselves

World Tour of the Airship Evangel

By M. E. McINTOSH

AWAY from the beaten track of tourists, those who take the January cruise around the world with Northern Baptists will experience a stimulation of interest that the usual traveler does not know. The first stop will be in a part of Europe that most of us know little about and which is perhaps farthest from our thoughts when we relate mission work in distant fields to that of the churches at home. Yet the brief stay at this out-of-the-way place in Europe will prove how closely connected in reality are all denominational activities, and will afford a fresh demonstration of the fact that all our neighbors are not in view from the front window of the house in which we live.

As the journey around the world is to be made in the thirty-one days of January, it is necessary to have an airship. It is also evident that no existing ship built to navigate either air or water could possibly carry all the Baptists who will want to go, and therefore a new type of aircraft had to be invented for the occasion. In advance of the sailing date it will be best not to describe too fully this extraordinary ship, which, in truth, will vary in design, capacity and appointments, according to the state of mind of the passenger. It is sufficient to say that the airship Evangel will not be crowded, even though every Northern Baptist and all his relatives take passage. Really, all other inducements to travel seem to lack interest when one considers all that the Evangel has to offer in the way of accommodations. Think of a ship that does not for a moment deprive the passengers of the comforts of home, which is safe beyond any other means of transportation and yet so swift that it can carry you across the sea as quickly as imagination can waft one to the land of his dreams. Imagination, it should be pointed out, is more important than baggage for the full enjoyment of this cruise and a frame of mind not too matter-of-fact will tend to make all the passengers contented.

It is probable that this is the only important cruise announced for the winter that may be enjoyed by every person who reads about it. Neither age, condition of the pocketbook nor any other consideration will bar a single person who wants to go. It is necessary only to give in your name for passage on the trip. This will entitle you to receive a ticket and a little later the ticket coupon should be exchanged for a copy of the log of the airship Evangel. The log, in more ways than one, is the substance of the Northern Baptist World Tour. As its name indicates, it is a journal of the voyage, and the promise is made that those who read each day in January the brief chapter set down for that day will at the end of the month have seen with the mind's eye every part of the world where Baptist missionaries are preaching and living Christ. Not only places and a swiftly unrolled panorama of the world, but missionary activities in all the regions seen will pass in review.

The denomination has received with every manifestation of interest the announcement of plans for this world tour and the indications are that it will prove an unusually effective method of presenting the Northern Baptist task as a whole. Supplementary reading will add much to the enjoyment of the log and to meet the expected demand for more detailed information regarding different fields, THE BAPTIST will publish in each January issue special articles bearing on the itinerary for the current week. For the occasion a special price is made of five cents per copy when ordered in bundles of ten or more copies to one address, money accompanying order.

West China Letter

By JOE TAYLOR

JUST now we are in the midst of anxious times. Political conditions have changed as a result of the success of the anti-northern campaign engineered by Jiang Kai Shek of Canton. His troops have gotten as far as the Yangtze river after a campaign in the province of Hunan; it is rumored that they have reached Hankow and utterly routed Wu Pei Fu from that important center. Their getting this far into central China must, of course, affect the military and political situation in Szechuan. The question now discussed among the military leaders in this province is, which side shall they choose? If Wu Pei Fu has been driven out of the Wuhan center, and the national army is now in

The Golden Rule Children

By MARY CAROLYN DAVIES

*A tattered wistful child peers now
In your lighted window shine.
You turn away, "Well, anyhow,
He is not mine."*

*"I did not make the war which brought Such ruin to his curly head.
If nations did as nations ought,
No child would lack for bread."*

*You turn away, and you forget.
Your little ones romp through the door.
They will not see, nor you—and yet
Forevermore*

*Dead children on your step will lie,
Dead faces at your window wait.
Oh, let us help them, you and I,
Before it is too late!*

control, his adherents in Szechuan have to find shelter somewhere. As far as one can learn, some of them are declining for the southern cause. Our difficulty comes when some of them refrain from doing this. If all the militia leaders in this province go over to either the North or the South, there is little likelihood of there being any fighting in our neighborhood; but if part of the flop one way and the remainder take the other side, there is possibility of revolutions. In addition, we hear that a Chinese general—our old-time friend, Yang Sen—fired on British steamers at Wanhsie a city in eastern Szechuen. The British returned the fire. The steamers were held by General Yang; the British sent a party of marines to rescue the officers, the steamers who were virtually held prisoners on the bridges of their vessels. In the attempt at rescue several British officers were killed or wounded. They started a boycott at Chungking and a number of British subjects have been sent down river. The Friends' boys' school at Chungking has been looted as the Chinese principal maimed. The latest we hear is that Yang Sen has handed over the two British steamers to a third neutral party. On the top of this we learn that Wu Pei Fu has "come back" and has driven the southern forces out of Wuchang; while Sun Chuang-fang has gone over into Hunan from Kiangsi to get at the rear of Jiang Kai Shek's forces and thus get them into nut crackers.

All this has its repercussion in this city. We have been regaled with news and rumors—mostly the latter, which do much harm. Representatives of several missions working in Cheng have met at the British consulate to discuss the situation and see what should be done. The Chinese have had meetings this week to try to decide what should be their attitude to the foreigners. Lots of bad talk can be heard on the streets. It was proposed to hold a parade tomorrow (Sunday) and oblige our servants to attend. So far as I can learn, the project seems to be "petering out."

One cause of this is said to be the request on the part of the president, Chengtu university (a Chinese institution lately opened) to Gen. Den Shi Hui that the foreigners be not sent away from the city (the principal) wants some of them to teach English in the university! General Den is friendly to the foreigners and has sent his representative more than once to assure them that he is willing and able to protect them. Nevertheless, one mission has decided to send some of the missionaries home. The British consul has urged that the women and children be gotten out of the province, cannot hope that things will improve in the near future.

What to do in the face of these circumstances is the question that mission executives face. We never had a better group of students in West China university. The registration is 250 with over 220 in the union middle school. Are we to tell these young men and boys to go back home, and then pack our trunks and get to Shanghai as best we can? For the going is anything but good. In fact, it is recognized by all of us that we cannot go now. We are bottled up in Szechuan and might just as well decide to carry on for the time being. We shall see what we shall see.

Fundamentally the cause of all this trouble is the self-seeking of the militarists; there is no great difference between them in this respect. They all want to get hold of more territory, to raise bigger armies, to mulct the already impoverished people and to drive back the opposition to their unrighteous rule (misrule). In this connection, I quote from an article (one of a series) which appears in the North China Herald for Aug. 28. The writer heads this series with this caption: "What Is Wrong with China?" He is a Chinese who thinks below the surface and reaches to foundation causes. This is one of his conclusions: "China today needs, above everything else, a spiritual regeneration. There is a great deal of good teaching in our ancient sages; much of our moral and religious wisdom must be preserved. But there is needed a new life, a new motive, a new evaluation of things. Religion alone can do this, for it gives the fighting edge to life. . . . Today many men do not need religion to enable him to be successful in raising crops or securing food supply, but he needs a faith—faith in the eternal justice and righteousness, faith in unchanging truth and goodness and faith in the possibility of making life a worthier thing and the world a better place. It is only on such a foundation that we may hope not only to make China rich and strong, but to build a new Chinese civilization more glorious and more enduring than the one before."

He is right. Above and beyond the pressing needs of this country she needs a deep-rooted faith in justice, mercy and righteousness. That is, she needs a religion adequate to the cure of her social and political evils. She needs regeneration. She needs to be born from above. She has tried nearly every other way of salvation and has broken her shins at the cisterns of this world.

Sooner or later she will come to see that Jesus Christ is the Way out of her political morass; that he is the Truth beyond all speculation and philosophizing; that he is the Life of the soul of a nation even as he is of the individual. And, it is but fair to say, those nations of the West who have done despite to this land and people need this same experience in their corporate life. I sometimes wonder which nation of the world will first become Christian. What is the name of that people that will absolutely abandon itself to the dictates and teachings of Jesus Christ? Will it be of the West or the East? Will it be "Nordic" or of another breed? I am not much concerned either as to its geographical location or as to its racial allegiance. Once there is one nation that acts and lives under the influence of the Spirit of God this old world will have made a leap forward toward complete redemption.

Chengtu, Sept. 25, 1926.

Boston Letter

BY CHARLES H. WATSON
State Meetings at Malden

Our Massachusetts convention was a Boston event. Everything favored a complete success. Weather was salubrious and brilliant. The spacious meeting house at Malden, so complete in its appointments, seemed built for holding conventions. The program so perfectly balanced and so expressive of our aims and interests, was strongly attractive and awakened expectation. But back of all this, there was a pervasive atmosphere of spiritual unity and agreement that prepared the hearers and animated the speakers. Not a moment was given to the thought, or the waste, of contention; everything was helpful.

The First Day

Tuesday was ministers' day. The "old guard" of ministers arrives early, and often the ministers' annual address strikes the keynote of the whole convention. This was true of the address of Pres. N. R. Wood of Gordon college on "The Preacher, a Prophet or an Apostle." He convinced us that the real preacher is both—wisely interpretive, and authoritative in his proclamation of truth and grace of temper. The entire convention seemed but an enrichment and variation of this opening note.

This year, departing from custom, the devotional addresses were given by pastors within the convention rather than by an outside speaker imported for the occasion. The powerful addresses on "The Christ of Personal Experience," "The Great Intimacy," "Christ in Experience," and "Christ Our Motive Power," by G. D. Feagan of Lowell, W. R. McNutt of Worcester, C. T. Brownell of Haverhill and W. D. Goble of Cambridge, four of the younger ministers, made us ask ourselves why we had not utilized our resources in this manner in previous conventions.

Educational

Tuesday afternoon the anniversary proper began. Doctor Main of the Publication Society gave pungent and practical information in his address on the intimate problems of the society. When he had finished, we felt as fully acquainted with our publication work as we ought to be and were fascinated by the teacher and the education.

The evening session given over to the Education Society, brought out the actual work and scope of that organization. Dr. Austen K. de Blois closed his presidency with a masterly address on "The Working Pastor and the Coming Ministry." Dr. Otis W. Foye of Dorchester Temple was elected to succeed Doctor de Blois. The report of Dr. R. L. Webb, our educational secretary, is always intelligent and thorough. His unique position as pastor and instructor of Baptist students in Boston university, gives him such rich and varied contacts and educational opportunities as greatly to magnify his office of usefulness. Rev. Denton J. Neily of Medford, looking through the eyes of a working pastor, gave a realistic view of modern ministry.

Two Banquets

Dr. Everett C. Herrick, new president of Newton Theological institution, was honored by two banquets. The first was held at the Boston city club where 100 ministers attested their affection and confident expectation for Doctor Herrick. The second, was given by 600 Baptist laymen in the heart of the convention anniversary at Malden. The addresses of the new president at both meetings were quietly winsome and kindling, showing a firm grasp upon the possibilities of his task and a brotherly faith in the cooperation of both ministers and laymen in a large plan of achievement for Newton. These meetings proved that there is a solidly growing confidence in Newton's new president.

Wednesday

Wednesday was convention day proper, and drew the largest attendance, filling all available space. Our Baptist governor, Alvan T. Fuller, was a shining addition to the other attractions, and in a warm and semi-humorous greeting, welcomed us to his own church, and al-

BLESS the Lord, O my soul:

And forget not all his benefits:

Who forgiveth all thine iniquities;

Who healeth all thy diseases;

Who redeemeth thy life from destruction;

Who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies;

Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things;

So that thy youth is renewed like the eagles.

Bless the Lord, all his works

In all places of his dominions;

Bless the Lord, O my soul.

Psalm 103

lowed us to share his felicity in being a governor, and a Baptist. He captured Baptists that day, and the following Tuesday took his second term by 180,000 majority. This "well done, good and faithful servant!" was inevitable.

Dr. Ray W. Greene of Worcester, also reelected, presided with genial grace and promptness. The sessions of the convention combine necessary business with all the practical lines of our endeavor, and explain and illustrate a many-sided, yet comprehensive plan of work from "Our Foreign - Born Neighbors" to "Various Activities in Religious Education." During the woman's hour, Miss Margaret Suman, in her gripping speech on "Our Adopted Philippine children," took us to the archipelago.

Our Staff of Leaders

In the demonstrating features of the program, attention is called to the able efficiency of our leaders in the state work. By many successful campaigns Dr. H. A. Heath is a proved and veteran general. But he has in the unusual devotion and industry of his associate secretaries—E. D. Dolan, Isaac Higginbotham, Miles W. Smith and Gertrude Hartley—a staff that makes the leadership felt through the commonwealth. Their contact with the churches is not merely professional, but warm, vital, kindling at every opportunity. And they are at their best in the convention meeting, because welcoming the opportunity to prove the quality of the service that enlists their hearts. They all bring a welcome flavor to our annual gatherings. They seem to come "hot from the oar."

Wednesday afternoon's session was of marked strength and variety. The masterful address of Professor Erb of Rochester Theological seminary on "The New World of Youth" showed a grasp of modern youth and its outreachings that compelled attention. Also Secy. Frank A. Smith of New York added other youth to the movement as he discussed the "Second Generation of the Foreign Born." Evidently both our schools and our mission leaders are sensitive to the modern situation, and are studying it.

Thursday

The general verdict was that the last day brought us to the peak of the convention. It was a spiritual culmination in which all the high lights and evangelistic fervors reached the pinnacle. Field Secretary Dolan opened the session with thrilling messages from a representative group of missionaries. Their brief and incisive addresses touched the heart of the great assembly, and brought a hungry readiness for the remarkable addresses of Dr. Frank W. Padelford and Dr. J. C. Masee on "Education and Evangelism," and "The Unfailing Passion." In masterful strength and warmth of Christian unction they seemed to complete a memorable convention. At the young people's session in the evening, Rev. Charles L. Seasholes, the able young pastor of Watertown, put himself in full sympathy with the ardor of our Baptist youth and the prevailing spiritual note of the meetings in his vigorous address on "Adventure in Religion." Another young pastor, Rev. Thomas S. Roy of Brockton, was the chorister of the convention, and with his rousing leadership and devotional chorals selected from our New Baptist Hymnal, kept the service of praise hearty and worshipful. When the people sing because they love to sing, and know their hymn is worth singing, you get something in praise altogether beyond the quartets and the soloists.

Now the notable concourse of people scatters refreshed and uplifted after the "feast of days," the churches to carry forward their shining standards, and their heartened ministers to be again confronted by a "king's task."

Pacific Coast Letter

BY LEONARD W. RILEY

Arnold Bennett Hall

The University of Oregon, at Eugene, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its founding and inaugurated its fifth president, Oct. 18-22. The occasion had a double interest for Baptists, for the first of these presidents, Dr. John W. Johnson, father of Dr. Herbert S. Johnson, was a Baptist, as is the newly installed leader, Dr. Arnold Bennett Hall. Another of the five presidents was a Baptist, Dr. Frank Strong, later chancellor of the University of Nebraska, and well known in the Northern Convention. It is of interest also to know that Doctor Johnson was called from the presidency of McMinnville college to take charge of the new university. The addresses delivered at the recent inauguration would indicate that Doctor Johnson and late Pres. Prince L. Campbell are regarded as the two great leaders of the first half century of the university's career.

The new president, Arnold Bennett Hall, is forty-five years of age and graduated from Franklin college in 1904. While a student at Franklin, he was baptized by Prof. Eugene Stark Gardiner now of Linfield college. He holds also the degree, Doctor of Jurisprudence, cum laude, from the University of Chicago and an LL.D. from Franklin college, conferred in 1924. His teaching has been done in the University of Chicago, Northwestern university and the University of Wisconsin. He has written several books, one being "An Outline of International Law."

The inauguration was an auspicious affair. The procession included the leading educators of the Pacific coast. The installation address was delivered by Pres. C. C. Little of the University of Michigan and was a strong presentation of truth concerning education. Doctor Hall's inaugural address was well received, especially the emphasis which he placed upon religion in education. Approximately 800 persons attended the inaugural banquet in the evening when Gov. Walter M. Pierce and Pres. W. W. Campbell of the University of California were among those who brought greetings to the new president. Dr. Claiborne M. Hill, Dr. Herbert S. Johnson and Dr. Frank B. Matthews, all of whom are graduates of the University of Oregon took part in the program during the week.

Henry Suzzalo

While the constituency of the University of Oregon is rejoicing over the coming of a new chief, that of the University of Washington is in turmoil over the action of the regents in removing Pres. Henry Suzzalo. No charges were brought against the president, and was given no chance to defend himself. The first action gave him indefinite leave of absence on salary. Later this was withdrawn, and the relations severed completely. Reports generally credit Doctor Suzzalo with having done a remarkably good work for the university. The sympathy of the students, alumni, educators and others seems to be with the president. The trouble seems to grow out of personal differences between Doctor Suzzalo and Roland H. Hartley, governor of the state. The dismissal was accomplished through the governor's use of his authority to dismiss and appoint regents of the university. The movement which is now on to recall the governor seems to be popular at present. Whatever the merits of the case may be, no right thinking man can approve the method by which this dismissal was accomplished. Perhaps this incident, regrettable as it is, may lead to a removal of the university from the immediate realm of politics.

Phil S. Sheridan

As one travels through New England he observes along the highways marked for historic spots. These serve to keep alive events which otherwise would be forgotten. The western states have not yet formed the habit of placing the markers, but are making a beginning. Oct. 20th, the McMinnville chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution unveiled a monument on the Tillamook highway west of McMinnville bearing the statement: "This monument was erected to mark the site of old Fort Yamhill, and the house of Gen. Phil S. Sheridan, 1855-1861, 300 yards east of this spot." Some years ago the old fort was removed to the park at Dayton, Ore., where it still stands. It was built in 1856 by General Sheridan. Gen. U. S. Grant was also once stationed there. The presiding officer on this occasion was Mrs. William J. Sly. The address was delivered by Prof. J. J. Horner of Corvallis, Ore. In the audience of more than 500 people, were many Indians from the Grande Ronde reservation near by. They are the descendants of the Coquilles, Modocs, Klamaths and Chinooks who were the original inhabitants of this reservation. In this region of the then "far West" General Sheridan gained much of the experience which made him so valuable in the civil war. This four-ton basalt rock will henceforth keep this fact in the minds of coming generations.

Idaho State Convention

It was my privilege to attend the annual meeting of the Idaho State Convention at Pocatello, as I have done many times before. Another will report the details of this gathering. I cannot refrain, however, from expressing satisfaction with what I saw and heard there. Our brethren in Idaho are working together in a spirit of unity which promises well for the new year. The executive secretary, Rev. W. A. Shanks, has his work fully in hand and has the confidence of his constituency. The program was planned along unusual lines and held the interest of the delegates from start to finish. Idaho Baptists may be expected to put forth their best efforts to measure up to denominational expectations of them. Charles B. Hall, leader in Linfield college building campaign, is at work among these brethren and is meeting with a cordial support from every church and pastor.

New Jersey Convention

UNDER beautiful October skies Baptist churches of New Jersey gathered at Asbury Park in their annual convention. All the glories of Indian summer were reflected in the spirit, fellowship and addresses at the convention.

This state has never known the interference of theological disputes in its deliberations. By common consent all seem to have agreed a long time ago that the convention was a place for discussion of the things of the kingdom of Jesus Christ. With deep spiritual fervor and warm Christian friendliness all met to discuss the "New Day" of Baptist endeavor. Over and over again this note was sounded. All the delegates seemed to feel that now is the moment to stop marking time and to advance in the interests of Christ's kingdom. This major optimistic note was struck frequently. It was a happy, helpful and hopeful convention. The very peaks of our church and denominational life were sealed. The basic things of spirituality, evangelism, mission and education were exalted. "Empowered to Evangelize" was the slogan of the convention, and all felt that the slogan had been sounded in no uncertain tones. At the close of the convention all agreed that the delegates had been empowered to evangelize.

The following speakers took part in the three days' program: John M. Moore, Harold C. Phillips, A. H. Gage, Newton C. Fetter, F. A. Smith, Mrs. George Caleb Moor, P. H. J. Lerrigo, H. Gleiss, E. T. Tomlinson, John C. Hillian, R. M. West.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, H. Theodore Sorg; first vice-president, Mrs. E. J. Roos; second vice-president, F. J. Laventa; third vice-president, Harry A. Marshall; recording secretary, L. J. Beynon; treasurer, Charles D. Brady.

Reports by chairmen of all the committees showed decided progress in the year's work.

Preceding the regular convention, Otto Laegeler, superintendent of young people and religious education of New Jersey, set up for the first time a young people's conference. It was a success beyond all expectations. Over 100 young people gathered on Friday evening and remained until Sunday evening, discussing vital things in young people's work. In this way Mr. Laegeler hopes to build up units of young people in every association organized for definite Christian service.

H. Theodore Sorg, convention president, entertained the ministers at luncheon, Monday, at which time W. H. Bowler spoke. At the same hour Mrs. W. W. Fry, a daughter of the late F. W. Ayer, entertained the ministers' wives at a special luncheon. Mrs. Orrin R. Judd, a minister's daughter, was the speaker. Mrs. Fry, recognizing the value of having the ministers' wives meet more closely in fellowship at the state convention, plans to entertain them each year at the convention.

Mr. Sorg proved himself a great leader. Charles E. Goodall, state executive secretary, received full tribute for his excellent leadership.

The Women's Sessions of the New York State Convention

AT THE women's sessions, between 300 and 400 women, representing the New York district, crowded the lecture room of First church, Rochester, N. Y. Mrs. William Gurley of Troy, president of the Women's Foreign Society of New York district, presided.

One's reverence and respect are enlisted when such women as Miss Lillian H. Eastman, who has given thirty-seven years to work in Burma, speaks. For ten years she labored in the hills with the Kachins, then was transferred to the Kemendine school, Rangoon. As the women of New York district gave a building to Kemendine school as their jubilee gift, it was especially interesting to hear of the enjoyment of the girls and faculty of the school in that building. Miss Eastman inspired her listeners to do more in the future.

Miss Norcutt gave a graphic account of the work at home among foreign-speaking peoples, with North American Indians and with negroes. She cited instances of the work in Christian centers where people of all nations are given not only temporal blessings, clubs and classes, but spiritual teaching that develops the Christian character and brings men, women and children into the Christian church. Miss Norcutt has visited our home mission stations throughout the country and gave firsthand information.

Other missionaries presented were Miss Gertrude Taft of the Americanization department of the Woman's Home Society; Miss Edna Stever, missionary nurse from Gauhati, Assam; and Miss Annie S. Magilton, Nellore, South India. The atmosphere was tense with interest and hearty response to all that was said.

Miss Blackmore from Nicaragua told of her struggles with Roman Catholic domination, how the priests tried to thwart her efforts and persecuted the evangelicals, as the Baptists are called. She cited incidents of desperate illness where the sick who were grudgingly admitted to the government hospital were ill-treated and finally disappeared.

The need for a Christian hospital and a Christian doctor is imperative.

Mrs. St. John, World-Wide Guild secretary, gave a glowing account of the house party held in August at Keuka college, and forecast the fall rally to be held at Albany soon. Miss Alma Noble, national executive secretary for the World-Wide Guild, sounded an urgent call for continued cooperation on the part of the women with the guild and gave encouraging reports of the success of the girls' organization.

At the women's banquet, served by the women of First church, Miss Nellie Prescott was toastmistress. Miss Margarita Moran of Nellore, South India, in a vivid report of the Bible Women's Training school in Nellore, described the types of students, displaying samples of their work. She illustrated her report with stories of individual achievement, and asked in closing, "Does it pay?"

Those who attended the state convention feel that they received an impulse for more devoted service, deeper consecration to the Master and heartier effort to bring in the kingdom of God.

Philadelphia Letter

BY ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

NAAMAN and Nicodemus are neglected characters. They ought to be canonized by the church today. They knew how to live. They avoided extremes. They did not do too much or take too great risks. Christians today who love to play safe ought to have churches dedicated to St. Naaman and St. Nicodemus. This pleasant suggestion was made to our ministers' conference by Norman Thomas of New York. Pleasantly, but with a sarcasm that was biting and an estimate of present-day conditions that was a reflection on the sincerity of our devotion to the principles and spirit that Jesus set before men, Mr. Thomas gave the conference much to think about. He admitted frankly that on the constructive side he had no program to present, but the contrast between the spirit of brotherhood and the actual life, political and social, which we permit and defend was apparent. What is the answer? Shall we play safe like Naaman, or become revolutionists, accepting martyrdom, or shall we see that the kingdom of heaven comes not with observation, that it is a leaven buried in the midst of the meal, a tree whose growth is not apparent from day to day, a social structure that alters with the centuries as individuals more and more accept the mind of Christ?

It is too long since the meeting of the Philadelphia Association to say more about it. There were great sessions, the outstanding moments being a mighty address of J. C. Massee of Boston on evangelism and a sermon by Avery Shaw of Brooklyn that prepared us for an impressive communion service. Next year the association will meet at Grace Temple.

The work of evangelism, stressed at the association, will be emphasized in an afternoon and evening retreat and conference at Grace temple, Nov. 12. George W. McDaniel of Richmond, Va., will be leader. The committee of twenty which is preparing for the day, hopes to see one of the most significant gatherings of the year.

The sesquicentennial draws to a close. It has been a costly affair. A debt of between five and six million dollars must be paid immediately by the city. Resentment has been aroused among some elements of the religious forces of the city because of the open Sunday policy. Patronage from abroad has been limited, probably because of poor advertising. However, this exposition is undoubtedly the greatest since that in Chicago in 1893. It is regrettable that it was opened prematurely, that visitors in the first month saw everything so incomplete that they broadcast a testimony that there was nothing to see. The result of this was calamitous. Since then, the aggregate of finished buildings and exhibits from all over the world has made an exposition that the whole world should see. Perhaps the world may see it, for there is a movement to reopen the exposition next year.

In Mexico the ban was placed on religious services by the church because of governmental policies. At the "sesqui" a similar ban was placed upon exposition affairs by prominent Protestant churchmen because of its open Sunday policy. The working of the ban in each case was similar—no bell book or candle, no worship or leadership until there was repentance. None the less, the religious meetings went on every Sunday. I had the privilege of attending and preaching at the eighteenth Sunday afternoon service of worship, and found the great organ, a reverent choir and audience ready to assist and listen to my message. The attendance at these meetings ranged from a few hundred to eight or nine thousand, according to the weather.

The Social Union held its first meeting, Oct. 28. Harold Philips of Mt. Vernon was the guest of the evening, and gave a challenging talk on "Is our religion adequate?" After a clever introduction he took us back to the time when Assyria invaded Israel and the question of the adequacy of their religion pressed upon the people. It was Isaiah, enlarging the conception of God from a tribal deity to a God of the whole earth in whose hand Assyria was only an instrument, who proved that religion could be adequate for the new and trying moment. The Assyria of today is science, sweeping over the minds of men with mighty materialistic claims. We must have a larger religion for these days. It is not a new God we need, but a larger conception of God. The God of the scriptures is adequate. Some of the theological conceptions of our forefathers are inadequate. We must not get away from the Bible, but must give the Bible thought opportunity to grow in our minds, even as the seed grows. The oak is not unfaithful to the acorn, it merely gives it larger expression.

Among the guests welcomed were Austen K. deBlois, new president of the Eastern Theological seminary, and H. F.

Stilwell, who has come to the seminary to give the students the benefit of his experience in evangelism. Besides these the faculty of both the Eastern Theological seminary and Crozer were seated at the guest table. Some one remarked that the theology of that table looked Mosaic. Others suggested that if they would only say what they thought, it would belong to Revelation.

Herbert Haslem, a graduate of Newton Theological institution last year and assistant at the Newton Center church, was ordained to the ministry in the Gethsemane church, Oct. 20.

Memorial church has called J. Ellson of Baldwinsville, N. Y., as pastor. Mr. Ellson is a young man, a graduate of Colgate, I believe, and a son of B. I. Ellson, pastor of South Broad street. He comes back, therefore, to familiar ground. The friends of Memorial church are prepared to give him a royal welcome. They feel that the needs there are critical, but the condition is not hopeless. He will have a splendid people to work with.

In Roxborough three churches of different denominations are engaged in building operations. The church under the leadership of J. Foster Wilcox is putting up a $150,000 building for Sunday-school and social purposes. Mr. Wilcox reports an encouraging and stimulating atmosphere in the community.

Calvary church, Norristown, Henry G. Weston Smith, pastor, is always putting on new and attractive programs. The latest I have observed was the presentation on two successive Sunday evenings of Channing Pollock's plays, "The Fool" and "The Enemy." These were given with the aid of the stereopticon and attracted a large audience. Mr. Smith is making a great place for himself at Norristown.

In the sesquicentennial exposition there is an interesting exhibit of Devitt's camp for the treatment of tuberculosis, Allenwood, Pa. Some years ago a youth, William Devitt, fired with the ambition to become a foreign missionary, attended Bucknell university and later the medical school of the University of Pennsylvania. However, Doctor Devitt found his sphere of service in Philadelphia. Here he found cases of tuberculosis, and did not consider the treatment given at that time sufficient. Hence he started a camp for tubercular patients at Allenwood, in the mountains of Union county, near Bucknell. One of the features that Doctor Devitt has insisted on is the use of small cottages rather than a big building. Today, less than fifteen years after its founding, an up-to-the-minute sanatorium with accommodation for 130 patients, with a plant worth more than $200,000, is performing miracles for suffering humanity. The entire institution has been built from the contributions of public spirited people who were anxious to help the work, and under its charter no one can ever make any profit from it.

Doctor and Mrs. Devitt are members of Manayunk church, Philadelphia, G. Morton Walker pastor.

Dr. Robert Harper

IRELAND in the "eviction days" 1885 was seething with turmoil. At the center of this turmoil were the royal Irish constabulary. Robert Harper, then a lad of nineteen, seeking the "great adventure" as was his nature, joined the R. I. C. secret service. After seven years he was transferred to Canada as an officer of the northwestern mounted police. Then he heard the call to Christian work. This carried him through Woodstock to the Detroit College of Medicine, then out, still seeking the great adventure, finding it on the Shan plateaus, Burma, northeastern frontier.

When Doctor Harper first went to Kengtung, it was six weeks' journey from Rangoon. At Namkham his hospital was the medical outpost. Yet like his Master, the healing of bodies was for him mainly an opportunity to win men. Having won them, he was interested in anything that would help them into a larger life. The building of two hospitals and many school buildings and the bringing of greater economic independence through the introduction of an improved loom, were part of his work.

For several years before he came home on furlough, he had worked at Namkham, a frontier station two miles from the Chinese border. In this trading center and important military post, he treated each year about 8000 patients in the mission hospital and town dispensary and visited several hundred patients in their homes, proving by the results he obtained that medical work is a strong evangelizing agency.

Because of its location in such an unsettled region, Namkham has been the scene of several rebellions. In the Doctor Harper was often the "preserver of the peace." In March, 1922, he rendered definite service to the government when a prince of the dethroned royal family of Burma who had been living in Indo-China suddenly appeared with his followers near the Namkham station. Only a handful of Indian troops were at hand. Doctor Harper warned the military authorities of the danger by his messages. A fellow missionary thus describes Doctor Harper's part in what followed: "Our own Doctor Harper took command of this small native band and meeting the 'army' outside the town called a parley. Time was the big thing until help could come up from the plains, and Doctor Harper got it. He found the demands of the attackers written in Chinese and insisted that he could not deal with them until they were translated into Shan—not the shortest task in the world! Before it was finished the reinforcements arrived. Doctor Harper has received honorable mention from the government for his creditable part in the affair and a gold Kaisar-i-Hind medal which is no doubt in part a result of his action."

Doctor Harper had heart trouble a year ago which forced him to return to America, but he kept on fighting and he just agreed to do extensive deputizing work when Sunday, Oct. 10, he died. True to Ireland, he sought the heat conflict. He found his soul's satisfaction in the forefront of his Master's "far-flung little line." A good soldier has been promoted.

Lucius E. Ford

An Appreciation

By HARLAND K. TUTTLE

Rev. Lucius E. Ford, pastor of the First church, Salamanca, N. Y., for the past three years, died suddenly of heart disease at the home of his brother-in-law, Dr. George R. Turk, in Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 1. He was sixty-four years old. The first sign of illness came to him Sunday morning, Aug. 29, while he was in Charleston, Ill., where he had come to lecture on stewardship. He was seized with a heart attack on Sunday morning on the platform of First church just before he was to lecture. Acting on the advice of his physician, he cancelled all engagements and started homeward. He arrived in Buffalo Wednesday noon and was apparently improved in health, but about eight-thirty that evening he suffered another heart attack ending in death.

Mr. Ford was born, May 10, 1862, at Aron, N. Y. He received his college and seminary training at Colgate university. During his course there, he was pastor of First church, Clinton, N. Y., two years. His first pastorate after leaving Colgate was at Williamsville, N. Y. He found that church practically closed, but after four years of labor made it a going concern and it has been ever since. His next pastorate was at Glenwood church, Buffalo, where he remained ten years. He next became pastor of First church, Brockport, N. Y., where he remained eight years. From there he went, in 1915, to Johnson City, N. Y., where he remained until December 1922, when he left to take up the work at Salamanca where he was living at the time of his death.

While he was pastor in Brockport, that the writer became converted to Christ under his ministry. It was because of the great encouragement and leadership which his pastor gave at that time that he was led to give his life to the ministry. At least a half dozen men are in the ministry today because they were led by Mr. Ford to take up the work. He advised every one who felt called to the ministry to the best possible preparation. He led the men who had gone into the ministry under him my "boys." No man is more proud of his own sons than he is of his spiritual sons, and they loved him in return. When he went to Brockport, he found that the church there had been divided some time before but he was blessed in seeing the factions again united in a strong church.

At Johnson City Mr. Ford accomplished another great work. The membership of the church was doubled and a $10,000 educational building erected. He also organized a teacher's training school and for some time his church received more graduates from that class than any other church in the Northern Baptist Convention. A storehouse tithers' association was also organized at Johnson City, the first of its kind to be organized in a Baptist church in the state.

In his pastorate at Salamanca he was blessed in seeing a decided increase in church membership, and a big debt which had been hanging over the church for years lifted. There he also organized a teacher's training class and a tithers' association.

Mr. Ford did considerable lecturing. Stewardship was the subject of greatest interest to him during the last years of his life. He lectured on this subject in many churches in the Northern Baptist Convention and also organized many storehouse tithers' associations. Last summer Mr. Ford served as instructor in stewardship in the summer sessions at Cook academy, Colgate university, and at the pastors' conference at Keuka assembly.

At the time of his death Mr. Ford was president of the Cattaraugus County Ministerial Association and head of the department of stewardship of the state of New York.

In 1884 Mr. Ford married Elizabeth Lester and to them were born two children, Julia Ford, Buffalo, N. Y.; and Mary Ford who died in 1916. Mrs. Ford died in 1890. Four years later he married Ivetta Main who survives him with their three children, Harrison, Milwaukee; Paul, Easton, Pa.; and Elizabeth, who lives at home.

James Jackson Bristow

By HENRY G. SMITH

JAMES Jackson Bristow was born in Shelbyville, Ky., Jan. 11, 1848. He was of revolutionary ancestry and was a relative of Pres. Andrew Jackson. In early childhood he moved with his parents to Girard, Ill. At the age of fourteen he was converted and united with the Baptist church. Later he entered Shurtleff college, taking his academic, collegiate and theological training in that institution. He graduated in 1881 and began active pastoral work.

After service in Goshen and Waverly, Kan., New Berlin and other points in Illinois, he held pastorates at Fairview, Kan., Superior, Plainview and Plattsmouth, Neb. In 1908 he took up his residence in Lincoln, uniting with the Second church. He was strongly evangelistic in his ministry, and, as a result of his efforts, 1500 converts accepted Christ and were baptized.

Mr. Bristow was married to Miss Sarah F. Douglass of New Berlin, Ill., Jan. 5, 1887. Two daughters were born to them, Mrs. O. E. Kingery and Mrs. Parker Wickstrum, both of Lincoln.

He was chaplain of the Nebraska senate, 1915-1919. He was an active and enthusiastic worker in the temperance cause from his early manhood until his death.

The last sixteen years of his life were given in devoted service to the inmates of Lancaster where for sixteen years he taught a large Sunday-school class of men and labored for their welfare throughout the week, giving practically all his time to them without compensation and at his own charge.

The Hope of Hungary

By E. H. DUTTON

THE Baptists are the hope of Hungary. Our three days' visit with Baptist leaders of Hungary comprised a succession of experiences of the rarest Christian fellowship.

On the arrival of our train at Venice and at Budapest, we were met by Rev. Attila Kopjak, "the grand old man" of Hungarian Baptists, his son and an interpreter. These friends brought us to the home of Mr. Udvarnoki, president of the Baptist Theological seminary of Hungary. His home is in the seminary building, beautifully situated facing the Danube river and the parliament buildings stretching along the opposite banks. Brother Udvarnoki also carries the responsibility of the pastorate of the First church in Budapest. Like Brother Kopjak, he is the head of a large family of young people, who are devoted and talented helpers in the work of the church. One of the boys in each of these families is an intimate friend of the other and both are fine musicians. Since our visit, these two have come to America to complete their training for life work.

On the second day, we were guests with several brethren at lunch in the home of the pastor of the First German church which is a strong, well established congregation with an attractive house of worship. This pastor and his wife are great souls and gracious hosts.

The same afternoon we journeyed to Kiskoros, a typical Hungarian village of 15,000 inhabitants where the largest Baptist church in Hungary is located. Our companion on this journey and guide throughout the following day was the beloved pastor of this church, Rev. Mr. Baranayay, who completed his training in the Southern Baptist seminary at Louisville and is one of the three or four outstanding leaders among the Baptists of the land. They have completed a new house of worship, a handsome structure of tinted stucco within a court surrounded like most of the dwellings by a high stone wall.

It was harvest time and the people had to work in the fields until dark, but approximately 200 people attended the regular midweek meeting that night. The women wore quaint, peasant costumes with figured kerchiefs about their heads and the men appeared in plain homespun. Many of the men and women were barefoot, but the faces of all I could see revealed the inner joy of transformed, triumphant souls. To hear them sing lifted one into the heavens. It was a privilege to address them, but a greater privilege to meet many of them afterward, even though we had to depend upon an interpreter for conversation. They were not satisfied with one address, but kept calling for answers to certain questions such as: "What makes America great?"

This splendid church maintains regular preaching stations in several neighboring villages as do all of the seventy Baptist churches of Hungary that are fortunate enough to have pastors. Each of them maintains services in from three or four to more than twenty outstations and in many cases the total number of baptized members in these surrounding villages is greater than that in the church of the center. They reported last year 390 outstations. All members are expected to witness for Christ, and the consequence is shown by the rapid increase of Hungarian Baptists, especially since the dismemberment of the empire by the Versailles conference.

On the last night of our visit, we attended another such meeting in the First church in Budapest. Here we found nearly 300 people present, most of them humble city dwellers but exhibiting the same spiritual qualities as we had found in the faces and the voices of the villagers at Kiskoros. At this meeting an orchestra of young men made a fine contribution to the service and the choir of fifty voices sang several anthems with musical skill and spiritual power. They told me that on Sundays this church is unable to accommodate in the auditorium the people who attend and is obliged to conduct an overflow service.

In both of these churches young people predominate, and their numbers and spirit constitute a basis for the expectation of a continued growth in numbers and power of the Baptists of Hungary.

In the countries cut off from the motherland, amazing growth also is recorded; for instance, in Roumania there were less than 200 Baptists in 1920, but today there are 15,000; 9000 of this number were brought under Roumanian rule by changes in boundary lines, and more than 1000 have been added by baptism each year since despite severe persecution.

Baptist Old People's Home

By L. T. FOREMAN, EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

THE annual meeting of the Baptist Old People's Home was held at the home in Maywood, Ill., Oct. 11. The building was attractively decorated and illuminated to welcome the large number of church delegates and visitors who attended. After an excellent dinner, prepared by Mrs. F. W. Whitehouse and Mrs. W. H. Rosecrans and served in the crowded dining-room, George A. Critton, president of the board of directors, called the meeting to order and welcomed the guests, remarking that this was the best annual meeting held in the history of the institution. Instrumental and vocal selections were rendered by the Mathews sisters and Mrs. Walter Bett.

A resumé of the accomplishments of the women's board of managers was given by Mrs. J. F. Keefe, treasurer; Mrs. L. Hyatt, superintendent; Miss Caroline Patterson, president; and Mrs. J. C. Hale, former president. There were three deaths last year at the average age of eighty-three years. During the year applications were received from seventy-nine persons of whom only seventeen could be placed on the waiting list. Eight new members were admitted. The serious need of more room and more funds to carry on the work was evident. A letter of sympathy for her illness was sent to Mrs. P. R. King through whose efforts the furnishings of the assembly room were secured.

Reelected members of the board of directors are L. H. Turner; Dr. J. H. Byrne; Miss C. Patterson; A. Barge; A. E. Wells. L. T. Foreman, executive secretary, reported gifts received during the year, the steady progress of the home, and appealed for the support of the public in a larger way for both the building and endowment funds. John A. Earl, editor of THE BAPTIST, urged the necessity of getting under the burden to provide for the sixty-two aged people who could not be admitted to the home.

George A. Critton gave the statement of receipts and expenditures of the treasurer, L. A. Turner, as verified by the auditor, A. T. Bacon. The total assets, including property, investments and cash on hand, have passed $300,000 with no indebtedness.

H. S. Stewart, pastor of First church, Oak Park, gave the principal address, describing the successful effort of Philadelphia Baptists in raising over half a million dollars for the new plant at their old people's home and stressing the inspiration of such an accomplishment for our present task.

Dr. Mullins in Koenigsberg

By EVERETT GILL

AT Koenigsberg we reached the high water mark in our regional conference tour. We had not had anything quite like it up to this time. The large and magnificent city hall, with a seating capacity of 3000, was crowded with local and visiting Baptists and representatives of all the Christian bodies of the city. It was a distinguished body of Christians.

The choir of 300 voices sang with sweetness and power. The simple dignity was worthy of the occasion. Doctor Mullins' powerful sermon, "The Centrality of Christ" was transmitted forcefully by his interpreter. Speaker and congregation were in perfect rapport. I doubt if our Baptist World Alliance president ever rendered more effective service to the kingdom of God in a single address.

We are on historic ground in more than one sense. This is the home of Immanuel Kant whose memory still broods over the place. This is, likewise, the home city of the Hohenzollerns. The castle where Frederick the Great used to review his body guard of giants is just around the corner. We are in the birthplace of Prussian militarism. This is also the strongest Baptist center of Germany. In this city alone there are 4400 Baptists with six churches, while all East Prussia there are 16,000 Baptists—one-fourth of the Baptists in Germany.

This part of Germany is cut off from the fatherland by a strip of land running up to the Baltic, called the Polish corridor. These Baptists as well as all Prussians, feel keenly the disabilities of

The Baptist

Chicago, November 20, 1926

Vol. VII

No. 42

THE BAPTIST is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 2320 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Rates: Single subscription $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries, postage $1.04 extra; in Canada 52 cents.

Change of address: Old and new addresses should be in our hand two weeks before a change goes into effect. Give key number as it appears on label.

Remittances: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment is through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, add exchange.

Renewal notice will be sent previous to date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should send in renewal promptly or, if paper is not desired send discontinuance order.

Advertising: Display: Per agate line, 30 cents; full page, $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituaries: 100 words free; 4 cents per word for additional; resolutions printed verbatim, 4 cents per word; cash to accompany order.

Correspondence should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, 2320 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

No manuscripts returned unless accompanied by full return postage.

Want Ads

Chaplain Frank M. Wells, "The Soldier Evangelist", National Military Home, Leavenworth, Kan. Twenty-fifth season. Time open for fall and winter meetings with pastor wanting Bible evangelist. Terms: Entertainment and $50 up weekly according to financial strength of church.

In Washington, D. C., Edith Kern maintains a delightful "Home Away From Home" for transient guests—individuals or groups. Running water, private baths. Excellent, inexpensive dining rooms near Garage. Quiet, convenient location near Auditorium and White House. Address: 1912 "G" St., Northwest.

"SERVICE HYMNAL"

acclaimed by thousands of churches as the greatest all purpose hymnal ever used.

672 Pages, 745 Numbers, $1.00 Per Copy. Many old hymns not found elsewhere. Costly binding and clear print. Special discount to ministers, superintendents and choir leaders, in 100 lots or more.

Write for sample copy for examination.

SAMUEL W. BEAZLEY & SON
53 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Ill.

YOU CAN EASILY SOLVE

Your Christmas Program Problem

by selecting any one, or all, of the following Christmas books. Here is a wealth of material, including recitations, dialogues, songs, and playlets, written and presented in simple style—each containing more than enough for your program. Seven books in all.

- (1) The Paramount Christmas Book No. 3 64 pages and cover.
- (2) Two Paramount Christmas Plays 32 pages and cover.
- (3) The Paramount Christmas Book No. 2 64 pages and cover.
- (4) The Paramount Christmas Book 64 pages and cover.
- (5) Ourselves and Others (A Christmas Playlet) 16 pages and cover.
- (6) Two New Christmas Playlets 16 pages and cover.
- (7) Kriss Kringle (Recitations, Dialogues, and Songs) 96 pages and cover.

The price of each of the above books is 25c. Write to your supply house or send direct to

MEYER & BROTHER

56 W. Washington St. CHICAGO, ILL.

situation. They mention it in private and public. It is as if we in America after losing a war were forced to have Texas cut off from the union by a strip of non-American land. It is hoped that through the League of Nations, or otherwise, a peaceable adjustment may be made by which East Prussia may be joined to Germany and yet Poland have free access to a seaport and national safety.

operated the first week in November with other churches in simultaneous house-to-house personal evangelism.

FIRST CHURCH, South Bend, Ind., H. P. Andrews, pastor, began protracted meetings Oct. 31. Mrs. Andrews, pianist, assists.

ENGLISH BAPTIST ASSOCIATIONS report good attendance, and some of them enthusiasm, in the current meetings. Especially, they are giving serious attention to the recent appeal of the British Baptist Union for a religious awakening.

AMERICAN CHRISTIANS are starting a fund to aid in the relief of five million starving Jews of eastern and central Europe.

THE HOME MISSIONS COUNCIL and Council of Women for Home Missions will hold their annual meeting in Philadelphia, Jan. 4-7, 1927. The board of home missions of the reformed church in the United States, Race and Fifteenth streets, has offered its facilities as headquarters for this meeting.

C. L. KLEIN was ordained at First church, Greeley, Colo., Sept. 2. Joshua Gravett of Denver preached the sermon. Horace W. Cole was moderator of the council. Mr. Klein has been for five years a missionary of the Foreign Society in Burma and is highly commended by the society. He is now in Chicago studying, his furlough having been extended for one year's post-graduate work.

Here, There and Everywhere

J. CLARK ORANGER begins his sixth year as pastor of First church, Hammond, Ind. During his five years there, he has welcomed 620 new members, 314 by baptism, bringing the membership from 670 to 1060.

OWEN T. DAY, pastor of Grace church, Spokane, Wash., will assist Edker Burton, pastor at Moscow, Ida., in a two weeks' enlistment campaign. W. H. Fowler and J. Whitcomb Brouger will address a mass meeting of Baptists in the church on the evening of Armistice day.

FORTY-ONE MEMBERS have joined Walnut Street church, Waterloo, Iowa, since Warren L. Steeves began his pastorate there in July. The church is cooperating with the tabernacle meeting held by evangelist Bob Jones.

HOWARD A. VERNON, pastor of Judson Memorial church, Minneapolis, spent eight days the first part of November conducting a special mission with Broadway church, Winnipeg. In his absence, O. Elbert Parker Fitch of Carleton college supplied the pulpit. The church has been conducting a campaign to raise funds to enlarge its building. More than the necessary amount has been raised by selling $100 bonds to church members.

BURT BOUWMAN, pastor of First church, South Bend, Ind., has been elected president of South Bend Mishawaka council of religious education, an organization which has served the South Bend churches for five years, employing a director of religious education and promoting a vacation Bible school, week-day religious education and a training school for Sunday-school workers. Mr. Bouwman was delegate from the South Bend ministerial association to the World Alliance for International Friendship at Pittsburgh, Nov. 10-12.

FIRST CHURCH, Hamilton, N. Y., numbers 100 affiliate members among Colgate university students. The church gave a supper in their honor, and at a mass meeting held in the auditorium of the church, student speakers discussed "At School with Christ."

REVIVAL MEETINGS at Arlington Street church, Akron, Ohio, resulted in thirty-seven additions, and $4019 was pledged toward various church enterprises. Charles E. Hamric, pastor, was assisted in the two weeks' campaign by D. L. Moody, evangelistic singer of Springfield, Mo.

REDEDICATION WAS THE THEME of the 125th anniversary of First church, Portland, Me. The former pastors, Dr. M. J. Twomey, Newark, N. J., and J. H. Thompson, Wollaston, gave addresses. Other speakers were Executive Secretary J. S. Pendleton, of the state convention; Dr. W. H. Jones, Immanuel; Doctor Bradley of State Street Congregational church, Hon. Carl E. Milliken, Sen. Frederick W. Hinckley, Councillor N. W. Allen, representing Portland; Judge Geo. H. Hinckley of the Sunday school and Dr. E. C. Whittemore of the mission board. William S. Jacobs, pastor, closes his work in Portland to enter a pastorate at Cleveland, Ohio.

DR. HENRY CLARKE died at Benton Harbor, Mich., Nov. 3. He was born in Cornwall, England, in 1858, and was a graduate of Rochester university and Rochester Theological seminary. He held pastorates at First church, Stonington, Conn.; Bristol, Conn.; and Racine, Wis.

THE NEW BUILDING of Emmanuel church, Brooklyn, N. Y., Avery A. Shaw, pastor, is under construction. Pledges amounting to $125,161, more than the sum necessary to complete the work, have been subscribed. A new heating system for the entire church plant will be installed.

FIRST CHURCH, Rochester, Pa., W. F. Bostick, pastor, holds church nights with dinners, classes on Baptist history, religious teaching and the "twelve tests of character." F. Andrews of Coraopolis, closes the evening program with addresses on Christian origins. The church co-

Baby Chicks For Sale

Barron strain large type purebred White Leghorn baby chicks, $10.50 hundred. Chicks are very strong and stand cool weather better than hot weather.

Everlay strain Brown Leghorns, $11.50 hundred.

Sheppard strain single comb Anconas, $14 hundred.

Owens and Donaldson strain Rhode Island Reds, $14.85 hundred.

Thompsons strain Barred Rocks, $14.85 hundred.

White Rocks, $16 hundred.

All good, healthy, strong purebred guaranteed.

We pay postage charges and guarantee live arrival on all baby chicks. Pullets of any breed listed, $1.50 each.

Cockerels, good size, $3 each. Poultry book on feeding and raising chicks and pullets, $3 postpaid.

The Fulghum Hatchery

Freeburg, Ill.

FRESH FLORIDA ORANGES

Fresh Sweet Florida Oranges $3 per box of three hundred large size. Sound fruit and satisfaction guaranteed or money back. We pay express charges. A box of these makes an appreciated Christmas gift.

ACME FARMS,
Gainesville, Florida.

"The best hymnal that America has yet produced."

NOLAN R. BEST.

Hymns of the Christian Life
Edited by

Milton S. Littlefield, D. D.

NEW
YMN BOOKS
OR CHRISTMAS

This book will satisfy you in every particular. Beautifully printed, clear old-type, reinforced binding—498 hymns and Tunes, 45 Chants and responses, 38 Prayers and Collects, Responsive Readings.

Thirty-five thousand copies sold since last February.

Price per hundred $135.00.
Send for Examination Copy today.

A. S. BARNES & COMPANY

7 West 45th Street, New York
Publishers of Hymn Books Since 1855.

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Immanuel Bldg., Chicago.

"Good evening, friends. Tonight we are asking a friend to read you a parable, entitled, 'The White Calf and the Motor Truck.' Here it is:

'Now it came to pass on our journey that we arrived at a certain city. It was early in the morning. As we were leaving the station, another passenger was doing likewise. He was a young calf as white as milk. His bovine countenance showed painfully that he was an inexperienced traveler. He laid hold on our sympathy, for we recalled certain sallies in our own verdant youth that had been fraught with sorrows.

'Rudely released from a shipping crate, he was unceremoniously launched head-first into a waiting motor truck. The truck was walled about to restrict his migratory habits. Otherwise he would have gone elsewhere under his own power at once. Before he could take a mental inventory of his tormenting environment, the vehicle coughed ominously, then proceeded slowly up a long incline lined with cobblestones. Thereupon our unhappy fellow-traveler began to wobble about after the manner of men who respect not the eighteenth amendment.

'At this juncture he suddenly evinced a more than ordinary power of adaptation. After the first few bumps and thumps on ribs and nose, he slowly spread his front legs. This steadied his forward gear, but the aft rigging still wobbled sadly. He then spread his hind legs so that with head up and tail a-rising, he passed to his destination braced in all directions. He had provided a defense in time of trouble against a new and hostile environment.

'As we pondered this fleeting observation, it suddenly dawned on us that it would be better for much of human kind if it could develop the power of quick adaptation as this calf did. Without his knowledge or consent he was inelegantly thrust forward to meet an ordeal. Under such surly and harsh treatment he could have let out two grunts and a sad and raucous bawl and collapsed on the spot. We remembered that we had seen and heard humans act thusly.

'But the white calf used self-reliance to meet an emergency. He had no time to consult precedent or ask how other white calves solved similar problems. He was broad-minded. He spread out and was not afraid to cover a larger base. He was a progressive. He refused to be narrow-minded. He gave capital illustration of a primitive and elemental pragmatic instinct. Like an ancient Melchisedek he was suddenly alone, without mother or father, herd defense or the protection of home environment, in a universe of vast energies, deafening noises and infernal smells. So he faced his problem. He projected a program of self-preservation and won the day because he had the wisdom to act on his commendable decisions in a prompt and aggressive manner.'

"The office boy says that if the Baptists of our Northern Convention worked as hard to get subscriptions for THE BAPTIST as the wets over the country work to get names on petitions for the submission of wet and dry referendums, we should soon have 100,000 on the list. But he says the wets are working for something they want—wine and beer—whereas many of our people are only working for the kingdom of God."

"WCOY now signs off. Stop, Look, Listen. Then ACT."

MISS OLIVE ANNETT of First church, Greeley, Colo., has taken charge of the Chinese kindergarten in Seattle. She has had experience teaching among the Russian people in Colorado. She is the seventh young woman to enter religious work since the pastorate of Walter I. Fowle began four years ago.

G. CAMPBELL MORGAN, after a season of notably successful preaching and lecturing in Great Britain, is returning to America. Arriving at New York City from London, Nov. 16, he will speak in Knoxville and Chattanooga, Tenn., Nov. 21-Dec. 3; Harrisburg Pa., Dec. 5-10; Charlotte, N. C., Dec. 12-17; in southern California, Jan. 2-Feb. 25; northern California, Feb. 27-March 11; and for two weeks thereafter at Seattle.

A WEEK OF PRAYER for young men and boys is designated for Nov. 14-20 by the national council of the Y. M. C. A. The leading thought for the week is "Consider Jesus."

A HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLS will soon be on their way to Japan as a friendship offering from the girls of America to the girls of Japan. Here is one of the beautiful pieces of idealism in a more or less sordid world.

THE NATIONAL PARK SERVICE recognizes a board of seven people of different religious affiliations, Protestant and Catholic, who are in charge of all religious work in the Yosemite valley. Catholic services are conducted from six to nine o'clock Sunday mornings; Protestant services from nine-thirty to twelve-thirty; others follow in the afternoon. The attendance throughout the past summer was always larger at the church services on Sunday than at entertainments given during the week in the one theater which is permitted in the Park, and the loose collections at church service were always larger than the door receipts of the theater. The Yosemite valley becoming a place of worship as well as a pleasure.

FROM MISS CORA C. POWELL, Glendale, Calif., comes an interesting note of appreciation for THE BAPTIST. Her grandfather, Rev. Thomas Powell, was sent by American Baptist Home Mission Society to Illinois in 1836 as "exploring agent." With his wife and family, leaving Saratoga Springs, N. Y., he traveled by the Erie canal and the Great Lakes to Chicago, and then by stage to Ottawa. Finding at Vermillionville, a grist mill and a sawmill, the place located at that place.

ANY CHURCH THAT PURCHASES A STEREOPTICON during the next few weeks from the stereopticon department of the Board of Missionary Cooperation will be loaned free the set of New Testament slides made from the paintings of William Hole, the church to pay the carriage each week. There is no manuscript and none will be needed by the pastor. This is a rare offering for Christmas is coming. The stereopticon depositories do not have enough sets of the nativity stereopticon lecture or the Christmas hymn sets to supply the requests. There is no way of providing more. Churches are therefore availing themselves of the opportunity to purchase these sets of colored slides. They may be used at other times as well as Christmas. To have them for Christmas, orders must be sent soon to H. S. Myers, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

LAWRENCE A. SMITH, new pastor of the Laingsburg, Mich., church, was ordained Oct. 26. Officers of the council include Moderator, E. D. Wright, Elsie; clerk, A. K. Scott, Ovid; questioner, H. Morgan, Mt. Pleasant.

Church Furniture

Pews · Pulpits · Chancel Furniture
- Sunday School Seating

American Seating Company

Catalogues on request.
General Offices—1069 Lytton Bldg.
CHICAGO

"Pews, altars and pulpits from the largest exclusive church furniture factory. Write for catalog and particulars. Manitowoc Church Furniture Company, Waukesha, Wisconsin."

CHURCH FURNITURE

Everything for Church and Sunday School use. From Factory to You. Fine catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co.
1117 South 4th St., Greenville, Illinois

FOLLOWING A CUSTOM OF several years, the conferences were conducted simultaneously in Elim church, Minneapolis; A. Arlander, pastor, and in First Swedish church, St. Paul, J. G. Oster, pastor, Oct. 19-24. Speakers were Frank Linden, Chicago; Ellis Eklof, Stromsberg, Neb.; Min Holmer, Topeka, Kan.; P. G. Nelson, Cokato, Minn.

FIRST CHURCH, Grants Pass, Ore., Claude Mosher, pastor, presented its yearly report, Oct. 7, by means of a chart twelve feet on which the reports of the various departments of the church were placed. A picture of the church building, occupied the center of the chart, and from it flowed rivers of living water, culminating in the reports. The church has 230 members.

EVANGELIST AND MRS. L. D. LAMKIN have been conducting a successful revival at Howard Park church, Springfield, Ill.

DURING THE FIRST six months of his pastorate at Puyallup church, Western Washington Association, H. W. Arthur, formerly of Vancouver, B. C., has given the hand fellowship to thirty-four members, ten baptisms; Sunday-school and B. Y. P. U. membership has increased; forty members have been added to the B. Y. P. U.; the man's missionary society has been reorganized; and improvements have been made on the church. A strong missionary and evangelistic spirit prevails.

H. BAYLES, HURON, S. D., who has for number of years served as director of religious education for South Dakota, began his work in October as director of religious education for both North and South Dakota.

THE RECENT STATE Christian Endeavor convention held at Bellows Falls, Vt., proved almost like a Baptist gathering. For John M. Maxwell and his people of the church were much in evidence. For B. Glynn, president of the Vermont Convention and of the Bellows Falls Convention of commerce, extended the welcome. J. J. Fowler of Bristol gave a series of helpful addresses. Horace O. Tatum of Chester held a young people's conference. H. B. Rankin of Ludlow, state publisher, gave helpful advice. Paul Morris, director of religious education and evangelism for the Vermont Convention, conducted conferences on personal religion and Christian vocation. E. W. Brown, pastor of the Main Street church, Portland, and Mrs. Rex. A. Fullam of the church at Montpelier, state field worker, were selected as officers.

I. HALLGRIMSON, pastor at Ellendale, was unanimously approved for ordination by a council of the South Dakota Convention; his ordination took place Nov. 1.

BABCOCK has declined an invitation to his second pastorate with the First church, Chicago, Ill., and will remain with Temple church, Minneapolis, Minn. J. W. Weddell continues as acting pastor at Moline.

ROYAL AND UNITED church membership, and a magnificent church building, and a good "big," reports Robert H. Byler of his first field at Carthage, Ill. Mr. Byler came to Missouri, Sept. 1, to enter upon his Illinois pastorate. He is a graduate of William Jewell, Kansas City seminary and the Southern Baptist seminary.

EVANGELIST AND MRS. E. G. ALDRIDGE conducted a series of meetings at Ellendale, N. D., during October.

TEN PEOPLE were received into the membership of South Park church, Los Angeles, Calif., Gordon Palmer, pastor, Oct. 20, two by baptism. The junior department of the church reports 132 pupils enrolled and an 85 per cent average attendance of pupils, teachers and officers.

JOHN FISHER, REPUBLICAN candidate for governor of Pennsylvania, has been made a member of Iota chapter of Kappa Delta Rho at Bucknell university.

(Continued on page 1266)

The Saving Sense

"Father, what does apprenticing mean?"

"It means the binding of one person to another by agreement and that the person so bound has to teach the other all he can of his trade or profession, while the other has to watch and learn how things are done and to make himself useful in any way that he can."

"Then I suppose you're apprenticed to mother, aren't you, father?"

Busy Magnate: "Don't you realize that my time is valuable? State what you want. Be short."

Spendshrift Son: "I do. I will. I am."

As we continue our deep study of our international relations in this grave crisis the question sometimes seems to simmer down to this: Shall we cancel the debts or just not get the money?—Ohio State Journal.

Although she has an assortment of hats, she wants a new one.

(That's the woman of it.)

He says he thinks she can get along without it.

We Raise Money

For sixteen years the Ward Systems Company has successfully directed dignified fund-raising campaigns of the higher order. During these years it has raised millions of dollars for Colleges, Churches, Hospitals and Charitable Institutions.

Let Us Solve Your Financial Problems

Our latest Church fund-raising campaign plans have been very successful and economical. Write us stating your requirements. All correspondence treated confidentially. Our latest booklet and confidential analysis blank sent free.

The Ward Systems Co.

28 E. Jackson Blvd., Dept. D., Chicago, Ill.

(That's the man of it.)

She insists that she can't, and she's going to get it.

(That's the woman of it.)

He says, not if he knows it.

(That's the man of it.)

She breaks down and weeps.

(That's the woman of it.)

He gives in.

(That's the end of it.)

—Judge.

Certainly advertising pays! From an exchange the Boston Transcript quotes: "One satisfied advertiser writes: 'I had a gas stove to sell and sent an ad to your paper. The stove was sold several hours before the paper was printed.'"

A Tennessee paper takes the prize for mixed metaphor: "The pale hand of death stalked into our midst last week and fastened its cruel eyes on little Mary Pudley."

Madam Melba tells this story concerning a home concert she attended: "The host was nervous and inexperienced and at the end of a song which one of the guests sang, he rose hurriedly. 'Ladies and gentlemen,' he began. 'Before Mrs. Smith started to sing she—ah—told me her—ah—voice was not in the best condition and—ah—asked me to apologize for it, but I neglected to do so and—ah—I apologize now.'"

A GRATIFYING INCOME

Missionary Annuities have been attractive to hundreds of Baptists. Constant inquiries are made concerning them. Have you the facts?

When making wills please remember the corporate names of your national missionary organizations:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M. D., Home Secretary (re annuities); George B. Huntington, Treasurer, (re wills); 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society, Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th Street, New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society, George L. Estabrook, Treasurer, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention, E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, Frank W. Padelord, D.D., Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

Annuities

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these Single and Double Contracts will be sent to you on request.

"Where your heart is, there should your treasure go."

New Books

The Heroes of Smokeover, by L. P. Jacks.
New York: Doran. $3.

Everything Doctor Jacks writes has a charm and a grip which hold the reader's interest to the last word. This collection of essays is no exception. "To the Stars through Struggle" is the motto of Smokeover, a modern industrial city of a million souls. The motto is clear enough, but in the smoke of the city no one but the heroes seem to see the stars. It is the purpose of the writer to introduce some of the heroes of Smokeover. And the heroes and heroines are real people and not shadowy figures born out of legend and easily lost in the haze that hangs over the city. The limits of this review forbid the mention of names but here are the men and women representative of every industrial center who lead their fellows in thinking, in serving and in good-will. The book is designed on the principle of revealing the fact that prejudice, whether of class or religion, is based upon lack of knowledge. Even the Jesuit is not such a bad sort when seen in the light of acquaintance.

—JOHN EARL.

Music in Work and Worship, by Edmund S. Lorenz. New York: Revell. $3.

From the standpoint of the psychology of the order of service, Mr. Lorenz shows how the organist, congregation, choir, special and incidental church music may enrich true worship. There is no attempt to give technical instruction to experts but rather a sincere, clear presentation of the part music should play in the church worship, in a manner in which those who have had little or no training in the leading of music will find inspiration and assistance.

—F. H. FAHRINGER.

Prohibition at Its Worst, by Irving Fisher. New York: Macmillan. $1.75.

Professor Fisher has been long known as one of America's foremost social statisticians and interpreters. He has brought to this study the training acquired and the material assembled through years of investigation. Under the pressure of the facts brought under review, he has been compelled to change his own attitude toward prohibition. Admitting the imperfect enforcement of the prohibition law, and declaring frankly that the present situation is intolerable, he nevertheless concludes that the policy of prohibition is right and necessary that it has already proved largely effective and beneficial, that the existing law can be enforced and that it ought to be enforced. He faces the opponents of prohibition on their own ground. He meets argument with argument and statistics with statistics. His history of war-time prohibition, which never existed, gives a luminous insight into the reasons why it never existed. He was a member of the official group that tried to secure it, and he knows. This book leaves the Moderation League without a foot of ground to stand on in the field of fact.

—U. M. MCGUIRE

The Monroe Doctrine, Its Importance in the International Life of the New World, by Alejandro Alvarez. New York: Oxford University Press. Probable price, $4.50.

Publication by the Russell Sage foundation is sufficient guaranty that the subject receives thorough consideration, and the author is an international authority on international law. It is a book to be read by thoughtful patriots throughout the American continent. Apparently all possible phases of the subject are treated: its history and practice, meaning carefully and authoritatively defined, attitudes of European and South American states expressed in official utterance, full documentation, comment of representative Americans of nationalities from one end of the American

DORAN BOOKS

New & Distinctive Contributions

The Church and Missions

Rev. ROBERT E. SPEER

A concise study of the missionary motive in the Church, the new demands on foreign missions, and the direct challenge on the mission fields. Net, $2.00

Watching the Cross

Rev. J. D. JONES

The noted English preacher pictures the events in the death of Christ and interprets their meaning with characteristic power. Net, $2.00

The Self Disclosure of Jesus

Prof. GEERHARDUS VOS, Ph. D.

This remarkable presentation shows the place of Messianism in the mind of Jesus. Net, $2.00

1001 Illustrations of Pulpit and Platform

Rev. AQUILLA WEBB, D. D.

A fresh and invaluable collection of illustrations for the use of public speakers. Net, $3.00

New Challenges to Faith

SHERWOOD EDDY

A revelation of world changes and the need for the application of Christianity. Net, $1.50

DORAN BOOKS

The Expositor's Year Book

Edited by Rev. Prof. JAMES MOFFATT, D. D.

A succinct survey of the work done in biblical interpretation and theology during the year 1925. Classified and indexed. Net, $4.00

Making Good in the Ministry

Rev. Prof. A. T. ROBERTSON, D. D.

This appealing sketch of John Mark has a helpful message for every preacher who wishes to make good in the largest sense. Net, $1.50

The Gospel of the Larger World

Rev. F. W. NORWOOD, D. D.

Sermons of force and insight on a variety of interesting themes. Net, $1.75

The Spirit of Christ

Prof. CHARLES R. ERDMAN, D. D.

A new viewpoint of the doctrine and significance of the Holy Spirit. Net, $1.50

Highways of the Heart

Rev. G. H. MORRISON, D. D.

A series of sermons, graphic and stimulating, by a master preacher. Net, $1.50

What to Preach

Rev. HENRY SLOANE COFFIN, D. D.

These first Warrack Lectures delivered by an American throw much light on the kind of preaching needed today. Net, $2.00

Prohibition in the United States

D. LEIGH COLVIN, Ph. D.

An authoritative and exhaustive study revealing the truth about the inception and progress of temperance in America. Net, $5.00

At all booksellers

GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY, Publishers, New York

DORAN BOOKS

THE MEN AND THEIR MESSAGE

BRITISH PREACHERS

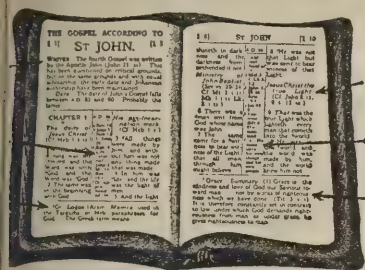

For 1926

SIR JAMES MARCHALAN, Editor

"Any one who wishes to know what the pulpit is saying on the other side of the Atlantic should read this new issue."—Homiletic Review. Second Series $1.

F. H. REVELL CO., 158 5th Ave., N. Y., 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Bible and Commentary combined

Helps on pages where needed

The Scofield Reference Bible

Edited by REV. C. I. SCOFIELD, D.D.

Assisted by Eminent Scholars

Contains chain references, prophecies harmonized, books of the Bible analyzed and many other features every Bible student needs. Made in 40 different styles.

No. 73—French Morocco Leather, overlapping covers, round corners, red under gold $6.50

At all Booksellers or from the Publishers
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
American Branch
35 West 32nd Street, New York

ment to the other. It is interesting to see how clear are the conceptions of the representatives of the Latin American countries on the subject of government and how perfect is their grasp into both the merits and the faults of the Monroe doctrine. In fact the discussion raises not directly but by inference the question how far the principles of free government must look to their preservation in the future to the peoples south of the Rio Grande. One of 100 luminous comments is that Simon Planas Suarez, that from now the Monroe declaration of 1823 must be understood to be supplemented by Woodrow Wilson in 1913: "The United States will never again seek one foot of territory by conquest."

—U. M. MCGUIRE.

Islands of Peru, by Robert Cushman Murphy. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Probable price, $4.
A man who can see so much, observe so intelligently, interpret with insight and write with such pleasurable and dramatic interest ought to have all of his time traveling and writing as a descriptive geographer. To

FOR SECOND HAND GEOLOGICAL BOOKS

We have a classified stock of over 100,000 geological books covering all subjects such as Paleontology, Church History, Philosophy, Geology, etc., etc. Write for catalogue and us your list of "Wants."

WANTS BOOK STORE 80 AND 82 FOURTH AVE NEW YORK CITY

Original Modern Language Version
Twentieth Century New Testament

are equal. Ask for it at any Bookseller's, $1.25
WILL CO., 158 Fifth Ave., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

most of us, the Pacific shore of Peru is a silent, unknown region. But here is unrolled before the reader a chart of life teeming and varied as if a new world had suddenly come from the Creator's hand, completed to the evening of the fifth day. Who ever gives a thought to the guanay, or perhaps ever heard of it? But here it is introduced to one, covering the expanse of the Humboldt current in great rafts like islands in pursuit of fish and rolling in clouds of flight as the myriads of pigeons used to do in the forests of the Ohio valley. And after a careful survey of the 18,000 species of birds, the author pronounces the guanay the most valuable bird, whether wild or domestic, in the world. This notice is written with the purpose in mind of directing the lover of nature to a source of happiness. Come and travel with Doctor Murphy in Peru, and let the Putnams pay the cost of the trip.

—U. M. MCGUIRE.

Radio Talks to Young People, by Daniel Poling. New York: Doran. $1.60.

In this volume of twenty addresses Doctor Poling discusses in his forceful way the things which he believes are foremost in the minds of the religious, thinking youth of America today. These addresses were given Sunday afternoons at the young people's conference in Marble Collegiate church, New York City, and broadcast by several stations throughout the land.

At the close of each address, opportunity was given the listeners to send in their questions and Doctor Poling endeavored to answer them. The questions and the answers are also given in connection with each address making it a very thought-provoking and useful book for young people and a fine reference book for those who are interested in young people's work.

—C. R. OSBORN.

Tarbell's Teacher's Guide, New York: Revell. $2.

Among all the Sunday-school helps that come to our desk, we know of none better than this. It is admirably adapted to the numerous instructors in our Sunday schools all over America who teach the international lessons. The author, Martha Tarbell, has done for the busy man and woman what they have not time to do for themselves, namely, looked up a mass of geographical, historical, pedagogical matter and sifted it for the benefit of the teacher. There it is in the pages of the guide like cream skimmed off innumerable crocks of milk, waiting the churning skill of the teacher to turn it into the finest of butter.

—JOHN A. EARL.

Points for Emphasis, by Hight C. Moore, Baptist Sunday-School Board, Nashville, Tenn.

The tenth vest pocket edition of notes on the international lessons for 1927. Doctor Moore is a master of analysis. His homiletical skill is remarkable. He has the rare gift of saying much in little space and what he says is usually marked by common sense and inspired by a rich spiritual experience.

—JOHN A. EARL.

A Service for Christmas

Joyful Voices

This service presents the Christmas Story in a most attractive manner. Six tableaux are provided for in the Pageant, but are not necessary if merely a service of song and recitation is desired, though they add greatly to the attractive features and are easily prepared. The music is most charming, though not difficult.

$6.00 a hundred
80 cents a dozen

$3.25 for fifty
Single copy, 7 cents

We have a complete stock of the latest holiday supplies for the church and Sunday School.

Greeting Cards	Services	Dialogues
Candy Boxes	Calendars	Novelties
Holiday Booklets	Testaments	Bibles

Send for a copy of our Holiday Catalog, listing our large line of Books and Supplies for the Holidays.

The American Baptist Publication Society

1701-1703 Chestnut Street, PHILADELPHIA

16 Ashburton Place, BOSTON	1107 McGee Street, KANSAS CITY
125 N. Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO	439 Burke Building, SEATTLE
313 W. Third Street, LOS ANGELES	223 Church Street, TORONTO

Order from Our Nearest House

Here, There and Everywhere

(Continued from page 1263)

P. O. EKSTROM has closed his work at Drayton, N. D., and accepted a pastorate at Port Arthur, Ontario, Canada. The Drayton church has extended a call to E. B. Peterson, Eveleth, Minn.

WILLIAM S. DIXON, preaching and singing evangelist of Kansas City, Mo., has been holding successful revival meetings at First church, Sweet Springs, Mo., and First church, Kingsville, Mo.

BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY will have a chemical museum under the direction of Dr. S. C. Osburn, a member of the faculty of the engineering college. Requests have been sent to more than 300 leading chemical industries for samples of raw materials and finished products.

BETHEL CHURCH, CARRICK, PITTSBURGH, Pa., will soon occupy its new building. The new structure of tapestry brick with stone trimming is modern in every respect; the Sunday-school will have fourteen classrooms, each seating thirty people; the auditorium will seat more than 300. This room can be opened to supplement the main church auditorium, giving the combined room a seating capacity of 1200. In addition to the social room downstairs, with a seating capacity of 500, there is a large gymnasium. The building and lot are valued at $150,000. Since the beginning of Dr. E. L. Krumreig's three years' pastorate with this church, 200 new members have been added.

TEN PERSONS WERE BAPTIZED into the membership of Calvary church, Fargo, N. D., by Pastor C. W. Finwall, Oct. 24. The church is at present engaged in a campaign to raise money for a much needed new building. The pastor reports that if the plans are to become a reality $20,000 more must be raised in addition to the money already subscribed.

BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY's new program of "physical education for all" is proving popular with the students. Under this plan, all students will take part in athletics of some kind under the direction of Prof. John Plant. Physical examinations are given to all the men.

W. H. GIBSON REPORTS progress at First church, Salinas, Calif. At the end of the teacher training course in October, thirteen certificates were awarded. Pastor Gibson is preaching a series of sermons on "Watch Your Step."

SEVENTY-NINE NEW MEMBERS, most of them by baptism, were added to Temple church, Chicago, as the result of a recent evangelistic campaign. J. H. Hughes, pastor, was assisted by Evangelist J. W. Kramer, Denver, Colo. During the seventeen months Mr. Hughes has been pastor of Temple church, there have been 162 additions to the membership.

GEORGE D. KNIGHTS, who has been pastor of First church, Long Beach, Calif., for fifteen years, has handed in his resignation, effective Jan. 1. He will act as a financial agent for Redlands university.

F. E. WEBB, FORMERLY of Indianapolis, but more recently of Portland, Ore., is spending a few weeks in Southern California.

DR. J. J. WICKER TOOK a large "Christian cruise" to the Mediterranean, Palestine and Egypt, with European extension, during the past summer. He has taken many parties to Bible lands, and lays emphasis on a "Christian cruise." The members of the party speak in highest appreciation of the cruise last summer. Doctor Wicker is planning for another big "Christian cruise," sailing in June, 1927, which is the ideal time to go. During the past summer the cruisers met with not a day of unpleasant weather. Full information concerning a tour to the Holy Land may be obtained by addressing the Wicker Tours, Richmond, Va.

A BOOK OF SERMONS by Dr. James A. Francis is being published. It will doubtless be welcomed by thousands of Baptists.

IN HIS ANSWERS to a questionnaire on giving, Dr. A. M. Bailey, pastor of First church, Seattle, Wash., did not use as his authority any passages from Third Corinthians as reported in our Nov. 13 issue but he did base it on three passages from the Corinthians namely, 1 Cor. 16:2 and 2 Cor. 8:1-15; 9:7.

Notes on the Lesson for November 28

GIDEON AND THE THREE HUNDRED

Lesson Text: Judges 7:1-25.

Golden Text: Eph. 6:10

"I am only one, but I am one; I cannot do everything, but I can do something; what I can do, I ought to do; and what I ought to do, by the grace of God, I will do." This might well have been Gideon's motto.

Gideon

In dealing with Gideon, we are dealing with the human factor in every moral victory and in every human advance. "The man's the gold, for 'a the Gideon had all the elements that combine to make a real leader: caution, courage, patience and swiftness, common sense and the spirit of adventure, dependence on God and independence to men, modesty and the sense of duty. He was a balanced man. His war cry was one evidence of his position. "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon mixed the enterprise in right proportion and put Gideon in league with the Almighty. There are Gideons all along the line of history. Names come spontaneously to mind. To begin no farther back than Luther we should mention quickly David Livingstone, Lloyd Garrison, William Boothe, and to these could be added, if space permitted, scores of others before and after Luther who wrought a great work, not by might, by power, but by the Spirit of God. It must be borne in mind always that God works through Gideon. No one ever yet proved that God works among men directly without the agency of real like Gideon. Ideals are beautiful to look at and admire, but only iridescent dreams until embodied and vitalized by personality. Missions and evangelism and social betterment and education are words to conjure with; but the legions of words will never take the place of a Judson in missions, a Moody in evangelism, a Jane Addams in community welfare, a Horace Mann in education.

God

God can always be depended upon to cooperate with men of courage who have high ends to serve. It is not necessary to tease God by pagan prayers to do part in wielding the sword of the Lord and of Gideon. In every good cause God is a guarantor. The stars in their courses fought against Sisera. Evil is doomed in the very nature of things. All the universe seems to be on the side of what is good and true and beautiful. We say this soberly in the face of our pessimistic philosophy which paints the universe as "red in tooth and claw." Love never faileth. In the long run, right wins. Gideon with God and 300 faithful followers is greater than the hosts of Midian. It is Gideon's churches need today—leaders who do not trust in organization and number but are essential to victory, but who will trust in God and use the reliable human resources at their command in the hope of ultimate triumph.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC FREE

FREE SAMPLES TO SUPT., PASTOR or COM.

Sample of 6 Services, 96 pages, Music, etc., free to Pastors, Superintendents, and Committees.

Not Free Samples, but sent for examination, are the following new publications:

"Christmas in Cherryland," 35 cents, $3.60 the dozen. A charming cantata, Japanese in part with snap and go in words and music.

"A Trip to Santa Claus Land," 35 cents, $3.60 the dozen. Very easy, for younger folk.

"The Word Fulfilled," Dr. Geibel's story cantata. For Sunday service if desired. 30 cents each, $3.00 the dozen.

These new publications not sent for examination: "Christmas Helper, No. 14—25 cents. More than 100 selections in one book—6 songs included.

Christmas Specials, No. 3—25 cents. 5 Special Numbers in one book.

"Come Any Time." A play, 25 cents. They come all at once to spend Christmas. Very funny.

HALL-MACK CO., 21st & Arch Sts., Phila., Pa. National Music Co., Western Selling Agts., Chicago, Ill.

Van Duzen Bells
formerly Van Duzen & Tift
Guaranteed Genuine Bell
Metal Bells made of Copper
and Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability.

The Vanduzen Electrical
Bell Ringer

The E. W. Vanduzen Co.

Buckeye Bell Foundry CINCINNATI, OHIO
Est. 1837 428-34 E. 2nd St. Send for catalogue

Noble Instruments, Nobly Built PIPE HALL ORGANS West Haven, Conn.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

TOWER CHIMES PLAYED FROM
ELECTRIC KEYBOARD AT ORGAN
CHURCH BELLS—PEALS

McShane Bell Foundry Co.
BALTIMORE, MD.

Our Societies and How to Reach Them.

Board of Missionary Cooperation

The purpose of this Board is to promote and obtain support for every denominational activity, as provided in the united program of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Literature or special information concerning any phase of the work will be promptly furnished on request.

W. H. BOWLER
Executive Secretary
235 Fifth Avenue New York City

Partnership Opportunities

The 800 missionaries of The American Baptist Home Mission Society are to be found in nearly every State in the Union, and in Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Haiti and Jamaica. They serve as missionaries, pastors, teachers, colporteur-missionaries, hotel-car and auto chapel-car directors, evangelists and Christian center workers.

In the making of your will and in the purchase of annuity agreements you may have a share in the home mission tasks of the denomination.

For annuity booklet and samples of single survivorship agreements, please address
CHARLES L. WHITE
East Twenty-sixth St., New York City
American Baptist Home Mission Society

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society (Corporate Name)

Address all communications to
235 Fifth Avenue, New York City

In a year 23,047 converts were baptized on mission fields in the non-Christian world. This is the largest total ever reported in a single year in the history of the Society. When you make a will be sure that the full corporate name of the Society is used. Correspondence concerning gifts on the Annuity Plan with income ranging from 4 to 9% should be addressed to the Home Secretary.

W. H. Milliken, President
Eric L. Anderson, Ch'm'n of the Board
H. H. Franklin, Foreign Secretary
C. C. Robbins, Foreign Secretary
J. L. Lerrigo, Home Secretary
B. B. Huntington, Treasurer

Why Not Increase Your Income

and at the same time

Help Some One Else?

The Board of Education of
The Northern Baptist Convention
(Legal Name)

We will write you an annuity contract assuring you a good income for life and enabling you to perpetuate your influence for a long time to come. For information and address—

Frank W. Padelford, Secretary
235 Fifth Ave. New York City

News Notes

Evangelists are constantly at work in the Sibsagor district of Assam and are reporting baptisms. There were seventy-five between February and the middle of the summer. One new village has been opened to the gospel during this period.

At a recent Government Educational Association fair held in Yachow, West China, Baptist schools were granted first rank by the highest official, according to Mr. S. S. Clark. The fair consisted of a three-day contest in examinations and field sports, and competition among the various schools was keen. The fair is aimed both to promote education and to test efficiency.

Many children of Buddhist parents are in the Sunday school at the Japanese center, Los Angeles. There is a Buddhist temple erected at a cost of $150,000 within four blocks of the center. A day school of one and one-half hours is conducted at the center for Japanese children after the public schools close. There are 16,000 Japanese in the section of the city where the center is located.

One of the engrossing objectives in Iloilo, Philippine Islands, just now, according to Dr. R. C. Thomas, is a "Friendly Corner" which has been established near the water-front where sailors may be reached. Doctor Thomas writes: "The fine rented building will also be used for classes for the illiterate, for kindergarten in the morning (thirty-five are already enrolled), for students and for a free clinic."

Two Garo boys from Tura, Assam, have gone to Serampore college, Bengal, and four have gone to Cotton college, Gauhati, Assam. Rev. R. H. Ewing writes: "We are proud of these boys. Fifty years ago their fathers were without a written language, were animistic worshippers and cut off the heads of people. We hope that from among these boys will come the first Garo with an A. B. degree."

June 28, at the annual graduating exercises of Wayland academy, East China, eighty-one graduates received diplomas from the senior and junior high school departments. Mr. E. H. Clayton wrote: "A pleasing feature of the annual sermon before the graduates was the draping together, purely on student initiative, of the American and Chinese flags over the pulpit—gratifying because of its silent and compelling testimony to the feeling of mutual respect, confidence and good-will existing here between the missionaries and the Chinese."

A Russian converted in Buffalo went back to work among his people at home and through his efforts 150 persons were baptized last year. Two Roumanians were converted in Philadelphia and went back to their country before they were baptized. Doctor Rushbrooke visited their village and baptized thirty. The first two who went down into the water were these two Roumanians. There are thirty Japanese adults converted in Los Angeles working for Christ in Japan.

Our Societies and How to Reach Them.

WHEN YOUR WILL IS READ Will it contain a bequest for The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention

276 Fifth Avenue, New York

If it does it will help the Board help worthy aged Baptist Ministers & Missionaries, their Widows and Orphan Children.

If you prefer or need the income while you live we shall be glad to have you take an whereby you will receive a high and safe return on your gift throughout your lifetime. At your decease the income only will be used in the work. Your gift may be made a memorial to yourself or others.

ANNUITY BOND (Gift Agreement)

Write for Information.

FOR ANNUITIES AND WILLS

Use the corporate name

Woman's American Baptist
Home Mission Society

Consult Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer,
Treasurer.

276 Fifth Avenue New York City

A SIMPLE PLAN:

You send to us:

1. Your check as an annuity gift.
2. Date of your birth.
3. Address in full.

We send to you:

1. A receipt for your check.
2. An annuity agreement.
3. Annuity payments every six months.

For full particulars regarding our annuity plan—Write to

Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer

Woman's American Bapt. Foreign Mission Society
276 Fifth Ave. New York City

The American Baptist Publication Society

1701-1703 Chestnut St.,
Philadelphia, Pa.

The denominational publishing house for the extension of the kingdom through the printed Word, Colportage, Religious Education, and Sunday school development.

FOR OTHERS

Put THE BAPTIST into your Public Library. Do it Today.

Annual Subscription, $2.50

THE BAPTIST

2320 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

SUPPLIES FOR CHRISTMAS

OFFERING ENVELOPE

An entirely new design, lithographed in Christmas colors, on strong, white paper. Size, 2½ x 3½ inches. 40 cents a hundred; $3.50 a thousand.

Christmas Candy Boxes

Order by Number

No. 36. Christmas Toys. A unique design that will please the children. Christmas toys printed in four colors. Has tape handle. Holds one-half pound. Shipped flat. $1.35 a hundred. Delivery extra.

No. 42. Christmas Helpers. A very beautiful box with orange and white striped background. The balance of the attractive design is printed in red, green, and black. Has tape handle. Holds one-half pound. Shipped flat. $1.35 a hundred. Delivery extra.

GREETING CARDS and FOLDERS

For Pastors, Superintendents and Christian Workers

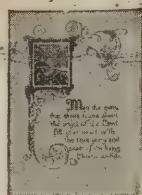

Beautiful subjects with appropriate religious sentiments. Order by number

Christmas Cards with Envelopes

No. 1234. My Christmas Wish to You. A card showing the interior of a church, with joyful message for Christmas. Size, 3½ x 5 inches. With envelopes, $2.50 a hundred.

No. 1234

No. 1238

No. 1238. A new card with a most attractive design. The sentiment is appropriate to the season. With envelopes. Size, 3½ x 5 inches. $2.50 a hundred.

No. 1239. Another new card with appropriate message for Christmas. Size, 3½ x 5 inches. With envelopes. $2.50 a hundred.

No. 1239

Series 1205

Series 1205. A set of four cards, size 2½ x 4 inches. Gold bordered edge containing Christmas Greetings together with a Bible text that is very appropriate. Packed ten cards assorted with envelopes at 30 cents.

Series 1208

Series 1208. A series of three outdoor winter scenes. Each card containing a beautiful Christmas verse together with Bible text. Size, 3 x 5. Price, 40 cents set of ten assorted with envelopes.

Christmas Folders with Envelopes

Series 1218

Series 1218 contains a group of four small folders, size 2½ x 3½, for the children. Each folder contains a verse from the Bible together with a very pretty little poem that will be pleasing to every child. Put up in set of ten assorted with envelopes at 30 cents.

Series 1272

Series 1272. A series of four designs of churches decorated with Christmas hollies and greens. This is a set that should appeal to all people connected with Christian work. Size, 3 x 4 closed. Price, 50 cents set of ten assorted.

CHRISTMAS POSTCARDS

Series 1227

Series 1227. This is composed of a series of four Christmas designs that will appeal to all. $1.25 per hundred.

Christmas Entertainment

Invitation Postcard, No. 1222. An attractive church interior, with Christmas decorations. A card of invitation to the Christmas service or entertainment. $1.25 a hundred.

No. 1222

SEND FOR A COPY OF THE HOLIDAY CATALOG LISTING OUR COMPLETE LINE OF HOLIDAY SUPPLIES AND GIFT BOOKS

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY

1701-1703 CHESTNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA

16 Ashburton Place, BOSTON

313 W. Third Street, LOS ANGELES

439 Burke Building, SEATTLE

125 N. Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO

1107 McGee Street, KANSAS CITY

Order from our nearest house

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

THE LIBRARY OF THE ILLINOIS STATE LIBRARY
NOV 24 1926
LIBRARY OF THE ILLINOIS STATE LIBRARY

SEE A CHANGED WORLD

Look at this map, drawn by one of the best map makers of Europe in the year 1551. Then go around the world with Northern Baptists in January and you will realize that ease of communication is changing the relations of men as radically as time has altered their maps. You can make this unique Baptist World Tour without leaving your own fireside and your church committee or your pastor will supply a ticket without charge.

Folks, Facts and Opinion

Wyoming Baptists return the salute of Georgia with boast for boast. For Wyoming, small as its Baptist population is, can boast that the new governor of the state, Hon. Frank C. Emerson, and Mrs. Emerson also, are active and enthusiastic members of the First church, Cheyenne.

Rev. Ola Hanson, Baptist missionary to the Karens in Burma, finished August 11 the translation of the whole Bible in Karen, a work of which the News, of Rangoon, reports him as saying, "For over thirty years this has been on my heart and mind, and I feel grateful to the Giver of all good gifts for the privilege of seeing this work through."

The board of managers of the Home Mission Society announces that it has appointed by unanimous vote Rev. B. T. Livingston as superintendent of evangelism in the place of Dr. H. F. Stilwell who recently retired. Mr. Livingston will be remembered as the former secretary of the Rhode Island State Convention. He will discharge all the functions of the division of evangelism as Doctor Stilwell has previously done. It is expected that he will assume charge of the work January 1. The permanent office of evangelism will be Room 1006, 23 East 26th St., New York City.

Chicago Baptists had a few lively days beginning with Nov. 14. On that day J. Whitcomb Brougher addressed the ministers' conference in the Immanuel building on evangelism. Later he spoke to the students of the Northern Baptist Theological seminary and addressed a mass meeting on Wednesday evening at the Immanuel building. Throughout his stay in the city he rang the changes on personal evangelism. On Wednesday evening Secy. W. H. Bowler and Johnston Myers also spoke, the former upon our great denominational opportunity, and the latter upon his favorite topic, "Twenty-five Thousand Baptists at the Next Convention."

Rev. F. W. Norwood, who, at the invitation of the united churches, is touring Great Britain in the interest of the peace movement, tells in the Christian World his net impression of the movement up to the close of October. While crowds attend his meetings and thousands of people are enrolling in the League of Nations Union he writes: "More than one of my hosts have withdrawn their hospitality; more than one of the newspapers—and some of them religious—have imposed their taboo; and many stay away from my meetings on this account. The impression grows upon me that my crusade will be sacrificial rather than triumphal, but as this was what I expected from the first I am not disappointed."

THE leading article this week is the first sermon of the World Pulpit. F. W. Boreham is pastor of the Baptist church, Armadale, Victoria, Australia. Mr. Boreham is known and loved by thousands of people in every land who have read his stimulating books. He is an Englishman by birth and a graduate of Spurgeon's college, London; but for a number of years he has ministered in Australia. The sermon published in this number is characteristic of the preacher, truly poetic in thought and language, fervently evangelical in spirit and doctrine, and constructively progressive in vision and purpose. Mr. Boreham in this introductory sermon sets up a high standard of preaching.

"Catholic Toleration" is contributed by one who writes with the authority of first-hand knowledge and experience. John Crosby, pastor of the First Baptist church, Glen Campbell, Philadelphia, Pa., was a special student of Roman Catholic doctrine and practice for a quarter of a century. He is a recognized scholar, a Doctor of Philosophy of Heidelberg, Germany, and as the temper of his article shows, a fine Christian gentleman.

J. Wesley Esveld, who writes on "Evangelism Essential to the Life of the Church," is pastor of the Immanuel Baptist church, Omaha, Neb. The address was given at the Nebraska Convention and is published by request of the delegates who heard it.

The leading editorial by the assistant editor was occasioned by a recent attack of the Christian Century on the Federal Council of Churches for what the Christian Century conceived to be an abandonment by the Federal Council of the principle of the outlawry of war in its recently published program for the promotion of international peace.

Other articles of more than ordinary interest are "A Letter from Japan," by O. B. Sarber, pastor of the First Baptist church of Gary, Ind., "LaBar of the Adirondacks" by the popular pastor of the Greece Baptist church, N. Y., and a report of the "Regional Conferences in Europe" by Doctor Rushbrooke.

Latest statistics of Baptists in North America give the total membership 8,474,582, a gain over the previous year of nearly 110,000. There were 362,000 baptisms against 336,808 for last year. The gain of 700 Sunday schools represents a corresponding gain of 500,000 enrolment. The value of church property has increased from $343,540,300 to $391,981,700. The amount of money raised for current expenses rose from $58,084,602 to $61,986,436, but for benevolence it fell from $19,140,669 to $18,877,800.

One of the best meetings in the history of the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention was held at the La Salle hotel, Chicago, Nov. 18. In the absence of W. C. Biting who is in Europe, Maurice Levy acted as corresponding secretary. At Mrs. C. J. Eulette's suggestion which seemed to be in harmony with the mind of the whole committee, it was decided to build a distinctly inspirational program for the next meeting of the convention, with Christ at the center. There was perfect unity and fine enthusiasm, in keeping with the spirit reported from all parts of the convention field. J. C. Massee was selected to preach the next convention sermon.

Wherever Mr. Cress, the field editor, goes along the Pacific coast he is welcomed in the most fraternal spirit, with assurances from the pastors and churches of cordial cooperation. He and P. A. McDiarmid, in cooperation with Secretaries Brinstad and Harper of California, have held a series of conferences which have roused and unified Baptists on the coast in most encouraging fashion. In this effort they have the assistance of J. Whitcomb Brougher, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, as well as that of scores of excellent pastors.

The cooperative committee of evangelism has sent to every pastor a Christmas poster printed on light paper, two colors, having in the upper left hand corner the star shining on the messiah; and below the wondering shepherds and their flock in shadow. The message: "God's unspeakable gift is his son. Your supreme gift is yourself, your life, your service. The time to make the gift is Christmas time.—Now is the day of salvation." There is an accompanying letter which every pastor will enjoy reading. This poster is sent with hope and prayer that in every church there may be a great Christmas evangelistic appeal and that many hearts may be filled with great joy because they have received the "Saviour who is Christ the Lord."

Mr. K. I. Tai, Ph. D., has become the general secretary of the Ling Tong Baptist Council of South China. Mr. Tai studied at Shanghai college in East China, and at Newton Theological institution and the University of Chicago in America.

The American Tract Society is engaged in a campaign for a centennial fund of $200,000. During the past months, over a half-million tracts in thirty languages have been distributed. The society can furnish scripture tracts free in fifteen languages. Churches needing them for foreign work will receive packages posted. The generosity of Mrs. Helen Gould Shepard makes this offer possible.

Physicians have been urging Dr. E. T. Tomlinson, executive secretary of the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Fund, to lessen his strenuous life and leave himself from care in the interest of his health. It has become evident that Doctor Tomlinson and the board that his helpful services may be longer continued if he can be relieved of much of his administrative duties. With this purpose in view the board at its meeting Nov. 9 relieved Doctor Tomlinson of his duties as executive secretary and elected him advisory secretary. Administrative responsibilities were placed on Dr. P. C. Wright who was elected to succeed Doctor Tomlinson as executive secretary.

The new buildings in the medical department on the Midway at the University of Chicago, which will provide laboratories in medicine, surgery and pathology, physiology, physiological chemistry and pharmacology, as well as the Albert Merritt hospital and the Max Epstein clinic, will constitute the nucleus of a much larger program projected by the university which, it is hoped, may be completed during the next decade. This program calls for a children's clinic, with provision for hospital care for 100 or more children, for a lying-in-hospital and a neurological clinic, for a psychiatric clinic, for an infectious disease hospital, for an orthopedic clinic, for the treatment of bone and joint disorders, particularly in children, and for other projects of lesser magnitude.

The Universal Christian Conference on Faith and Work held last year at Stockholm, is in a fair way to proving more fruitful than at first seemed likely. The continuation committee is to major in the field of social and economic problems. It has set up an institute of social and industrial research. Not less significant of its virility is its declaration on the subject of war guilt. Keeping the fields of the church and the state strictly separated, and repudiating in advance any use of its report for political purposes, it asserted that the right cannot be established by war, and that a confession of commission of guilt extorted by force has no moral value. It recommended that all archives and other sources of information be opened up for an investigation of this question by an impartial Prof. A. N. Carman writes that probably the largest audience ever assembled at the weekly lecture of the Northern Theological seminary greeted Dr. J. C. Massee on his recent visit to Chicago. "Dr. Massee was at his best before this large and sympathetic band of students. His inspiring incitations to an evangelistic ministry, his practical advice as to the achievement of it, and the moving pathos of illustration from his own and others' experience all made the occasion one which will have its reverberation in the lives of many a minister and many a church."

Illinois went dry by about 250,000 majority, according to data supplied by Rev. M. P. Boynton, a member of the national executive committee of the Anti-Saloon League. This is the showing for an election in which about 50 per cent of the lawful vote of the state was cast. A modification referendum was submitted at the same election. For a similar proposition, in a possible total vote of about 2,500,000, there were cast four years ago 522,000. But this year after an intense and persevering wet propaganda and an organized effort to muster the whole wet vote the number cast for the proposition was about 450,000. That is, only one voter in five in the state was sufficiently opposed to the Volstead law to cast a vote against it.

Baptist losses in the Florida storms have been approximately ascertained. The Baptist Council of Greater Miami has compiled and C. M. Brittain, secretary of the Florida Baptist mission board, has given to the public, a list of twenty-six churches in the Miami area with the condition of each in a repetitious story of "complete wreck," "blown down," "ruined," "blown away," and, especially at Hialeah, "total loss and every member, save one, left homeless." These are mostly new and weak churches. "Not only is the loss heavy on church property, but the pathetic part is, that almost all members have suffered great personal loss, and many of them everything they possessed."

Index

	Page
FOLKS, FACTS AND OPINION.....	1270
EDITORIAL	1273
THE WORLD IN TRANSIT.....	1274
A CANTICLE OF SUNSHINE, BY F. W. BOREHAM	1276
CATHOLIC TOLERATION, BY JOHN CROSBY	1279
EVANGELISM ESSENTIAL TO THE LIFE OF THE CHURCH, BY J. WESLEY ESVELD	1280
THE DEVOTIONAL LIFE—THE ANCHOR OF THE SOUL, BY CHARLES FOSTER WEEDEN	1282
YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE KINGDOM	1283
CHIMNEY CORNER	1284
BOYS AND GIRLS.....	1285
CHURCHES AT WORK.....	1286
AMONG OURSELVES	1287
NOTES ON THE LESSON.....	1298
NEW BOOKS	1299

When the Day is Done

Sunset at Pacific Palisades

IN the late afternoon of their lives, hundreds of elderly church people of many different religious denominations are taking up their year-round residence at Pacific Palisades—the resort, educational and residential community that has been founded by Methodism and Christians of all denominations.

They know that the sunshine and the healthful, equable Southern California climate will prolong their days, and the atmosphere of Christian culture, the beauty of surroundings and the friendship of congenial neighbors will make them happy.

If not interested yourself just at present, perhaps you can send us the name and address of a friend or relative or neighbor who would be interested in our new folder, "Winter at Pacific Palisades". Address Pacific Palisades Association, Pacific Palisades, California.

Pacific Palisades

CALIFORNIA

"God's Garden By The Sea"

If ingenuity, money and propaganda can embroil the United States with Mexico, the thing is to be done. One fact is a sufficient index of the prospect, namely, it is reported that the Knights of Columbus will spend $1,000,000 "to inform the American people of conditions in Mexico." They are adepts in the art of propaganda. Get ready for the flood.

Lincoln C. Andrews, at the head of the nation's forces for the enforcement of prohibition, has appealed to the committee of one thousand; and that body through its chairman has appealed to the big business men of the nation, to adopt a general policy of refusing to authorize so-called "expense money" used by salesmen for the purchase of liquor at conventions and other business gatherings. Try to imagine the civic virtue of a firm that needs or refuses to heed this appeal.

According to Dr. William Frederick Bigelow, in Good Housekeeping, diphtheria is so far preventable and curable that "the time will soon come when every case of diphtheria will be an indictment against the intelligence of the parents; nor will it be many years before every death from diphtheria will be referred to a coroner's jury for investigation to fix criminal responsibility."

Judson high school for boys, in Moulmein, Burma, sent sixteen delegates to the Maymyo Bible assembly. These boys met an emergency by efficiently serving at table and proved their ability both in the games and in the meetings. Since returning to Moulmein they have organized a Maymyo circle, which Mr. P. R. Hackett regards as the backbone of his Christian influence in the school.

NEW ENGLAND MEMORIAL CHAPEL CAR AUTO NO. 5.

The New England Memorial Chapel Car Auto, No. Five, dedicated in September to work in Porto Rico, has been received with great favor and awakened intense interest. Rev. Daniel Echavarria is the missionary in charge of it. In meetings at Palmer fifty-one persons professed faith in Christ, two new Sunday schools were organized, and at a clinic held by Dr. Frederico Trilla and a nurse fifty patients came. The latest reports place the car at Hato-Puercos.

A few weeks ago THE BAPTIST ventured to suggest that wet England in its present economic embarrassment might well take account of the advantages of prohibition in international competition. Rev. Samuel Horton, a British clergyman, has been investigating prohibition in the United States, and upon returning home he is reported as declaring in a public address that something must be done to arouse England in this matter, otherwise in ten years she will be industrially "swept off the map."

The Central Christian Advocate has this to say: "And now, suppose for one exciting moment that the fighting instinct, instead of applying itself to the destruction of human wealth and human life, should apply itself to the destruction of everything that now jeopardizes the welfare of mankind. Imagine the young men of a nation mobilized to fight—prostitution! Imagine the scientists of a nation mobilized to fight—disease! Imagine the women of a nation mobilized to fight—poor housing conditions! Imagine the educators of a nation mobilized to fight—ignorance! Imagine the statesmen of all nations mobilized to fight—war!"

H. B. Benninghoff reports that Christian work for the fall quarter at Waseda university, Tokio, began with an enthusiastic opening at the University church, Mr. K. Fujii, pastor of the church, who studied in America, has returned from a tour of churches in the north of Japan, which he visited with a couple of students. Churches and pastors who were visited are asking that the experiment be repeated.

Joyful and almost novel among Baptists these days is the note issued from the British Baptist Mission House, Furnival street, London. It exclaims: "The deficit is disappearing." And notice appears under the page-caption, "Te Deum Laudamus!"

In order that there may be a general and common understanding of the nature and functions of the Baptist World Alliance and of its relations to other Baptist bodies. Presidents Mullins, Rushbrooke unite in giving to the world the following official statement: "The Baptist World Alliance is a voluntary and fraternal organization for promoting fellowship and cooperation among Baptists. It is not an administrative body, carrying on mission work or appointing missionaries. It is not a legislative body, prescribing regulations binding on Baptists. It is not a judicial body, handing down decisions governing Baptist organizations. It is not an authoritative body, controlling churches or other organizations. Such authority as it possesses extends only to its own activities—is in accordance with the principles of the denomination—free, autonomous, and eternal in all its relationships. It is responsible for financial obligations incurred by other Baptist bodies, or controversies concerning matters of policy, doctrine and practice. It is prepared at any time to help by counsel and advice on matters properly pertaining to its aims and purposes; but always with careful regard to the rights of other Baptist boards, unions and conventions. The aims of the alliance are moral, spiritual. It seeks to express and promote unity and fellowship among Baptists of the world; to secure and defend religious freedom; and to proclaim the great principles of our common faith."

The New Way—

A SAFE, SOUND and SENSIBLE plan of financing enables you to Build, Remove Debts or Carry Out your Endowment Program.

Over $125,000,000 has been raised for religious enterprises by members of our Associated Organizations.

Now is the time to arrange for your 1927 Financial Program.

HEDRICK, MARTS & LUNDY, Inc.

Harriman National Bank Building,
527 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Members of the Joint Board of Campaign Counsel and Planning.

Write for a copy of "Financing Philanthropy".

The Baptist

EDITOR: JOHN A. EARL
FIELD EDITOR: G. CLIFFORD CRESS

ASSISTANT EDITOR: U. M. McGUIRE
OFFICE EDITOR: JANET T. VAN OSDEL

Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY BY THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION AT 2320 MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Single Subscription, $2.50 a year. Clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries, postage is $1.04; in Canada, 52 cents.

Finding a Way to End War

IF THE wish for peace could prevent war, there would be no more war. Except as a measure of protection against worse evils no nation wants war. All peoples hate it, dread it, wish to avoid it. Among civilized peoples it is coming to be regarded as in its nature wicked and criminal, the supreme folly of the world. Even the militarist of today does not glorify war. He has shifted his admiration to the beauties and virtues of military training. He concedes that fighting is bad, but thinks that the cultivation of patriotism and of all the high and heroic virtues is achieved in getting ready to fight. War as such, seems to have no friends left in the world.

But in trying to find a way to end war, difficulty lies in the fact that the world is organized politically in some scores of independent states, nearly all of them born in war, with national patriotisms, conflicting interests, misunderstandings, estrangements, jealousies, wars, hatreds; organized for war and with an almost unbroken habit of depending upon war for national self-protection or self-aggrandizement. The practical problem, made more difficult by its very novelty, is to find a way to overcome these complicated obstacles and to effect a common understanding that will provide for peaceable adjustment of international disputes and for the protection of all peoples against military aggression. Proposals for the solution of this problem vary. The League of Nations, the Permanent Court of International Justice, the Hague Tribunal, arbitration treaties, the limitation of armaments, the condemnation of aggressive war, the outlawry of war, the promotion of international friendship, and personal refusals to perform military service, are all proposals for effective action with a view to the elimination of war from the political system of the world. By presumption, each of these proposals has some principle of value to contribute toward a solution of the problem. Each has merits and weaknesses. Each has advocates and opponents. But they have one thing in common, namely, a purpose to end war. Among their advocates there is general agreement that a compact or an instrument in some form is necessary by which, in terms of war, nations shall be bound to settle their disputes without a resort to war.

The Federal Council of Churches of America advocates at present a program that includes treaties of complete arbitration, full utilization of the Permanent Court of International Justice, commissions of inquiry and boards of conciliation, defining as an aggressor any nation that refuses to submit its dispute to peaceful international settlement, refusing to supply munitions of war to the aggressor, making aggressive war a crime under international law, cooperating in the reduction of armaments, and "cooperating with other nations in securing better adjustment of the world's economic conditions and thereby lessening the causes of international friction."

The Christian Century stands for the direct and complete outlawry of war, of preparation for war and of the war-making power. Because the Federal Council program does not provide for such absolute outlawry, that paper keenly criticizes this program and accuses the Federal Council of having resorted to a futile and time-serving policy. The criticism is worthy of consideration, but the accusation seems to be unwarranted. Of course the element of accommodation is manifest in the Federal council program. But points of view must be taken into account. The position of the Christian Century is that of the independent critic, idealist and prophet; that of the Federal Council is limited strictly to the mediation of the average opinion of more than thirty different denominations. If in this case it has issued an official statement that is not in harmony with the common judgment of these denominations, any of them is competent to speak for itself, or any individual or paper is free to point out the error, as the Christian Century undertakes to do. But the standard of pure idealism is not applicable to the case. The question is whether the statement of the Federal Council fairly represents the best program attainable under the circumstances.

Even from the high standpoint which the Christian Century sets for itself, the standpoint of the idealist, the prophet and the moral critic, its criticism seems hardly justifiable. For the Federal Council program is in effect one of utter outlawry so far as war is concerned. Under it war simply could not exist. For if there is recognized machinery for the peaceable settlement of international disputes, if any nation refusing to accept such settlement and going to war becomes an international outlaw, what is such a program but a workable plan for the outlawry of war? Can the outlawry of war be achieved on any other basis? Does anybody even propose it on any other basis?

The Christian Century keenly criticizes the recommendation of the Federal Council that full use be made of the Permanent Court of International Justice for the settlement of disputes, and calls attention to the fact that the Hague Tribunal is also available, and from the point of view of the editor of the paper, the only tribunal to be considered for the settlement of disputes to which the United States is a party. The criticism is the more surprising from the fact that the Hague court cannot take a single step toward the outlawry of war, while the league court is itself a step, though not a long one, in that direction. Either court fully utilized would end war, the Hague court by elimination, the league court by outlawry. No reason is apparent why either should not be utilized as fully as possible, but one would naturally expect advocates of the outlawry of war to favor specially the league court.

War may be outlawed by the consequence of some provision of law that falls short of the ideal of outlawry. On this point the United States is able to contribute the results of a striking experiment. The original states were independent. They possessed all of the power to make war that inheres in any national sovereignty. But for the very purpose of insuring against war among themselves, they made a large surrender of that power to a super-government in terms prescribed in the constitution as follows (Article one, section ten, paragraph two): "No state shall without the consent of congress . . . keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, . . . or engage in war unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay." This is far from a thoroughgoing outlawry of war. Under its provisions a state may make war lawfully. And if, without the consent of congress, a state should keep troops or ships of war, by what means short of war could it be prevented from doing so? Yet for all practical purposes war among the states is outlawed as effectively as if there were a definite penal code covering all possible phases of the case.

Ultimately law in some form must be substituted for war in any form. Just what form such law will take and by what sanctions it is to be supported, can be discovered only by free and brave experiment. The scientific and true attitude is one of hospitality to all the light that can come from experiments in the past or from earnest and thoughtful proposals for experimentation in the future. Any of the proposals before the public has promise in it. None of them is demonstrably the true and final one. Only experience can tell. Social evolution advances by trial and error. Any reasonable experiment tried puts the public in the way of discovery and progress. To rid the world of war the assembled virtues of all reasonable proposals will be required. One may consistently favor several or all of them at once. At any rate the best course is not yet so clearly ascertained as to justify closed minds and controversy.

It is time to try something, and the program of the Federal Council of Churches offers a practical opportunity. It represents a careful assessment of the facts up to date, a mature judgment based upon those facts and the prestige of a sane and responsible leadership, to a degree that warrants the acceptance of its proposals unless there are clear and conclusive reasons to the contrary. In considering one need not close his eyes or "make his judgment blind," but it deserves friendly consideration as a proposal for a practical approach toward the outlawry of war.

The Kitchenette Apartment and the Family Altar

HAVING married the young couple with due solemnity the minister in a final word urged them to set up a family altar in their new home. The bride, sketching in her mind the cramped space in the kitchenette apartment, exclaimed: "But, pastor, I don't see how we are going to lug another piece of furniture into our apartment." In order to meet this situation and with a view to providing both an altar and ritual of convenient size and brevity to fit the diminutive dimensions of the modern apartment, the Board of Missionary Cooperation of the Northern Baptist Convention has issued a handbook of prayer which is called "The 1927 Book of Remembrance."

A concrete case will best illustrate how this handbook of prayer may be used as a guide in family prayers or private devotions. Let us begin with the first day of 1927. We open the book to page six and at the top of the page find printed in capital letters, "NANKING UNIVERSITY," East China. Imagination is aroused and we have an impulse to get the atlas and find the exact location of Nanking in China, but we refrain and proceed with the ritual of worship. We read aloud to the family seated around the dinner table, which is usually the best time for the family to get together, "Interdenominational. Baptists cooperate in language school for new missionaries and department of agriculture and forestry." That is an interesting fact which leads us to inquire about our folk who are connected with this university. Here is the information we seek. "Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Gibbs, Coll. of Agriculture and Forestry (F), Mrs. C. S. Keen (F), Bertha C. Smith (F)." The abbreviations are obvious and the bracketed letter is explained in the glossary on page four. Then we learn from the request for prayer that these four people are new missionaries studying the Chinese language at Nanking university, and we are asked to "pray for new missionaries as they learn the language and adjust themselves to their work and colleagues." This is followed by the scripture for the day, Luke 1:1-25. The names of ten foreign missionaries whose birthdays fall on January 1 follow; if one cares to look up their location and learn about their work, he may do so by turning to the appropriate date printed after the name and appearing on another page. The ritual for the day closes with the historical fact that in 1867 John E. Clough, herald of a new Pentecost, organized the church at Ongole with eight members.

This bit of spiritual ritual may be read in a few minutes each day of the 365 days which constitute the year. No extra furniture in the form of an altar is necessary; no priest is required; no ecclesiastical sanctions are imperative. Any Baptist household or any individual may follow this cycle of prayer with increasing interest and with growing profit to intelligence and devotion. The book costs twenty-five cents and may be ordered from the Board of Cooperation of the Northern Baptist Convention, 276 Fifth Ave., New York.

The World in Transit

An interpretation of significant events in the light of Christian ideals.

Will American Liberty Be Taken Upon the Philippines?

No people can permanently enslave another and retain their own liberty. This maxim gives point to a pamphlet compiled by Moorfield Story and Marcial P. Lichauco, giving in brief form the story of the conquest of the Philippines by the United States. The pamphlet proposes an investigation by a committee of congress with a view to the independence of the Philippines. It bears the endorsement of sixty-six American citizens, including such honored Baptist names as W. H. P. Faunce, Helen B. Montgomery and William Green. Its indictment of the course of this government in dealing with the people of the Philippines is crushing. Every Baptist pastor in the United States ought to send ten cents for a copy to Mr. Kirby Page, 147 Madison Ave., New York. Maybe the American people will listen; maybe they will not. But the future of liberty in the United States depends largely upon their decision. The maxims of the Declaration of Independence cannot be nullified by us there and retain their validity here.

American Democracy Tangled in Its Own Clothes

Millions of citizens of the United States have performed with such patience as they might the ritual of another election. Some other millions of them omitted the performance. The season has arrived for biennial moralizing over the lightness of the vote and the decline of democracy. At some attention is due to the insufferably bungling method provided by law for the exercise of suffrage. We smothering democracy in its own clothes. Instead of exhorting the citizen to vote a circus-poster filled with things that he has no way of finding out, the time is ripe for a study of efficient democracy. The problem is to reorganize government by the people unimpaired and at the same time to secure efficient administration, to reduce the official turnover, to cut down the frequency and expense of elections, to simplify the process of voting, to extend actively the civil service and to prohibit utterly the use of corporate and corporate funds to influence elections or promote the interest of any candidate. The existing election system might serve a simple rural community but it is hopelessly inadequate amid the complexities of modern life. Democracy is a new technique.

Queen Marie Might Have Desired a Happier Parting

A bolt fell just as the Roumanian queen was leaving the United States. The restlessness of our people about the oppression of minorities in her country, long restrained by a desire to show due courtesy to a guest, broke the bonds at last. Sixty eminent Americans signed a petition for presentation to her before her departure, calling attention to the flagrant violation of the guaranteed rights of religious and racial minorities under her government, and calling for redress. The temper of the petition is expressed in the words of President Mullins of the Baptist World Alliance, who spent some time in Roumania about the date of the queen's setting out for America. He said, "Conditions for the Baptists in Roumania are as bad as they can be. Promises have been made without fulfillment, and no improvement has taken place. I should like to see the queen rather have Soviet Russia for the treatment of minorities." Upon the understanding that one object of her visit was to secure a loan, the protest was carried to leading American bankers and seems to have been effective in that quarter. By hurrying away before the date originally set for her departure she escaped the humiliation of receiving such a petition from the people whose hospitality she was enjoying. Probably, after all, not Queen Marie but Roumanian bureaucrats are responsible for conditions in Roumania.

Equality Cannot Halt At the Economic Boundary

A word for which the world has been waiting is said. Gustavus Myers in the Century Magazine develops the thesis that having achieved a substantial measure of religious and political equality, civilized peoples are now ready for the next stage, namely, economic equality. Of course the doctrine is not new. But hitherto its advocates have been those pestiferous pioneers of human progress called radicals, and what respectable person would listen to a radical? Now, however, it has found respectable utterance, and by and by it will be orthodox. There seems to be nothing explosive in his statement. Specifically he would limit inheritances. But suppose that in spite of such a safeguard economic inequality should still persist, what is to be done next? Is there any stopping place short of industrial democracy?

Spare Us, Professor Shotwell! Are We Both Simple and Sinful?

That Miss Columbia is regarded in Europe as a haughty and headstrong sister is increasingly manifest. In fact, she finds a certain zest in an occasional display of hoydenish manners by way of asserting her self-sufficiency, her inevitability and her preemption of a place at the head of the receiving line. She is the new and free woman. She is the pioneer of progress. She wears a star on her brow. She can muster the forces of empire. But comes now Prof. James H. Shotwell, who is a connoisseur in the ways of nations, and says that Americans seem naughty merely because they are naive. They do not know the world. They are a generation behind the times and are not aware of the fact. They have collectively a nineteenth century mind. This is dreadful. It wounds our unsophisticated pride of sophistication. It compels us to see ourselves as—well, as we are.

Americanism Is One Thing Americanisms Are Another

Americanism is a definable cult. At its heart is a cluster of political maxims concerning human rights. These maxims are embodied in the Declaration of Independence and the constitution of the United States. They are America's great charter of democracy, her contribution to the doctrine of civil society, the chart of all of her legitimate processes of government. They are that symbolism in the stars and stripes to which the true American lifts his hat; he scorns and refuses to salute the perversion of the flag to baser meanings and uses. But Americanisms are those maxims or habits of prejudice, ignorance or crafty and unscrupulous self-interest which Americans have superimposed upon or substituted for true Americanism. They usurp the functions of social control, set up false standards of right, assume a tone of authority, wear the robes of patriotism and wave the flag. In them rather than in true Americanism originates the tide of displeasure which rises against the United States among other nations. The great task of Americanization is to convert and confirm Americans themselves in the spirit and teaching of true Americanism.

A Canticle of Sunshine

By F. W. BOREHAM

The World Pulpit begins a unique ministry with this issue of "The Baptist." From a remote part of the earth's surface and yet from one of the most progressive nations, comes the first sermon from the heart of that prince of essayists, Rev. F. W. Boreham. Other sermons will appear frequently until we have completed the series which represents the preaching and teaching ministry of pastors and missionaries in all parts of the world where Baptists are organized for Christian service.

I LIKE to think that, included in his rich and varied repertoire, David has a Canticle of Sunshine. In the heavens, he says, God has set a tabernacle for the sun which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber and rejoiceth as a hero about to run a race. His going forth is from the end of the heaven and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

A thousand astronomers have taken our breath away as they have expatiated upon the size and splendor of the sun—a ball of fire more than a million times the size of this planet, shooting forth flames fifty thousand miles in length.

A thousand poets have struck their lyres in praise of sunshine, and have extolled the pageant of lovely light and somber shade which it leads forth.

A thousand tribes have gazed in reverential wonder at the sun shining in his strength, and, falling on their knees, have hailed him as a god.

The sun is terrible! cry the astronomers.

The sun is beautiful! sing the poets.

The sun is divine! exclaim these pagan devotees.

In exquisite imagery, David sums up all that they have said. The sun, he says, is like a bridegroom coming out of his chamber: he is like a champion about to run a race. And then, with a startling flash of spiritual insight, he reveals a truth that all the others missed. We have a ponderous literature penned in praise of the light of the sun—the violet and purple and gold that tint the hills at sunrise; the dazzling effulgence that bathes the earth in brightness at high noon; the riot of radiance that makes the sunset a gorgeous festival of color.

But David says nothing about the light of the sun. He extols its heat. And for three reasons.

1. When, under the guidance of the astronomers, I contemplate the sun—a furnace of fire a million times the size of the earth—I see that heat is its essential output: light is a mere by-product, valuable but distinctly incidental.

2. Light is superficial; heat is profound. Light glances on the surface: heat is all-diffusive, all-persuasive all-penetrating. The light is easily evaded. The photographer knows that. Darken the window or descend a mine, and you are beyond the sovereignty of the sunlight. But the heat! A mile beneath my feet at this moment there reposes a huge unshapely mass of rock that, from the foundation of the world, has been enswathed in impenetrable darkness. Never for a second has it beheld the light of the sun; yet never for a second has it been hidden from the heat thereof. From the core of the earth to its crust, there is nowhere a grain of sand or a speck of dust or a drop of water, or an atom of matter of any kind, that is beyond the influence of the sun's all-searching heat. But for the heat of the sun, the poles would be a thousand times more frigid than they are, and the tropics would be as icy as the poles. Everything and everybody is affected. His going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

FRANK W. BOREHAM

WHOSE LATEST BOOK IS "A TUFT OF COMET'S HAIR" (ABINGDON PRESS).

3. The light represents the things that we see, the heat represents the things that we feel: and it is by the things that we feel that life is dominated and controlled.

That principle governs every department of human experience. The entire history of mankind goes to show that men are more easily reached and more powerfully affected by the things that they feel than by the things that they see. In one of the finest passages in "Coningsby," Lord Beaconsfield shows that, without an exception all the great epoch-making movements that have convulsed mankind—the siege of Troy, the rise of the Saracens, the Crusades, the French Revolution, and so on—have been inspired not by the reason, but by the emotions. It was not that men's minds were illuminated by a new light it was that their hearts suddenly glowed with a new passion.

It is the heat that tells. There is nothing hid from the heat thereof. That is why the priceless evangel of the New Testament is not a system of philosophy, appealing to the intellect, but a love-letter, making its appeal direct to the heart. Let us open it and see!

II.

And, as soon as we open it, we discover on the very first pages an apocalyptic vision of rare significance and value. Here are the Prince of Darkness and the Prince of Light engaged, not in mortal, but immortal, combat. The weird struggle partakes of three distinct phases. The scene shifts from the solitude of the desert to a pinnacle of the temple, and again from the pinnacle of the temple to a mountain overlooking all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them. Here, then, are three crucial tests—the test of solitude, the test of the temple, the test of the world. We may fairly assume that these three scenes are intended to be representative, and that, in this threefold crucible, any hypothesis may be tried. How, I wonder, will David's law—the law that he stresses in his "Canticle of Sunshine"—appear if we view it from these three angles? Let us see!

III.

And, most certainly, in the solitude of the individual soul, the principle holds.

The heat thereof! The things that we feel rather than the things that we see! Of all the lords that bear rule over us, none sway us with a sovereignty so regnant, so absolute, so supreme as do our emotions. Confronted by the most vital issues that life presents to us, we follow our feelings in scorn of consequence. And, even in the realm of faith, it is the heat thereof rather than the light thereof that, in the last resort, proves most convincing.

"How do you know that there is any Christ? You never saw him!" demands Augustine St. Clare, taking his stand on the light-principle.

"I feel him in my soul, massa!" replies poor Uncle Tom, taking his stand on the heat-principle.

And every reader of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" knows how Tom's testimony triumphed. As Doctor Angus and Doctor Hile have so convincingly demonstrated, there is no evidence of the truth of Christianity so portable and so conclusive as an actual experience—a vivid, palpitating, personal experience—of Christ's rich grace. There is nothing but the heat thereof. "If," says Tennyson,

*"If e'er when faith had fall'n asleep,
I heard a voice 'believe no more'
And heard an ever-breaking shore
That tumbled in the Godless deep;*

*A warmth within the breast would melt
The freezing reason's colder part,
And like a man in wrath the heart Stood up and answer'd 'I have felt.'"*

A warmth within the breast! The heart stands up and answers, I have felt! Let a man keep that fire burning at the altars of his soul and he will need no other argument.

Those who have read "Robert Elsmere" will never forget the tug at the heart with which they witnessed the terrible scene when Robert, having stated his abstract and academic doubts to his simple-hearted and bewildered wife, stuns her by announcing his intention of leaving the ministry. Bursting into tears, she flings herself at his feet, her arms thrown passionately around him.

"Robert, my husband, my darling," she cries, in an agony of entreaty, "it cannot be! It is a madness, a delusion! Come away with me, away from books and work, to some quiet place where he can make himself heard! We are overdone, overdriven! Be patient a little and he will give you back himself! What can books and arguments matter to you and me? Have we not known and loved him as he is, Robert? Have we not? Come!" That is precisely!

"I feel him in my soul, massa!" exclaims poor Uncle Tom; and his polished young master realizes that the old man has taken an impregnable position.

"I have felt!" cries Tennyson: that is "the warmth within the breast that melts the freezing reason's colder part." Have we not felt, Robert? Have we not known and loved him as he is? What can books and arguments matter to you or me?"

Happy the soul that is in such a case! The light is not despised. Truly the light is sweet and a pleasant thing for the eyes to behold the sun. It is, of course, good for the mind to be illuminated with a clear and comprehensive perception of the entire landscape of truth. It is good to stand with Bunyan's pilgrims on the sunlit heights of the Delectable mountains and to see the gates of the Celestial city glittering in the distance. But such ecstatic experiences must of necessity be rare and fitful. Light is fickle. But the heat thereof! The soul that cries out, I have felt! the soul that shares the strong, sweet certainty of Uncle Tom and the simple unwavering confidence of Catherine Elsmere; that soul faces the world, the flesh and the devil like a knight in shining armor.

IV.

Our second adventure is the natural sequel to our first. It follows logically and inevitably upon it. For, coming to the pinnacle of the temple and gazing down upon the ecclesiastical architecture, the ecclesiastical equipment and the ecclesiastical activities below us, one conclusion becomes irresistible. Human nature being what it is—a thing of quivering emotions—the church must take things as it finds them and must discover some way of appealing to men on the ground on which they are most susceptible.

It may be fancy; but as I stand here on the heights of the temple, looking down on the courts and altars below, it occurs to me that the accents that come up to me are strongly tinged by ecclesiastical dogmatism, a little overcharged with theological technique. It is a thousand pities. Men's hearts are not melted in that atmosphere. Even in the Old Testament, the prophet was commanded to speak to the heart of Jerusalem. The Hebrew words indicate, Sir George Adam Smith tells us, that Isaiah is to stir the soul of the people as a lover stirs the soul of a lass when he makes his passionate appeal and, sweeping all before him, claims her as his own.

And surely the church's message—the story of the cross—is calculated to produce exactly that effect. Like David, Isaac Watts has a "Canticle of Sunshine;" but it is set in a slightly different key.

*Well might the sun in darkness hide,
And shut his glories in,
When Christ, the mighty Maker, died
For man, his creature's sin.*

*Thus might I hide my blushing face,
While his dear cross appears:
Dissolve my heart in thankfulness,
And melt my eyes to tears.*

In preparing my volumes on "Texts that Made History," it was my duty and delight to examine carefully the classic records of hundreds of the great historic conversions. And the thing that impressed me more than anything else was the fact that the great majority of these men—many of them hard-headed, cold-blooded, unemotional men—were overwhelmed, not by some unanswerable argument, but by a sudden realization of the wonder of the divine love.

The astronomers say that the sun is terrible. The poets say that it is beautiful. It is both. The cross makes the same twofold appeal. Viewed in one aspect, it terrifies me: I stand astounded, bewildered, dismayed. It seems to search my soul. Viewed in the other aspect, it unmans me. It dissolves my heart in thankfulness and melts my eyes to tears. And in either aspect, it is a stupendous message. There is all the difference in the world between being touched to tears by the tender pathos of a thousand love stories and—falling in love yourself! The same immeasurable gulf yawns between emotion with which a man hears, as a mere historical recital, the moving story of the crucifixion, and the emotion with which he suddenly recognizes, as his own personal redeemer, the Saviour who dies upon the cross. And it is the supreme prerogative of the church to lead him to that sublime discovery.

It may be fancy; but as I stand here on the heights of the temple, looking down on the courts and altars below, the whole thing strikes me as a trifle cold. It is a thousand pities. If the human soul is more vitally affected by the thing that it feels than by the things that it sees, the church like the sun, must radiate heat as well as light. "I felt my heart strangely warmed!" says John Wesley, in his immortal record of conversion at Aldergate street, "I felt my heart strangely warmed, and did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for salvation." And, that very day, he set out to produce that revival—the greatest in our history—which saved England from the horrors of revolution and changed the face of the world. If the church could warm a few more hearts as it warmed Wesley's, it might easily repeat in the twentieth century its earlier triumph.

To be the faithful vehicle of the divine passion for the souls of men, the visible and audible interpretation of the flaming heart of Christ, the church must throb with human sympathy, it must be warm with sacred fervor, it must learn to love. Its atmosphere must be so saturated with sunshine that there shall be nothing hid from the heat thereof. Its services, however stately, reverent and ornate, must be like a sea of glass mingled with fire. The first men who walked with their risen Lord felt their hearts burning within them. His identity was concealed, but his intensity was felt: nothing was hid from the heat thereof.

It may be fancy; but as I stand here on the heights of the temple, straining my ears to catch the sounds that arise from the courts below, I seem to hear a superabundance of argument, of debate, of controversy. Again I say, it is a thousand pities. But the remedy is simple. Let me add an extract from the second volume of Mr. Wesley's "Journal":

July 5, 1748. We rode to Coningsby, on the edge of the Fens. Mr. B., a Baptist minister, had written to me at London to lodge with him. I was scarce set down in his house before he fell upon the point of baptism. We came close to the question and kept to it for about an hour and a half. From that time we let the matter rest and confirmed our love towards each other.

That strikes me as exquisitely beautiful. "We confirmed our love toward each other." There is nothing hid from the heat thereof. Heat is God's great melting, fusing, welding power. There is none like it. Light can be resisted by prejudice. I may argue with a man till the sands of the desert grow cold, and yet fail to convince him. The light does not penetrate. But if I can learn to love him, and to make him feel that I love him, my victory is assured. There is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

V.

Standing on this exceeding high mountain, and surveying all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, I beheld the principle in operation again.

For upon many of these nations—Africa, China, India, South America—the light of the divine love has never shone; but there is nothing hid from the heat thereof. The knowledge may not have reached them: but the love encircles them all.

That was the thought that sent Adoniram Judson across the seas. His conversion had been brought about by a studious but wondering contemplation of the Saviour's love. During the early days of his newly-found faith, one text was in his mind all the time: the breadth and length and depth and height of the love of Christ.

The depth and height—he knew something of the depth from which it could rescue and the height to which it could raise.

But the breadth and length—here was a new conception. It seemed to embrace the whole wide world. And yet the world knew nothing of it! The idea took such a hold upon his mind that he could think of nothing else. He was haunted by the vision of nations—nations that God love—dying in the dark. He started in his sleep at the thought of India, of Africa and of China. The situation so appalled him that he became incapable of study. Then, on never-to-be-forgotten day, in the course of a solitary walk in the woods, he reached his decision. His course was clear. Come wind, come weather, he must go! And, although there was no missionary society to send him, and no organization to equip him, he found his way across the seas and did a work that has been a rebuke and an inspiration to every subsequent generation.

The length and breadth of the love of Christ!

His going forth is from the end of the heaven and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

VI.

I was in the garden the other day when my companion suddenly bent down and laid her hand on the flower bed beside the path.

"It is quite hot," she observed, "the bulbs will soon be through!"

It is the warmth that brings back the beauty of the spring-time. That is the secret that we most need to learn. The husband and wife whose felicity has become clouded must, at any cost, recapture the ardor of their courtship. Argument is worse than useless; it is not light that is wanted. The minister who has lost his vision and his rapture must get back to the emotions amidst which he was ordained. If only the church can recapture the warmth, the glow, the fervor, the all-penetrating passion of early devotion, it will soon find itself singing with radiance its ancient hymn of fruitfulness, its sweetest Canticle of Sunshine: For lo, the winter is past; the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come. And there shall be a new heaven and a new earth, and the former things—things pertaining to the chill and barrenness of winter shall all have passed away.

Patience

SOMETIMES I wish that I might do
Just one grand deed and die,
And by that one grand deed reach up
To meet God in the sky.

But such is not thy way, O God.

Not such is thy decree;

But deed by deed, and tear by tear,

Our souls must climb to thee,
As climbed the only Son of God

From manger unto cross,

Who learned through tears and bloody sweat.

To count this world but loss;

Who left the virgin mother's arms

To seek those arms of shame,

Outstretched upon the lonely hill

To which the darkness came.

As deed by deed, and tear by tear,

He climbed up to the height,

Each deed a splendid deed, each tear
A jewel shining bright.

So grant us, Lord, the patient heart,

To climb the upward way,

Until we stand upon the height,

And see the perfect day.

—G. A. Studdert-Kennedy in the Canadian Baptist

Catholic Toleration

Religious liberty is a God-given right for every human being.

BY JOHN CROSBY

THE article by Dr. J. S. Kirtley entitled "Catholic Contribution to Religious Liberty in America," which appeared in THE BAPTIST of Aug. 14, appears to have been the cause of considerable heart burning in Catholic controversial circles. I have had forwarded to me a letter from Robert R. Hull, secretary of the national Catholic Bureau of information, in which he states that he considers an apology is due to him for the remarks of Doctor Kirtley. I have also before me a copy of the Sunday Visitor in which he deals at considerable length with the alleged misstatements in THE BAPTIST article." I hold in brief for Doctor Kirtley and I do not know from whence he derived his information or to what works of Catholic reference he had access. I do, however, know this much, that Mr. Hull in his reply is using the recognized method of diverting attention from the main object, in making the statement that "all this is so well known you must express our surprise that even a Baptist should be ignorant of it," he is guilty of a breach of good manners.

Doctor Kirtley's thesis, as stated in his last paragraph, is perfectly plain. He states that whatever the present pretences of the church, the Roman Catholic body has not abandoned its claim to control the religious life of every human being and that it has never in a single instance recognized the right of any one or group to religious liberty unless it ever bestowed toleration upon any one.

No Compromise

Now, in the first place, it is impossible for the Catholic Church by its very nature to allow "toleration." It professes, and has a perfect right to profess, to be the infallible church, the divinely appointed guide to salvation, the repository of all ecclesiastical authority and the interpreter of all scripture. The creed of Pope Pius IV is as binding upon Catholics today as on the day in which it was promulgated—"Hanc veram Catholicam fidem, extra quam nemo salvus esse potest," which translated is, "This true Catholic faith without which no salvation is possible." It is clearly understood that I am not blaming the Catholic Church for its position. With its theological attitude it takes the only possible logical stand. There can be no compromise. Two positions only are logically possible, an infallible church with one infallible head, or the absolute individual liberty in Christ of congregational churches. I must confess that I for one would feel considerably more respect for the mouthpieces of the Catholic Church in both America and England if they did not attempt to throw dust in the eyes of the non-Catholic world by assuming a love for freedom of religious thought and teaching which by the very tenets of their church they are unable conscientiously to believe. If Mr. Hull can produce an example of a Catholic country which the church controls in which the open practice of any other religion is tolerated, I shall unconditionally withdraw any or every allegation I have made in this article. The first part of Doctor Kirtley's article deals with the "Toleration Act" of Maryland and the constitution of the Island. It is not a question of priority of dates or a question of the "undoubted authority" of Matthew 18:18, Andrews, "an undoubted authority" of whom I cannot now hear for the first time. The essential point is the conflict that lies between toleration and liberty, between the right to be allowed to approach Almighty God according to one's own conscience and the inherent God-given right to practice one's own individual belief. No Baptist has stated yet that "outside a Baptist church there is no salvation." If he did, he ceased to be a Baptist.

It may interest Mr. Hull to know, on the authority of his own Catholic encyclopedia, that together with the twenty Catholic gentlemen constituting the first colonists, there were 250 artisans, mechanics and laborers, the greater part of whom it is said were Protestants. I do not know whether Mr. Hull has studied the psychology of the English people during the Stuart period, but it would be interesting to speculate on the probable fate of the twenty gentlemen in the event of their not granting toleration to the 250. In any case it was impossible for the crown of England to grant a charter to a purely Catholic colony, but the charter was granted on the clear condition that if toleration were granted to Catholics, the same privilege must be granted to Protestants. This toleration, therefore, limited as it was to Trinitarians, was the result of a charter granted by a Protestant king acting on authority from a Protestant parliament and is no more to be attributed to Lord Baltimore than the passing of the Catholic emancipation act was to be attributed to the bishops and clergy of the church of England.

Contrast this so-called toleration with soul liberty as preached and practiced by Roger Williams and incorporated in the constitution of his state. Hear his appeal to parliament: "At last to proclaim an absolute soul freedom to all people of the land to pray impartially so that no person be forced to pray or pay otherwise than as his soul believeth or consenteth," and his plea that the Jews be allowed to live "freely and peaceably among them."

Fellow Martyrs

Every Baptist student of history knows and feels that, in spite of former Catholic persecutions and intolerance, the persecution of the Roman church in England and her colonies during the penal days was an example of intolerance and cruelty only equalled by the darkest days before the reformation. We deplore this as a blot upon the Christian religion and we do not forget that Baptists suffered equally with them, but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact so ably brought out by Doctor Kirtley, that whereas Baptists suffered and bled for the principle of soul liberty, Catholics, to their honor, suffered equally martyrdom and the rack for their principles and for the reestablishment of an infallible church whose very existence depends on authority and the controlling and moulding of human thought into the unchangeable structure of the Catholic church.

Mr. Hull states also with perfect truth that there is no such ceremony as "cursing Protestants in Rome on Maunday Thursday." I am unable to find that Doctor Kirtley stated that there was. The bull "In Coena Domini," to which Doctor Kirtley refers, was, according to the Catholic encyclopedia, "A papal bull, so-called from the feast on which it was annually published in Rome: viz. the feast of the Lord's Supper or Maunday Thursday. The ceremony took place in the loggia of St. Peters in the presence of the pope, the college of cardinals and the Roman court . . . The main heads of the offences struck with excommunication in the bull are as follows: (1) apostasy, heresy and schism." I give an extract from the bull in order to show the extreme tolerance of its promulgators. As Mr. Hull is extremely severe on Doctor Kirtley's translation of some Latin passages and for fear that we should not be scrupulously accurate I give it in the original Latin as well as in the English translation.

"Excommunicamus et anathematizamus ex parte Dei omnipotentis, Patris et Filii et Spiritus Sancti, auctoritate quoque B. Apost. Petri et Pauli, ac nostra, quoscunque Hussitas, Wicklephistas, Luteranos, Zuinglianos, Calvinistas, Ugonottas, Anabaptistas, Trinitarios, et a Christi fide Apostatas, ac omnes et singulos alios hereticos, quocunque nomine censeatur, et cujuscunque sectas existant; ac eis credentes eorumque receptatores, fautores, et generaliter quoslibet illorum defensores; ac eorumdem libros haerisin continentes, vel de religione tractantes sine auctoritate nostra et sedis Apostolicae scienter legentes aut imprimentes, seu quomodolibet defendentes."

"We do on the part of Almighty God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit and also by the authority of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul and of our own, excommunicate and curse all Hussites, Wicliffites, Lutherans, Zwinglians, Calvinists, Huguenots, Anabaptists, Trinitarians and Apostates from the faith of Christ, and all and sundry other heretics by whatsoever name they may be reckoned, and of whatsoever sect they may be; and all those who believe in them or their receivers, abettors, and in general all their defenders whatsoever; and those who without our authority and that of the Apostolic See knowingly read or retain or print or in any way defend the books containing their heresy or treating of religion."

I am not endeavoring to assert that this bull has the force of an infallible utterance, and, to their honor, it was vigorously attacked by eminent members of the Roman church, but at the same time it was with various additions and emendations published annually for over 400 years in the presence of the sovereign pontiff, and can presumably be taken as the considered opinion of the church that issued and sanctioned it. It would be interesting to know how Mr. Hull explains it away. The glory of the church of Rome is its unchangeable attitude. If this bull was the expression of Catholic doctrine in 1870, and the benevolent doctrine of universal toleration enunciated at the Chicago eucharistic conference is the opinion of the same church in 1926, where is the immutable authority of the Rock of Peter? As Mr. Hull doubtless remembers, this bull was not abrogated but superseded by the constitution of Pius IX, "Apostolica Sedis." I suspect that any non-Catholic who reads the current literature and past history of the Catholic church is forced to the opinion that on this point the Catholic church has not materially changed.

Mr. Hull expresses his surprise that "even a Baptist should be ignorant of the fact that Papini is a layman and as such does not speak with authority. It does not require a trained intellect to know, however, that he quotes from a papal utterance which it is to be presumed bears the necessary imprimatur. He states, and quite correctly, that the translation should read, "Moreover we declare, affirm, define and pronounce it necessary to salvation for every human being to be subject to the Roman pontiff," and goes on to explain that the circumstances of the time rendered this bull necessary. Here you have a definite statement by an infallible pope, Boniface VII, in his bull "Unam Sanctam," and no quibbling about dates or circumstances can alter the sense of this amazing utterance.

Again Mr. Hull says that Pope Pius IX in his allocution "Singularem quidem," expressly states that "non Catholics, who may be in good faith and incorrigibly ignorant of the claims of the Catholic church, will be saved." While deeply appreciating this generous statement on the part of the deceased pontiff, I should be glad to know as an uninformed Baptist if this is "tolerance."

To appeal from an infallible pope to another infallible pope, may possibly be sound Catholic controversy, but appears to the non-Catholic investigator as quibbling of an extremely unconvincing sort. The whole question resolves itself into the fact that religious liberty is a God-given right for every human being, Christian or heathen, Jew or Gentile, Catholic or non-Catholic, and the very fact that any church, Roman or non-Roman, presumes to "tolerate" other forms of worship is an intolerable and arrogant assumption of the power of Almighty God.

Evangelism Essential to the Life of the Church

By J. WESLEY ESVELD

A GREAT revival is coming because it is needed. Revival follows spiritual decline and sterility as spring follows winter. In every age when religion has come to its lowest ebb, there is always a saving remnant who long and pray for "times of refreshing." The revival of the soul always precedes the revival of the church and inevitably leads to it. But many who are desirous to see the church revived are unwilling to pay the price of soul revival that the church may be revived. The colored brother said, "I want full salvation but I dreads the process." Before inward renewal is reached, there must be much searching of heart.

The future grows out of the past, and any forecast that we may make touching the next great revival will be determined largely by the outcome of the forces now at work. Studying the present day trend of things, we may safely say that any revival movement in the future will be characterized by a deeper spirituality in every sphere of Christian service. It will give to material things a new evaluation by regarding them as means rather than ends. Just as science is coming to regard the final forces of the universe as spiritual, so religion will come to regard the final ends as spiritual. Judged by this standard, outward activities will be estimated by their spiritual values. Under present conditions, churches are in great danger of losing their dependence upon spiritual essentials, thus disregarding the divine admonition, "Not by might or power, but by my spirit." It cannot be gainsaid that sometimes when an appraisal of what constitutes church success is made, spiritual values are left out. Is a church successful if it has a stately edifice, artistic music, an attractive liturgy, an eloquent and drawing preacher, large and admiring crowds and above all a well-filled treasury? Mere bigness is often mistaken for greatness, outward prosperity for spiritual power.

Dr. Charles R. Goodell, evangelistic secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, says that in traveling over the country he finds the churches, spiritually considered in a moribund condition. They are often bristling with outward social activities, having a name which lives while they are dead; he maintains that the only way that the churches can hope to be revitalized is by getting in touch with the Founder of the church religion. To be detached from Christ is to be separated from the source of spiritual essential and power. Many are putting a hope of the return of Christ in the place of returning to Christ. The movement needed is not a movement on the part of Christ toward us, but a movement on our part toward him. F is the Lord longs and waits, and until this step is taken the superabundant essentials which our parched hearts so sorely need cannot be found.

The second essential is the endeavor to maintain the balance between the outward and the inward sides of evangelism. The religious revival whose passing many deplore and for whose return many long, was too introspective. It sought "it" when it should have sought "Him." The emotion of the soul was the object sought. Carlyle spoke with biting sarcasm of the early church, "With its face forever turned on its own state of mind, asking itself with torturing anxiety of hope and fear, 'Am I right? Am I wrong? Shall I be saved? Shall I not be damned?' What is this at bottom but a new phase of egotism stretched out into the infinite, not always the heavier for its infinitude." Never was there a grosser caricature. Carlyle had nothing to draw with and the well was deep. He simply did not understand the early Christians. It is true that they may have sometimes tarried too long in the confessional and have taken themselves too seriously, but that was not their prevailing mood. They emerged out of the darkness of self-inspection into the sunshine of faith. Their sense of sin was the background upon which was reflected the abounding mercy of God. From the contemplation of self they looked to Jesus and experienced the change which an Old Testament writer describes in these words: "They looked unto Him and were radiant" (V. Isa. 60:1). The prevailing mood of mind and heart was that of spiritual hilarity.

The thing which we must seek to avoid is the idea of complete experience, for we know well that such an idea hinders arresting progress. We must distinguish between adolescence and maturity, which many followers of Christ fail to do, with the result that a finished experience has often been put in the place of a progressive realization of the saving power of Christ. The advocates of the doctrine of the higher life have often caused unnecessary confusion by failing to see what modern psychology strongly emphasizes, namely, that the soul is a unit and that it remains intact through every change of experience. Until the close of the struggle is the sword exchanged for the crown. There can be no finality in religious experience. We follow a flying goal. The watchword of every struggling soul should be: "Not that I have already attained, or am already made perfect; but I press on, if perchance that I may lay hold on that which also I was laid hold on by Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:12). Nothing tends more to the stultification of the religious life than resting in some rich and blessed experience of the past, instead of making experience a living reality in the present. Religion is life; it is a fluid, not a solid; it is plastic, not stereotyped; it is ever enlarging because it is ever growing.

Sometimes it advances by leaps and bounds, but more generally it advances by slow and sometimes painful steps. Its normal course is, "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." But its progress is never uniform. There are times of decay as well as times of growth and in development there often occur "seasons" from which date new beginnings. But the one thing that is never reached is a stopping place. Until quite recently, the pendulum of religious interest swung decidedly to the side of personal salvation; but now swinging quite as decidedly in the direction of social salvation. We are coming to think of man not as an individual unit, but as an interrelated social being, tied up in the same bundle and possessing community interests that overlap all barriers of rank or race. This has given a new world view to our religious thinking. We are using the old words, "The Whole Wide World for Jesus," but we put into these old words a new content of meaning. We think of the world intensively as well as extensively and desire that every part and particle of its varied life be brought under the sway of Jesus. This implies that the new essential of evangelism will put itself behind every movement of social welfare. But in doing this it will give equal emphasis to the personal side of religion. It will follow Christ's order of world redemption, working from center to circumference, from saved souls to a saved world.

The new evangelism will also be characterized by emotional expression. In some quarters much harm doubtless has been wrought by emotional overstrain. But an icy intellectualism has taken the place of emotion, and we have become ashamed or afraid to show our hearts. Evangelistic enthusiasm is at a discount, and we have become decorous and dull. But Christianity is a religion of the heart, and the heart must be allowed to speak. Deep devotion always stirs the emotions, and the emotions, as the word indicates, are the things that move. They are the power behind the ball that send it singing to its mark. The right attitude to be maintained is expressed in the words of Paul: "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is riot; but be filled with the spirit." And God knows that is the supreme need of the hour, though some of the laity think we need other things more. Religious emotion should be something "too deep for sound or foam," yet so impelling in its power as to carry the soul forward into consecrated paths of sacrificial service.

The new evangelism will have regard for the union of human and divine action in personal and social salvation. This may be illustrated by the first miracle of Christ, the changing of water into wine, in which the whole of his earthly work was foreshadowed. Jesus ordered that the waterpots be filled with water, and when this was done the miracle was wrought; so when we do our part in filling to the brim the vessel of moral obligation, the power of Christ, which transmutes the water into the sweet rich wine of the heavenly kingdom, is exercised. In the light of this principle the doctrine of sanctification as presented in the New Testament needs to be reinterpreted. It is set forth under two aspects as the act of God, and as the act of man. "The God of peace sanctify you wholly" is the way in which it is put under the first of these aspects. These words evidently mean that God accepts the surrendered life and sets it apart in its entirety for his service. He uses the whole man, body and soul. Under the second aspect the man consecrates himself to the service of God by giving his entire life, yielding his body as a living sacrifice, which is spiritual service. By this consecration of the entire man he becomes a chosen vessel for the Master's use. Holiness is wholeness. A holy man is not one who gives to the Lord fragments of his life but one who gives him all he has. This wholeness is realized in Christ. We are "complete in him."

Finally and chiefly, the new evangelistic movement, which is surely coming, will have its center and source in a first-hand experience of Christ. It will not attempt to live upon the stale manna of a past experience but will gather its manna fresh every morning. The thought of men must be fixed on Christ alone. We must not make less of him as an example of faith but we must make more of him as the object of faith. We shall not make less of him as a revealer of the Father, but more of him as the revelation of the Father; we shall not make less of "Jesus' way" but more of him as the Way; we shall not make less of his philosophy of life, but more of him as the Lord and giver of life, the one who has said, "I am come that ye may have life, and that ye may have it abundantly." In a word, Christ must be made central and sufficient.

The Devotional Life

The Anchor of the Soul

"Lay hold of the hope set before us; which we have as an anchor of the soul."—Hebrews 6:18-19

BY CHARLES FOSTER WEEDEN

RELIGION is a rudder, sail and star.

Have you ever been aboard a ship when the steering gear has broken? You know the feeling of helplessness, the uncertainty, the drifting with the wind and tide.

Carlyle puts the thought thus: "Let a night be never so dark or tempestuous yet the hope of the morning is a mercy and a light. How sick then they who are helpless. Everlastingness is the sting and poison of all miseries. Heaven is a day that shall never see any approaches of night. Hell is a night that shall never see any dawning of day."

A woman, with burning houses around her, fleeing for refuge carried the big family Bible close in her arms. That book had births, deaths, marriages recorded in its pages. Its teaching was the hope of that woman. Her earthly chattels were consumed but the truth, the instruction of that book anchored her soul to God. The book gave impressions of her Saviour, of a power that quenched the fires of sin in her soul. A Bible at Wayside Inn printed in German and Swedish is one of the valued souvenirs and curios. We get impressions of a desk, a coin, a flower, by touch; of color and shape by eyesight.

The Written Impression

So we get images of Christ upon our heart by continued impressions of him. The Bible is the written impression, a hope both sure and steadfast, and entering into that which is within the veil. What has steadied President Coolidge? Thoroughness, courageous fidelity to duty and a sense of spiritual values.

A broken-down Boston banker wearied unto death, facing a thirty days' lease of life has confessed that the loss of spiritual sensations appalled him. He had not prayed for ten years. He now declares that his only escape was through a dominant faith in God. Wall street, Downing street, State street call for the faith of their childhood, a faith which has its basis in religion. Only confidence in God will reestablish political life, personal character and saneness in the business world.

To be without food means gnawing hunger; without raiment, coldness and shame; without money, worry; without friends, a lonely and forlorn life; without hope, insanity; without God, the loss of everything worth having.

You have noticed in some humble homes a picture you could hardly dignify by the name of painting, yet it expresses a great idea, a Father's love.

The Soul's Anchor

The picture portrays an angry sea and leaping waves; in the midst of the storm is a rock, and a cross is imbedded in the rock; a figure is seen clinging with both hands to the arms of the cross—Calvary as an anchor to the soul.

General Armstrong once said that this creed was enough for him: "Simply to thy cross I cling."

Every man is driven to that sometime in his life. It has been said that no great work or character of literature was ever created without sin at the center, from the "Prometheus Bound," by Aeschylus, to Dante's Inferno, Macbeth, Othello, Faust, Les Misérables, Romola, David Copperfield, The Dawn of a Tomorrow,

The Blue Window. The twistiest thing in the world is human nature; the most awful fact of the universe is human sin. The most glorious hope in time and eternity is Jesus, Saviour of Men.

But there is always manifest the uplift of human love. That love is the strongest, the truest, the most beautiful, the most enduring when supported by the divine love, and that divine Father's love is best portrayed by the suffering in Gethsemane and on Calvary.

But a second picture is more suggestive still. It represents the same idea. I saw it in white marble in a Scotch home at Edinburgh. There is the same sweeping billow and perilous sea; the same cross imbedded in a rock; the figure now is holding to the cross with one hand and reaching down with the other to rescue a sinking form. It represents service as an anchor to the soul. Satan's craft is to lure you into discouragement. Whenever you are helping others you are never in despair. Coming to the Lord's table is our clinging to the Christ; this is the soul's anchor. The church needs to be held to its moorings, the nation to its Christian ideals. If only we were deeply interested, every church would be crowded.

The Autocracy of Service

Let us be thoughtful to stretch out our hands and draw others to the shelter, safety, forgiveness and love of the Father.

President Harding said, "I would rejoice to acclaim the era of the Golden Rule and crown it with the autocracy of service."

Hope in God, service, through sacrifice if you will, are anchors to the soul of the nation, the home and the church.

"How is it, shipmate?" was asked of a Christian sailor as he faced the last dark adventure. With a smile the answer came, "The anchor holds."

"Therefore, my brethren, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved."

Young People and the Kingdom

CONDUCTED BY EDWIN PHELPS, GENERAL SECRETARY, B. Y. P. U. OF A.

Meeting Helps" on Devotional Topic for December 12 SEEING THE OTHER FELLOW'S SIDE

(Note: These "helps" are built around the material given in "Young People's Leader," the official magazine "for all Baptist young people." Subscriptions to the "Leader" may be made through the B. Y. P. U. of A., at $1 per year.)

The suggestions for the topic presentation in Leader are good and need not be amplified. However, if you do not care to use the "Three Episodes" as given, you may want to vary them slightly.

Have a blackboard at the front of the room. After the leader and perhaps one or two group members have presented the material under "For the Leader" and "How to Use the Golden Rule," someone else may go to the board and write a few harsh criticisms of one of the characters suggested in Leader—possibly "the Country Jake" which is given first. While he is writing, some one else may be writing the true story (briefly, of course) of the character criticized. Then the leader may read the criticism. When it finishes, the person at the back of the board may turn the board around to show the other side. The leader may, somewhat in surprise, read this also.

If you care to go to a little trouble, three large cardboard placards may be made, one side of each containing a criticism of one of the characters mentioned in Leader, the other side containing the true story. These placards may be displayed, first one side, then the other, as suggested with the board above.

The leader or a group member may make a few concluding comments about the days looking on the other side of a situation before making condemnatory remarks about a person, or passing judgment upon his actions.

"Listen, World!"

Some time ago Warren Avenue church, Detroit, Mich., had a combined meeting of the B. Y. P. U. and church. The topic was "Youth and Its Critics." It was a helpful meeting. Here is the speech which Emily Case, a seventeen-year-old girl, gave. It is worth reading and heeding.

When I heard my topic for tonight, "Facing Youth," I had several queer sensations. The first was surprise that I should be allowed to discuss such a topic before a church congregation. The second was joy and relief that at last I was going to be faced without fear—because only when we face a state of affairs squarely can we hope to untangle it. Hundreds of articles and books have been written recently about modern youth. It would be impossible to review all of these. So I have taken a few and added the opinions of some of the young people whom I know personally.

The best way to get at the heart of matters is to list specific charges and try—being one of those queer and unexplainable creatures, a modern youth—to justify or explain these charges.

I have a big task before me, a task that has made me think, for I must try to give you older people the slant on life that we younger people have.

We are supposed to pet, drink, smoke, read literature that is not particularly uplifting, dance in a way that makes our mothers and fathers raise their hands in holy terror, and otherwise be as wicked as we can possibly be.

Let's begin with the first—petting. Modern youth is being raised under the wing of science. Naturally the contagion of science is spreading through its ranks. And young people, truly intelligent young people, with a scientific and rational view of life, decidedly do not pet. They recognize its dangers, its absolute unintelligence. I am not saying that petting does not exist; it does, but cannot you older people see that it is merely a gesture of defiance as is all the rest of the list?

Young people have been talked about until they are heartily sick of it. And there are some who think that they might as well have the name as the reputation. But intelligent young people whose energies are directed in the right channels are growing more numerous and are spreading the new doctrine that petting is really declassé. And if a certain class of young people cannot be reached by a more intelligent point of view, they can be reached through the channels of "fad." When they recognize that a "fad" is going out they immediately turn to the new ones. Unstable, I admit, but, thank goodness, most of our young people are intelligent and wise enough to establish intelligent fads, which will in time cease to be fads, but will become established institutions.

We can dispose of the rest of the list in exactly this same way. These things are gestures of defiance, and as such I do not think we need to be worried about them. I do not mean that we should take them lightly, but I shall tell you why they should not worry us. Youth at the present time is drunk with freedom. Youth has always been rebellious. In the mid-Victorian period there was a new woman and people wondered what the world was coming to, but then youth couldn't get away with it simply because youth did not have economic independence. Today we have this independence, and as it is a new thing, some of us have not learned to distinguish between liberty and license. People say (perhaps your own mother has said), "Young people are so cock-sure." And they get impatient about it. But let me tell you a secret: The cock-sureness of youth is nothing but an effort to cover up its own doubts and weaknesses from a non-understanding and non-sympathetic adult world. Did any of you older people ever repeat a thing desperately to yourself to convince yourself of its rightness or wrongness?

The world has undoubtedly progressed. We have evidence of that in the auto, motion picture, radio and airplane. Naturally, trying to bring this generation up by the standards of fifty years ago, by ancient precept instead of modern practice, is sure to cause trouble. Youth has progressed with the world, and age does not approve. With abundant vitality youth experiments with new social forms which the adult world has not the courage to assay. Often the experiments are miserable failures, but they are experiments nevertheless. And how shall we learn except by the well-known method of trial and error?

I am not trying to condone the faults of youth; they are glaringly self-evident. What is not so apparent is the need for a fresh approach to the age-old problem of human association.

Perhaps I am very young in my thinking when I say that I cannot be terribly concerned over the whole situation. It seems to me to be a natural phase of a big scheme that is being worked out. I should like to live about 200 years more and watch the continuation of this plan. It ought to be interesting if we are to judge by this part of it. Judge Lindsay ends his book, "The Revolt of

(Continued on page 1285)

November 28 topic
FOLLOWING THE FRONTIER

December 5 Topic
THE UNIVERSAL SYMPATHY
OF CHRIST

For a full treatment of these topics
see Young People's Leader.

The Chimney Corner

Sandoe's Pocket*

BY ELSIE SINGMASTER

BY nine o'clock the November sun shone brightly into Sandoe's Pocket. The Pocket lay so deep in the high hills that it was late before the last long shadow shrank into nothingness. The first sunbeam was reflected from the windows of old Mrs. Gates' house, high on the western rim; the last set ablaze the windows of Miss Tinley's house and the schoolhouse, high in the east.

Mrs. Gates, whom the other inhabitants of the Pocket called "The Madam," had traveled; once she had lived in Hagerstown and several times she visited her sister in Gettysburg. Moreover Mrs. Gates had MONEY—that was the way Sandoe's Pocket thought of her fortune. Twice a year she received a paper which entitled her to draw $20 from the post-office. Now, having moved from her house to a more lowly abode, far down in the very bottom of the Pocket, she was still to be distinguished; she had directed that her estate be devoted to the purchase of a MONUMENT—that was the way Sandoe's Pocket thought of Mrs. Gates' tombstone. The daughter of an itinerant preacher, she had proud ideas; it was natural that she should hate the thought of lying forgotten under masses of nettle and burdock.

HALF the inhabitants of the Pocket stood around Miss Tinley's little car, parked before her door. Miss Tinley was the teacher and a mysterious person. More often than not there was no teacher at all, because the Pocket could furnish none and no outsider would stay through the long winter. There was little pay and no companionship and when one was in, one stayed in. A few of the men could read, but none of the women in any of the twenty-five families knew A from B.

Mrs. Gates, it was true, was able to read and write both, but she was an exception to everything. She knew about the affairs of the world and about modern invention. Her neighbors knew nothing; they had no books, no papers. There was no telephone, there were no phonographs. It was 1925, but no woman had seen a train, though there were trains within fifteen miles, and none would venture to look upon a train. Only a few of the boys would ride in Miss Tinley's car and none would go far away. It seemed incredible, but even the spirit of adventure was dead. Miss Tinley had hoped to help them all; now she was afraid she could help no one. She had a favorite, young George Wolf, who learned rapidly and who, she believed, had an exceptional mind, but he would not hear of going away outside the Pocket to school.

Why Miss Tinley had come, no one knew. She was no longer young—the mothers of five or six children reckoned her to be their own age, at least twenty-five—but she was still agile and good-looking enough to find some sort of husband. She was really capable. She could handle even a saw and plane, which was more than many of the men of the Pocket could do. Surely she could not expect to find a husband in the Pocket! In all its speculations in the tiny store and the cabins, the Pocket came nowhere near the truth, which was that it was the subject of an experiment. The state department of education was looking aghast at some of its rural communities and Miss Tinley was sent not only to teach but also to live. The Pocket showed plainly what would happen when God was forgotten and law was not kept. Miss Tinley lived with economy and simplicity, but in comfort and decency, as any of her neighbors might live if they possessed ambition and made a little exertion. Her windows were washed, her tablecloth was clean, and she let it be known that she bathed her body daily. When she shampooed her hair, she let it fly in the summer breeze and all the Pocket expected her immediate demise.

The discussion of her was general and continuous, but it was not taken part in at one time by all. The Pocket was divided by a feud, whose beginning no one remembered, but whose duration seemed likely to be eternal. The residents did not shoot one another at sight or from ambush, but they talked about one another with scandalous tongues. Occasionally a garden was destroyed, occasionally windows were broken, but no damage was done to life. The children of the Stoughs and Wambaughs and Starks sat on one side of the schoolroom, the children of the Saxs and the Yeatts and the Wolfs on the other. Miss Tinley was wise; she took things as they were and made no radical changes. When the women of the Wambaughs and the Starks and the Stoughs came to visit her the others stayed away. Then the Wambaughs and the Starks and the Stoughs stayed away because they were accused of toadying. Then no one came. In vain Miss Tinley planned entertainment and meetings; in vain she heated the schoolhouse. Gradually she gave up hope of reconciliation; she had, she believed, tried everything.

THIS morning the Saxs and the Wolfs and the Yeatts reached Miss Tinley's door first. They were a poor looking crew, the untidy women were wrapped in old shawls, the unshaven men wore ancient suits of corduroy and dark woolen shirts. A few of the women had babies in their arms, but the proportion of the children was small; physically, well as in every other way, the dwellers in the Pocket were degenerating. They stood about open-mouthed waiting for Miss Tinley to come out. The occasion was notable: it was a month since Mrs. Gates died, and today Miss Tinley, her executor, was going to Hagerstown to settle her affairs and to buy the monument about which Mrs. Gates had talked all her later years.

"It'll be twenty feet high," prophesied old man Yeatts. Stretching up his head he seemed to reach almost twenty feet himself, giant that he was. He looked able for Herculean tasks but he could do nothing but shoot a few squirrels and occasionally and surreptitiously a deer.

"She can't bring no twenty-foot monument up the road in her car!" said her son-in-law, George Wolf, scornful. George was almost as large and even more able-looking than old man Yeatts and he did even less.

Suddenly an amazing statement was made in a clear voice. The Pocket had never heard its like.

"You oughtn't to say, 'You can't bring no.' That isn't grammar!"

"Grammar!" George looked threateningly at his mentor, who was also a son. "I'll grammar you!"

Miss Tinley came out the door. Blue-eyed, erect, wiry, the essence of energy and ability, she looked around smiling and at the same time wondering in her heart whether any one, even those to whom she had done the most, would care if she never returned.

"You're coming back tonight?"

"I hope to, before dark."

Miss Tinley stepped into her car. The older people feared it and crowded each other hurriedly aside.

"We'll have falling weather," prophesied old Yeatts.

Miss Tinley nodded without hearing what was said. She looked up sadly at Mrs. Gates' house across the Pocket. Mrs. Gates had been her understanding friend; now she had no one. But she could still do one thing for Mrs. Gates: she could obey her directions exactly. A glow came into her eyes. After the hope of helping the Pocket with thanks to Mrs. Gates, not quite extinct.

(To be continued)

"They's allus talkin' 'bout doin' nothin' but," said an old negro. "Well I see right to hold my haid up—I just do my two bits. I gib em twenty-f cents!"

*This story appeared in the October issue of the Woman's Home Companion, and is reprinted here by special permission of that publication and also of the author.

BOYS and Girls

Two and Two Make—What?

TIMMY said they made four. "Of course they do!" said he. Peggy decided they didn't have to—at least not when they were stamps.

Timmy said stamps and potatoes and elephants and needles and engines and eggs and balls and pansies and airplanes and steamboats and shovels and feathers and—and pins "and everything" were all-a-piece; they were just—things. And everybody everywhere knew that two and two made four. Timmy got quite red in the face about it. It was lovely to see him so desperately in earnest!

But Peggy was just as much in earnest. She said two and two made something else, ever and ever so often. And with that she sallied forth, down the front walk, along the street, and into a neighbor's house. Timmy watched her carefully: sisters were certainly the dearest and queerest persons. Almost, you hated them, sometimes. But down underneath you knew it was just because they were older and wiser and put on airs, as if a few years made all the difference in the world.

Timmy decided to go to the one really important person whom all sorts of important people in town came to consult. So he hurried quickly to Uncletim's office in the bank.

"Uncletim," said he, as man to man, almost as banker to banker, "can two and two ever equal anything but four?"

Uncletim placed the tips of the fingers of his left hand against the tips of the fingers of his right hand, which is quite the correct way for all bankers and important people to act when thinking, the result of course inclined slightly to the left or right, which ever seems more convenient. He hemmed and hawed a little, and also, so that Timmy was impressed that this was indeed a proper and dignified interview.

"Yes," said Uncletim, "two and two do make more than four. What do you ask?"

"Peggy," he sighed. "She's acting too queer. She's going from house to house, looking at the front door, almost as if she was an agent or something like that. And she says it's stamps—stamps that make the difference, I mean. But I said, 'I guess I ought to know, that stamps and elephants and thimbles and twogs and buttons and pansies and parines and pins are all-of-a-piece, 'things.' I guess I mentioned a lot of other words to her, but you see what I mean, don't you? How are stamps any different?"

Uncletim was mystified. But a banker never admits that he is baffled by anything financial, so Uncletim shook his head wisely. "One should not give away

The Explorers' Club

CONDUCTED BY MARGARET T. APPELGARTH

state secrets, my dear young nephew. I shall invite myself to dinner at your house and we shall see what we shall see, Peggy permitting. Stamps? Well! Well!

Timmy departed. He decided to see what he could see first, for himself. And as an experiment he wrote down two, then another two beside it. Instantly he chuckled loudly.

"Ah ha!" cried Timmy. "Of course! Twenty-two!" And feeling very clever, he decided to play detective with Peggy for the rest of the afternoon. And sure enough, he found her still going from neighbor's house to neighbor's house. She had a little book; it looked like a blankbook. And the neighbors always smiled at her. They went away from the door; they came back with something they seemed to enjoy giving her. It was all a great mystery! You can hardly blame Timmy-the-detective for hiding in a nearby bush at the house, where, as plain as day, he could hear Peggy saying:

"Oh, Mrs. Pelham, have you a book in the house?"

"A book? What book, Peggy Hatha-way?" and Mrs. Pelham laughed.

"Oh, just any book! You have one then?"

"One? Why, I have hundreds of them, dear child, maybe thousands, I don't know."

"Oh! I see!"

Mrs. Pelham looked mystified.

"What's it all about, anyhow?"

"Well, I'm trying to get you surprised and perplexed and interested, as good agents should. Er-er-er—do you think you are a bit perplexed and interested already?"

Mrs. Pelham laughed heartily: "I'm mystified completely!"

"That's just lovely," Peggy sighed. "You see, first I had to be sure you had a book. And next I'd like to know if you have even one book you think I'd be interested in reading?"

"Indeed, I have! Do you want to borrow one, dear?"

"Oh, no," said Peggy. "I'm just asking questions! You see, over in India and China and all those places in the Orient there aren't books for children, and it doesn't seem fair. So in every house where American friends of mine have even one book for children to read I'm asking if they'll please give me one red postage stamp, a new one, of course, because if enough of these stamps get collected, then a book—just one book—can be translated for the children of that nation. You wouldn't mind giving me just one stamp, would you, Mrs. Pelham? For a Christmas present for a bookless nation of children?"

"I should say not!" said Mrs. Pelham, smilingly, "I think it's a splendid idea! Just wait a minute." And away she rushed to her desk. When she came back she had more than one stamp.

"Peggy dear, you'd be thrilled to have all these, wouldn't you?"

Peggy gasped. There was so much redness that she was indeed thrilled.

"Oh, I never dreamed you'd catch on about it so nicely," she said, in her quaint little way. Then she took her notebook and opened at a page. "This is your page. I'll write your name here, and I won't paste in the stamps because, you see, I've got to mail them unpasted to Miss Applegarth . . . oh well, you wouldn't know her name. But I certainly do thank you just lots and lots."

"And I thank you," said Mrs. Pelham.

Now of course Timmy was beginning to understand Peggy's mysterious reference to stamps. He had a sudden notion.

"I'll start in making two and two equal twenty-two myself," he decided. He dashed through backyards to the next street, where he began just as Peggy had begun, continued just as Peggy had continued, and ended just as Peggy had ended, except for the fact that he had no notebook. And people gave him stamps just as they had given them to Peggy. It was amazing! It was amusing! It was delightful! And of course it was so absolutely worth while.

By the time Uncletim came to dinner he found two eager children waiting for him.

"How much do two and two make?" they shouted.

"Twenty-two, if they're stamps all sitting in a row!" he smiled.

And it occurs to me that what Peggy did, and what Timmy did, you can do. Just read our boys' and girls' pages for Nov. 13, 20 and then mail your stamps loose in a sealed envelope with your name and address to:

MISS MARGARET APPELGARTH,
14 Arnold Park, Rochester, N. Y.

(Continued from page 1283)

Modern Youth," by saying: "It is hard to look at a thing that is near and yet see afar; it is hard to draw ones breath in mortal pain here in the valley of the shadow and yet remember the hills from whence cometh our help. It is hard to believe in God more and man less, and yet, paradoxical as it may seem, we find that believing in God more gives us unbounded faith in youth, modern youth." At any rate, it is a wonderful experiment."

Churches at Work

If your church has developed interesting and effective methods of carrying on its work, we shall be glad to have an opportunity of telling other churches about them through the medium of this page. Material should be addressed to the Board of Missionary Cooperation, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

WE SAIL SOON

In about a month Northern Baptists will be embarking on a tour around the world. There is no age limit and children are looking forward to the sailing date, Jan. 1, 1927, as eagerly as their elders. No Baptist family can afford to miss this opportunity of circling the world by the same route our missionaries have taken. Do not fail to get a ticket if you have not already done so.

A CHURCH AT WORK

IN PORTO RICO

Miss Alice L. Ryder, missionary at Puerta de Tierra, Porto Rico, writes: "At the conference of Baptist people in the spring, it was decided to begin a campaign to raise funds for the evangelizing of our island with the special motive of building a chapel in a much-needed section of the island. The plan accepted was on the basis that each Baptist was to put aside each day a certain amount toward this endeavor. Because our church is interested in a special district near us, we decided to double that amount and divide the results between the two fields. Great interest was manifested throughout the campaign which came to a close in May. At this time the offerings were brought in at a special meeting and scenes of the advancement of the work in Porto Rico were shown. While the pictures were being exhibited, behind the screen a chapel was built of the receptacles, small barrel banks, which had held the money. Needless to say, our people rejoiced in this privilege that was theirs."

A BIT FROM THE WEST

Miss Mildred Cummings, missionary supervisor of the western district who has just returned from a trip, tells us of the Mexican work in Phoenix, Ariz.: "When we arrived in the city we were glad our summer clothes were in our suitcases because even so early in the morning we realized that it was going to be much hotter than we were used to."

"We went directly to the mission and saw an attractive, light-colored building, built in true Spanish style. Regular Christian-center activities are carried on each day of the week. Bath tubs in the building have proved a welcome convenience. We enjoyed worshiping with the good people on the Sabbath day. How joyfully the gospel songs were sung, but their prayers touched us more than anything else. Their hearts' joys and sorrows were poured into the ears of a Father who knows and understands.

"Fourteen of the Mexicans and the missionaries held a service in the jail in the afternoon. A more reverent, interested, attentive group than those prisoners, as they listened to the story of salvation, I have never seen."

WORTH-WHILE BOYS

"The Chinese boys' home and orphanage in Berkeley is the only place in America where the neglected Chinese boy can find a home. Often the juvenile court sends boys there. We have fifty there now and have had to refuse four boys because we had no funds for their support. It is really preparing missionaries for the foreign field. When ten of the boys were baptized I asked each to write a letter expressing his hopes and desires. Every one of these boys, whom we are educating both in English and Chinese, expressed a desire to go back home and carry the gospel."—C. E. Tingley.

CHRISTMAS SUGGESTIONS

All churches are reminded that state offices are supplying special envelopes of decorative design for the Christmas offering. This offering is being promoted again by the women of the denomination and every member of every Baptist church, congregation, Sunday school and young people's society is urged to help make the 1926 Christmas collection a record one. It is a good plan for each church to decide on a definite date for collection of the envelopes, whether it be on Sunday, Dec. 26, or at the time when the Sunday-school Christmas program is presented. Be sure that all envelopes given out are accounted for.

The Christmas offering will count on the church's quota for 1926-1927 for the missionary work of the denomination. Special mention will be made in the denominational press of the state and district which report the largest contribution.

One successful method of using the special envelope is to go through the church membership list, write down the names of those who make no regular missionary gift and follow with a personal call upon such non-contributing members, leaving the envelope with an explanation of its purpose.

A UNIQUE PLAN

First church, Phoenix, Ariz., used novel method to stimulate interest in meetings of its young people's union known as the Hi-B. Y. P. U. The members of the church were told that there was doubt about continuing the union and that a decision would be made the next week. The next Sunday morning in Sunday school and church, a summons to a trial for that evening was read. said that the Hi-B. Y. P. U. had been accused—supposedly by the trustees of the church—of not living up to all its purposes and of not having done enough to make up for what the church was giving the union.

That night the trial was held and judge heard the charges presented by prosecuting attorney and the replies of the attorney for the defense. The witnesses were the officers of the union and the chairmen of committees. After cross-examination, it was discovered that there were many points in which the members had fallen short, but also many points in favor of the B. Y. P. U. Evidence was submitted to the jury and it was announced that the decision of the jury would be given in six months depending upon the work done and the enthusiasm shown during that time.

The members report much more interest in the union since the trial and many agreeable events have occurred. There has been an increase in members willing to take part in the meetings and many are giving more in the collections.

The Baptist literature bureaus and department of missionary education are announcing a new Christmas service—Baptist Sunday schools, entitled "Christmas Wise Men," by Rev. and Mr. Wilbur Nelson. It is free to Baptist Sunday schools.

Want Ads

Chaplain Frank M. Wells, "The Sole Evangelist", National Military Home, Leavenworth, Kan. Twenty-fifth season. T. open for fall and winter meetings. Pastor wanting Bible evangelist. Ter. Entertainment and $50 up weekly according to financial strength of church.

For Sale by Judson Press. 1107 Mc St., Kansas City, Mo. "Christmas Joy" a new forty-minute play for children. eighteen to twenty-five characters. A humorous, full of teaching.

Among Ourselves

Regional Conferences in Europe—Significant Meetings in Spain, Hungary and Poland

By J. H. RUSHBROOKE

HALF of our time on the continent lies behind; and notwithstanding the great disappointment of finding ourselves unable to enter Russia the conspicuous success of the "regional conference" plan already appears. The World Alliance has become a reality in the homes of thousands of Baptists to whom it had been but a name. They appreciate the American Baptists near, and appreciate more fully the interest which foreign mission boards are displaying to their fellow believers throughout Europe. The action of the British Union in appointing Mr. Aubrey as its special representative has also been valuable. The fact that my countrymen have elected him their president and that this tour takes place during my presidential year, coupled with the designation of Mr. Aubrey to accompany me, has spoken eloquently of the rising interest of English Baptists in the continent.

President Mullins

One distinctive feature of this journey is the course that it represents—a presidential visitation of our communities by President Mullins. His devotion to the world-wide interests of the denomination has never been more conspicuously displayed than in his willing response to the request of the alliance executive to undertake such a visitation. It is an immense gain to our people—a minority in every country of Europe and in some small minority—to be brought into contact with one who represents both the world-wide fellowship and the large convention in existence. He invites in his own person the greatness of Baptists—their strength alike in people and in numbers. I rejoice that this eminent theologian and leader has made it possible to visit Europe and am sure that if next year he is able to do this hopes of touring the southern hemisphere—New Zealand, Australia, and Africa—on behalf of the alliance, will add to the glories of a historic journey and—what will appeal more to himself—to its inspirational force for our great community. That winning all hearts goes without saying and those who are privileged to travel with him find the fellowship a pure are a party of six—Doctor Mullins representing himself directly representing the World Alliance; Doctors Gill and the American Baptist Foreign Boards; and Mr. Aubrey, the English Baptists. We have been fortunate in having also George W. Norton, Jr., a young American lawyer who has just completed his legal studies at Harvard and promises to render large service to the denomination. His grandfather and his father have been treasurers of the Southern Baptist Convention, and he has now been elected to the same position. His family is conspicuous for its support of good causes, especially of the Louisville seminary on whose governing body he serves. He is a charming companion and a man of great ability, though he restricts his public utterances to the minimum insisting, against all available evidence, that he is no speaker.

A Protestant Congress in Spain.

The Baptist Times which reached me a few hours ago contained Mr. Towne's compact but comprehensive account of the Barcelona meetings. It is to be hoped that their significance will be appreciated. Spain is not a Baptist country and its dominant Romanism shows no extravagant tendencies toward toleration. Yet the spirit of the age has so far asserted itself that in the greatest commercial city of that land an international Baptist conference has been permitted, not a large gathering, perhaps 500 at the most. There are few of our people in Spain, the cost of travel reduced to a minimum the attendance from Portugal, and Signor Mussolini's regulations, that from Italy. Nevertheless, those countries with France and Belgium, were represented. The tone of the meetings was eminently satisfactory. The secular press was apparently instructed to ignore the gathering; but I doubt if anything since the reformation has been more significant for Spain than that this congress has taken place. Doctor Mullins' address on "A Self-Consistent Baptist Message" will live and bear fruit. He and I spoke three or four times; the absence of an Italian (detained by Signor Mussolini) threw upon me, at the request of the local committee, the responsibility of dealing with "The Centrality of Christ." Doctor Gill, whose board is doing so much for Spain, read a fine paper following the general line of his address at Leeds on "The World Significance of European Christianity."

Budapest: Crowds and Enthusiasm.

Barcelona moved me deeply, as it would any one who looks below the surface. Probably we shall find nothing more significant. But Budapest needed no effort of understanding. Here, in an atmosphere of liberty, with the cultus-minister represented at the welcome meeting by one of his leading officials, the Hungarian Baptists had organized to purpose. The big opening meeting in one of the largest halls of the city gave the keynote of enthusiasm and unity and I had the privilege of introducing there the visiting deputation, now enlarged by Mr. Aubrey's arrival. He will probably tell of the wonderful music at that meeting and at the still bigger closing demonstration with nearly 3000 people present, and of the remarkable services on Sunday. The conferences proper took place in the German church, and an interested attendant throughout was the widow of Heinrich Meyer, the pioneer of Baptist work in the country, a gifted expositor of the scriptures as well as a great evangelist.

Impressions of Budapest are vivid and varied. In the beautiful Hungarian capital strong deputations attended from Roumania, Jugo-Slavia, and Czecho-Slovakia as well as from Austria and Hungary itself. The Roumanians have still a bad time; recent changes at the cultus ministry in Bukarest are of sinister significance, and we listened to stories which leave little room for hope that the new government will declare a policy calculated to satisfy lovers of freedom. But the fine courage and the confident good cheer with which the brethren are facing their situation compel unqualified admiration. They have baptized 2300 converts this year, and hundreds are awaiting baptism. In Jugo-Slavia advance is most encouraging. The women are splendid; in Roumania and Hungary they are doing great things and it was good to hear their voices in the conference. Doctor Prochazka, and others represented Czecho-Slovakia, and Mr. Joseph Novotny who could not attend sent a letter of greeting. Need I say that Doctor Mullins had a huge welcome and a warm

The Golden Day

(Dec. 5, 1926, International Golden Rule Sunday)

By ARTHUR WALLACE PEACH

THE guns of war are silent,
The bugles' lips are still,
And hands across the world unite
To banish hate and ill,
To join all lands and nations
In trust that shall not cease,
To make one day the golden day—
The golden day of peace!

No more do homes burn redly
In battle's afterglow,
But little children wait in vain
A mother's greeting low.
The world's great heart must succor
Frail hands that blindly grope,
And make of childhood's darkened day
A golden day of hope!

The years with tender meaning
Shall hide old griefs away,
And new dawns light the distant hills
And bring a nobler day;
And this shall be the promise
And prophecy thereof,
This day of open hearts and hands—
A golden day of love!

response as he discoursed on the mission of Baptists and other themes? I had a glorious time at the huge closing assembly, and, speaking in German, was particularly fortunate in my interpreter, Mr. Adler, who translated my words into Hungarian. In meetings like these almost everything turns at times upon the competence of interpreters. Doctor Mullins and Mr. Aubrey were happy in having as their translator Mr. Baranyay, formerly a student of Regents Park and of Louisville.

The opening of the new session of the Hungarian preachers' school (now, through the liberality of a Southern Baptist woman, finely housed on the banks of the Danube just opposite the beautiful parliament house) took place on the day following the close of the conference. Doctor Mullins gave a great address; Doctor Gill and I were reminiscent; Mr. Aubrey, always happy with students, was much at home.

Baptist stock stands high in southeastern Europe, and it will rise after this conference. The secular press gave considerable space to descriptions of the larger meetings and interviews with Doctor Mullins and myself.

Extra Meetings: Vienna, Warsaw.

A few hours of waiting in Vienna enabled us all to attend a meeting at the new church building there. The building was by no means filled. For some reason our work is not prospering in this historic and beautiful city. The right leadership has not been found, and the advantages of a center teeming with students are not seized. Our meeting had been called, it is true, with only one Sunday's notice; as things stand at present in Vienna it was locally regarded as a good meeting—therein lies the disappointment.

In contrast to this—if I may depart from chronological order—stands the Warsaw meeting held at equally short notice. Vienna has a beautiful church building; Warsaw two inadequate and unattractive sets of premises. The larger building was overcrowded by a congregation of Germans, Poles, and Russians. Here I represented the alliance in Doctor Mullins' absence; Doctor Lewis, whose board generously assists the Polish work, and Mr. Aubrey also spoke.

Poland and Religious Freedom.

For some months past reports from Poland had disturbed my mind; it appeared as if a policy of repression was to be adopted. I am glad to record that the conditions are far better than I had anticipated. Careful inquiry elicited the fact that official interference was confined to a single district. A preacher was some months ago imprisoned for a day; meetings had been interrupted by the police and Bibles and hymn books seized. Elsewhere fanatical local outbreaks had occasioned anxiety, but these were neither numerous nor organized. By the good offices of the British minister, I was enabled in company with Mr. Aubrey to visit the ministry of cultus and to speak with the deputy minister. He received us courteously, and assured me that such interference as had taken place was due to the indiscretion of a local officer and would at once be stopped. Baptist liberty of worship and preaching in Poland is complete. The only restriction is that if any general conference is called a few days' notice has to be given to the authorities. Their approval is not needed, but they have to be informed of the nature of the gathering—a not unreasonable condition in this part of the world.

Third Regional Conference: Lodz.

The least attractive of all great industrial centers of the world is Lodz, a city of 600,000 inhabitants, where only now are there the beginnings of a system of sewerage. Here German-speaking Baptists are strong, and we met in their chief building. The overflowing enthusiasm of Budapest was not at once evident. The absence of hand clapping during the meetings gives to American and British visitors the mistaken impression of lack of response. In addition, however, there was at the outset a real difficulty. White Russians, Ukrainians, Czechs, Polish nationals, Germans from "Congress Poland" and from Posen (many respects different types), we gathered together. It was the first time that all these groups had met in unit conference and the coming together of these people, all dwelling in Poland but largely strangers to each other, was a definite achievement and a justification of the "regional conference." But various sections had to "find" one another, and as the program was carried through under the guiding motto of these conferences, conspicuously displayed in the church: "Giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," they did find one another. The process went on steadily from the "roll call" and Doctor Mullins' opening speech to the end. No hand clapping was needed to express the warmth of the closing meeting; the steadily strengthening sense of oneness and the growing enthusiasm found

The New Glory Song

ROBERT WHITAKER
IN THE "BAPTIST"

THE NEW GLORY SONG
Dedicated to my friend, John A. Eayl

ERNEST O. SELLERS

1 LO THE FIELD IS THE WORLD, AND THE SEED IS THE WORD, AND AS LARGE AS GOD'S 2 FOR THE WORLD, ALL THE WORLD; AND THE WORD, ALL THE WORD, AND WITH NO MAN AN-3 THEN ALL OUT FOR THE WORLD, AND ALL ON FOR THE WORD; EVERY MAN TO HIS

LOVE IS THE CALL (IS THE CALL) LET NONE EVER DEBAR ANY HEART THAT IS STRIB-OTHER MAN'S THRALL (OTHERS' HEAL) BUT WITH EACH ONE TO ANSWER AS EACH ONE HAS HEAR-PLACE ON THE WALL (ON THE WALL) WITH A WILL TO THE WORK WHERE HIS TASK HAS OCCUR-

REFRAIN -
THERE IS GLORY ENOUGH FOR US ALL - THERE IS

GLORY ENOUGH FOR US ALL, (US ALL) FOR PETER APPOL -

- LOS AND PAUL - FOR THE FAMED AND THE PURE, FOR THE WEAK AND OBSCURE, (APOLLAS AND PAUL)

D.S.

Copyrighted by E.O. Sellers

max there, and radiant faces and happy ces told of the joyful experiences of four days spent together.

There was one shadow: after his open-address Doctor Mullins contracted a and I had to take his place on the gram. It was easy enough, with Mr.
Abrey, Doctors Lewis and Gill and Norton available, to provide all the taking needed, but we were sorry to s our chief. Happily, there is a fine tish hospital in Lodz, and we made comfortable in a private ward. He mending and will probably be well in a day or two, but we are all ining that he shall not take risks. We t keep him well for London on Oct.
22.

he secular press in Lodz has noted conference and printed our pictures.
I brethren have organized everything ressfully. Beyond doubt this "region-conference" idea was inspired of God.
means much to the brethren; for us, it has brought an enrichment of
ia. "We thank God and take courage."
Warsaw, Sept. 28.

Letter from Japan

By O. B. SARBER

INSPIRED with a keen desire to share with our big Baptist family at home e of the rare pleasures of our ney from Gary, Indiana, to join our ghter in Madras, India, permit me to to tell the story of a Sunday in Japan oute.

ur Baptist party on shipboard, conng of Dr. and Mrs. Tilbe of Kalaw, una, Rev. and Mrs. C. L. Conrad and Charles, of Bassien, Burma, and Vida Post of Himegi, Japan, Mrs.
er and myself, arrived at Yoko-Saturday morning, Sept. 25, and met by Dr. Tenney, Mrs. Bickel, Willard Topping of Tokyo, Miss fired Acock of Yokohama and Miss Jesse of Sendai.

ter greetings and passing the cusofficials, Miss Jesse escorted us to ai, whence she had made the trip that purpose. Another and most welcome awaited us at Sendai, by and Mrs. C. H. Ross and their son, rt, and the foreign members of the of the Sendai Baptist Girls' School, Misses Allen, Haven, Newbury and re, and "royal" is the mildest word ig the courtesies and kindnesses on Mrs. Sarber and myself during e four wonderful days we spent at ai.

we were delightfully domiciled in the of Mr. and Mrs. Ross, on the same ground with the school buildings.
ht and early next morning I accomed Mr. Ross on one of his visits of thes under his supervision. Our ydown to the Sendai station, partly gh the quaint, narrow, shop-lined es of this characteristic northern ese city, was crowded with new trange sights, bewildering to such ederfoot.

ur destination was Morioka, and our ey northward by the comfortable quite rapid railroad train lay up a ing valley bordered on both sides

by green hills that assumed mountain proportions part of the way. The wider portion of the valley, miles wide in some parts, was devoted almost entirely to rice growing. For mile after mile the paddy fields stretched on both sides to the foothills, till one felt that here was enough rice to feed the world, and yet
Japan imports great quantities of rice.

The methods of agriculture are primitive and laborious, almost every phase of it being hand labor. Brother Ross exercised beautiful patience with the running fire of "What's that?" "What's he doing?" "What does that mean?"
but I was tucking away a lot of information while the tucking was good.

Our first stop was at Hanamaka, where we have a thriving young church, with a native, unordained pastor, and where nine candidates were awaiting the coming of the missionary to baptize four fine young men and five as fine young women. We arrived just as the pastor started his sermon, took off our shoes at the entrance and sat on our feet (or attempted to do so, the stranger being permitted to substitute sitting "tailor fashion") till the close of the service. The time of our train on to Morioka made it necessary to adjourn at once to the river, about a mile away, for the ordinance, as another service was to follow the baptism.

The decorum and reverence of that congregation of about forty, going to the river, throughout the service there, the return and at both services in the Promotion

(Written by Adelaide DeLong Huntley, mother of Ralph DeLong who died, July 10, 1926, in Spokane, Wash., where he was a deacon of Grace church. He was a young man of tremendous spiritual power. The author of the verses was assistant to Doctor Hinson while he was pastor of the White Temple, Portland, Ore., and for five years assistant in Grace church, Spokane, Wash.)

OLAD OF MINE, the Master's hand has placed Upon your brow the shining heavenly crown
Ere time had marred your radiant, manly face,
Nor your free spirit years had broken down.
When we have wiser grown and closer live
To that great source of love and life and light,
We shall not count our age by days and years,
But by our heart throbs and our deeds of might.

Counted that way, your life was long,
Each day a kindly deed, a soul help given,
That lifted up the sin-sick world to God,
And drew the erring sons of men to heaven.

Now life is thine, the more abundant grace
Throughout eternities that never cease,
No obstacles to stay your onward course,
For all your toil at last is perfect peace.

church profoundly impressed the writer.
The service upon our return to the church building was in the nature of a welcome into church fellowship of these nine new members by a similar group baptized three years ago.

There is no furniture except the organ and the thick mat, upon which the people kneel, sitting back upon their feet, a posture impossible to some of us foreigners. First a committee of the young people spread sheets of white paper around the room in a rectangle, spacing them for close sitting together.
Next food and fruit were placed upon these sheets of paper, and we were all invited to "sit up." The Japanese are great for serving their food in exquisitely neat packages done up in containers made of very thin wood, like our berry boxes, and consisting chiefly of rice wrapped in edible seaweed, of pats and moulded forms of food made from ground beans and other materials, of relishes such as salt pickle, raw or smoked fish, raw cabbage, bamboo root and ginger. Men cry these packages, called "bento," on the station platforms along the car windows, along with other forms of food and drink.

A Love Feast

So, upon each sheet of white paper here in the little Japanese Baptist church at Hanamaka that Sunday after the baptismal service, were placed a "bento," an apple and a banana, and after grace and a hymn we proceeded with what might well be called a love feast. The eating was interspersed with short addresses by the young people giving the feast, each in turn speaking of his or her joy in the Christian life, and giving words of welcome and counsel to the new members.

On the way from the river Mr. Ross suggested that possibly I would like some buckwheat for lunch. Well that sounded like home and I said I would try some buckwheat, for I hadn't been so very partial to "bento"; but imagine my surprise when they brought to both Mr. Ross and myself steaming bowls of a brownish spaghetti, smothered in a very savory sort of soup, and each a pair of chopsticks. After a try or two at the chopsticks I turned appealingly toward Ross, amid the painfully suppressed merriment of the company, and he appealed to the pastor's wife, who went out and soon returned with a spoon, so I did get my buckwheat spaghetti after all, and it was mighty good too.

The pastor had asked Mr. Ross a good many questions about me on the way to and from the river, and so gave me a gracious, and, from the length of it I should judge, a rather complete introduction, and assured me of their interest in America, and their prayers for a safe journey. We were compelled to leave before the service was over, as Japanese trains are never late.

Arriving at Morioka early in the afternoon, we went around to a Japanese hotel to secure our room and have the inevitable cup of tea, and then we took a stroll about the town. There was, of course, no suggestion of Sunday, for Japan has no Sabbath; so we saw the city in its everyday life: shops out flush with the street, and no sidewalks, one-horse carts, the man leading the horse, only sometimes it was a cow pulling the cart instead of a horse, coolies with two baskets slung on the ends of a pole across the shoulder, streets ten to fourteen feet wide, walled-in homes with a garden in the rear, roofs of thick thatch or of tile, costumes with styles unchanged in centuries, and practically everybody walking on clogs—to keep them out of the mud—for there is no pavement except in the large cities.

Our wanderings ended at the home of the pastor of our Baptist church in Morioka, where we paid our respects and made quite a visit while the missionary talked over matters pertaining to the work of that field. By that time this sitting business had come to be simple torture to this scribe, and the pastor's wife noticed it and very graciously produced a chair from another room, and I hailed it as a life preserver.

We had time for supper at the hotel, and we had it in true Japanese style. Would I could describe it! It was an "eight mat" room, beautiful, but bare of furniture except a few fine Japanese pictures and framed sentiments of former distinguished guests, and the god-shelf in the "position-of-honor" corner.

A Japanese Dinner

The serving man came, and with much bowing, kneeling and with hands on the mat and face bowed almost to the mat, asked for our dinner order. Ross said we could have foreign food but I wanted it straight, so he ordered a full Japanese dinner. Again, would I could describe it! The brazier with its charcoal fire was already placed before us, with the "makings" of a smoke if we had so desired. Presently in came two serving girls with trays of exquisite lacquer, loaded with a bewildering array of Japanese food, in dishes and bowls both porcelain and lacquer. There were curry and rice, various forms of meat and fish, some of the last in thin slices delicate and tempting though raw, cakes and rolls of food past a westerner's finding out the composition of, relishes of bamboo root, cucumber, radish, ginger, etc., and the ever-present tea set. The girls served daintily and deferentially, but they did enjoy my attempts at the use of chopsticks. This time there was no pastor's wife to appeal to, and it was struggle through with them or go hungry, so along with what I could manage with the sticks, and by accepting a license of Japanese etiquette, i. e., lifting the bowl very close to the lips and gently inhaling the softer parts, I made out a good dinner.

Then at seven we went to the evening service at the church, which was followed by a lengthy conference between the missionary and officials of the church over their budget for the coming year. Privilege was given to ask the visitor questions which resulted in a happy conversation carried on with Mr. Ross as interpreter. Of course we had to have tea and cakes again, so that it was near eleven when we returned to the hotel. Here we found our beds, thick, comfortable affairs made up on the floor. For the seventh time that day I had removed my shoes and left them at the house entrance, to proceed in toe slippers. Bed was most welcome, for my leg and back bones and muscles were crying for rest. Careful orders had been given to call us at 3 o'clock for the train back to Sendai, and prompt to the minute the serving man appeared and was "very sorry" to have to disturb us. The ride back to Sendai in the early morning when Japan was awaking to a new day made one pray that the "Son of Righteousness" might arise indeed in all his glory on this physically beautiful country. If our Baptist people at home could see and feel the needs of our work here as we are being privileged to do, this heart-breaking retrenchment, so blighting of late, would stop, and "forward" would become our rallying cry all along the home front.

District of Columbia

BY HENRY W. O. MILLINGTON

BAPTIST churches of the District of Columbia are cooperating heartily in the support of the evangelistic program of the denomination. A conference was held, Nov. 2-3, at First church with Dr. W. H. Geistweitz and Dr. W. H. Main as the principal speakers. The conference brought together a large number of people and constantly gained in spiritual power. The addresses given were timely and appropriate and there was a general expression of regret when the conference came to an end. The day following the conference was observed as a day of prayer by the different churches and, Dec. 3, all our churches will come together in a day of prayer to be observed at Calvary church. These evangelistic activities will continue through the coming months and will culminate in a co-operative campaign, Feb. 20-Mar. 6, each church having its own evangelist and doing its work in its own way, but coming together every morning at Calvary church in a united service of evangelism.

Second church has started a branch Sunday school at the corner of Seventeenth and East Capitol streets. A temporary building has been erected on a lot which was purchased a year and a half ago. Much of the labor on the building was contributed by members and friends of the congregation. The building is large enough to care for a good sized Sunday school. The building was dedicated Sunday afternoon, Oct. 17, at three o'clock. Rev. W. S. Abernethy of Calvary church preached the sermon of dedication. The Bible school was organized the following Sunday with a large attendance and the promise of constant increase in membership.

The Sunday school of Congress Heights church of which Dr. E. E. Richardson is pastor, recently held its annual meeting at which time the election of officers took place and plans were made for aggressive work for the coming year. The attendance was large and the spirit was admirable in every way. The reports were of the best and the outlook for the future is better yet. Doctor Richardson has made an enviable record in Sunday-school work in not having missed a Sunday in twenty-three years.

Chevy Chase church held its annual banquet, Nov. 4. A turkey dinner was served. Reports of all the churches and organizations indicated unusual progress in every direction. This church is now three years old and under the leadership of Rev. E. O. Clark the membership is now 135. It has raised over $12,000 in the last twelve months for all purposes.

Calvary church is making extensive repairs on its property. For several months a large part of the building has been torn up and is not yet ready for use. This church is adding to the comforts and conveniences of a plant already famous in that direction. On a recent Sunday Doctor Abernethy's subjects were "The Voice Out of the Cloud" and "The Lucky Fellow."

Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, new president of Howard university and the first negro to hold that office, is already making his presence felt in the national capital. He is a Baptist who has had distinguished record in pastoral service and is being welcomed heartily by the negro Baptists of Washington.

Mexican Baptists in Convention

BY F. L. MEADOWS

THE seventeenth annual convention of Baptists in Mexico has closed and every member of the Puebla church feels that he has attended a spiritual feast. As Doctor Trevino of our seminary informed the delegates during his speech setting forth the enormity of the task before Baptists of Mexico, this was our first convention without the presence of a director and advisor from among the Baptists of the United States of North.

Until this meeting the writer had known Rev. Ernesto Barocio, pastor of the Monterrey church, but wishes to assure the churches in the states that they may have no fears that the work will lag under his direction. Doctor Ru could hardly have chosen from among American pastors another more able and more industrious for the kingdom's advancement, and surely none so well acquainted with the tasks before him. Not once did a motion during business meetings pass without his attention though he spoke only when interest waned or when others failed to press with enough force the importance of the proposition before us. The earnestness of his evangelical sermon on the closing Sunday night of the convention brought nearly a dozen forward asking that the prayers of the Christians present help them to find the light.

Credentials were received from six hundred and three delegates representing almost 700,000 Baptists in this republic. The work of both northern and southern boards come together, so there is no north or south among Baptists of Mexico and no record was seen. In one of our cities, hardly able to support one church, there had been a division and a second church had been started, but delegates from both congregations returned united to renew their work.

Our convention is carrying on missionary work among two tribes of Indians in the southern part of the republic and plans to employ (with the Mexican Baptist Convention of Texas paying half salary) a missionary to go to the Indian settlements of the state of Chihuahua; so Mexican Baptists are missionary at heart.

Many of our visitors had never seen a hospital in Puebla so on the third afternoon the writer was given an opportunity to put our work before the convention. I asked how many would prefer having a God-fearing young man lead them into the land of unconsciousness when a surgical operation is necessary, urging the need of a trained nurse in every town so that the people might be taught how to preserve the physical temples of our souls. I did not get the convention to take over the maintenance of the student nurses training. For this work the woman's board is paying freshmen, juniors and seniors ten, twelve and a half, and fifteen pesos monthly for their books, clothing and necessities. The hospital provides room and board as well as uniforms. My suggestion was supported by Alfredo Cavazos, pastor at Mexico City, as well as by our local pastor, Francisco Correa; but Puebla is a long distance from our churches in the southern part of the republic which send girls to the Methodist hospital in Monterrey for training. Many of the pastors favored getting their churches on a basis of self support before accepting larger obligations to the convention budget, so the matter was not pressed in the form of a motion.

At the whole convention all agreed a Sunday morning was worth every sacrifice that may have been necessary to achieve. Our pastor had eight candidates from our mission at Papalotla (twenty miles distant from Puebla) to be baptized. We do not accept members as easily as you do in the states; we are questioned rigidly and then sent to the room while the vote is taken; before that some one must recommend the candidate personally and any opposing may speak. Two of the applicants were Indians who spoke no English, so had to be questioned through an interpreter. We did not have to the translation of their answers into English to understand that a genuine change of heart had taken place—their faces were aglow with happiness. When the little old Indian man was asked who first spoke to him about the "evangelio," he began to cry, and the young woman interpreting also had to cry because it was her husband, who had recently gone to "the home over there," who first talked to him.

Many of the delegates stayed over two days to go out to Papalotla where, Oct. 11, a new Baptist church was organized with twenty-four members, one of whom, Isidro Flores, is acting as pastor. After the services "mole poblano" a chili gravy with turkey, like that used at weddings and other important feasts, was served to all by the members of the new church.

The convention meets next year with the Monterrey church and Mateo Gurrola, pastor at Chihuahua, is president.

La Bar of the Adirondacks

By FRED E. DEAN

HE NAMED this story himself, unconsciously, at the telephone. The long-distance connection was poor. "Hello, this is La Bar speaking. Can't you hear me? This is La Bar of the Adirondacks." He was recognized at once.

When any one thinks of La Bar, he thinks also of the Adirondacks; when New York Baptists think of the Adirondacks, many of them think also of La Bar. Twenty-five years ago last June he came to the little churches of Minerva and North Chester as pastor. Doctors had ordered him to the mountains, hinting that if he wished to live he had better obey. Evidently they guessed wisely, for La Bar is alive, vigorously alive, today at fifty-seven, and his schedule makes many younger men wonder how he does it.

His title is "special missionary of the Home Mission Society," working under the New York State Convention in the great Adirondack section, but few know his title, and fewer still, care. The unique characteristic of La Bar's work is that it depends not in the slightest degree upon his title. He is friend and adviser to individuals, pastors and Baptist churches from Glens Falls to Plattsburg. Anywhere in the north country an acquaintance with La Bar will give you standing with some one in every community. In a village far removed from his home I ventured to offer a check. I was a stranger, but the check bore La Bar's name and was cashed without question.

At Minerva they tell you of Alice Jones, a student in Syracuse university. During the holiday season a friend, having forgotten her address, mailed a greeting to her in care of Rev. Mr. La Bar, Adirondack mountains. It was delivered promptly.

It was not ever thus. In the beginning La Bar found the people hungry for leadership and pleasant to know, but a great loneliness seized his soul. Other ministers were few and soon moved on. Many churches were closed, or had services only on rare occasions. As health returned, he faced a temptation to join the happy company who were going back to the country of more business, more people and more money. But he stayed, and in staying, found his life opportunity.

I wanted to know what La Bar himself thinks is his greatest contribution. When after a moment he raised his head to reply, his keen eyes glistened with moisture. "Dean, if these mountain churches and folk feel that I have been a real friend, I am satisfied."

I wonder if in this ambition we do not find the secret of the true missionary, not so much to build up statistics and institutions for some society back home, as to be a friend in the name of Jesus Christ to those in need of God's gospel of love.

During my stay a young man drove in from the other side of the Hudson. His baby was dead and he had passed four churches and three ministers in his long drive to find La Bar, whom he had not seen in years. I went with La Bar to the funeral. In a rough, unpainted cabin on the mountain slope the friends were gathered. No undertaker! Three rifles on the wall! The little casket rested on an old sewing machine frame. There were chairs for not more than six or eight; the rest of us stood, as did La Bar, cap in hand, during the brief service. Simply he spoke of God's gift of the baby, and of how their lives would ever be richer because of it, and prayed "for Hugh and his wife," that they might find comfort in God and a new anchor in the angel life of their baby. I watched the mountain friends, and I knew why "Hugh" had driven so many miles for

LA BAR OF THE ADIRONDACKS

CHUMMY TALKS BETWEEN FATHER AND SON
By Wallace Dunbar Vincent
Talks between father and son on games, sports, duties, habits, qualities and aims. Sixty chapters of instruction—interesting, helpful, informing.
Suggested by Deputy Chief Scout Executive Fisher. $1.50
WELL CO., 158 5th Ave., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

BAPTIST OLD PEOPLE'S HOME

Maywood, Ill. Rev. L. T. Foreman, Ex. Sec.

Nearly a score of years of blessed service. Fifteen thousand days of kindly ministry to worthy aged people every year. Seventy-five requests yearly for rooms. Require new building for 150 people at once. Gifts gladly welcomed for our $250,000 goal.

La Bar. They felt that this man understood them, and cared.

He likes to tell about Deacon McCane of Indian lake, who gave all he had to his church and trusted God for a pastor. But La Bar did not tell me that the deacon had fitted up a little room which he kept for the missionary. When I learned of this I questioned him. "Yes, that was a unique home," he said. "The logs overhead were papered with Watchman-Examiners. On the walls were pictures of former summer pastors, Martin S. Bryant, Milton Brelsford, Arthur C. Baldwin, Sam Bawden, and Harold Pattison." Can you imagine my eyes opening as he called this roll?

Several years ago the opportunity came providentially for La Bar to buy a farm near Minerva with a large boarding-house. Here he has lived since, happy with his family in the opportunity to be friends by the side of the road. Mountain pastors, hungry for fellowship or on business bent, drive in at this hospitable gate and stay as long as they will. Friends from other parts of the state are lodged for vacations. It was while "summering" in a part of his great house that I came to know La Bar. He never advertises himself. If you know him, it is because you have happened to find him.

Remembering his own loneliness of early days, he holds frequent conferences of the north country pastors. Often he entertains them in his own home—a ministerial house party. The one which I attended was held in a little country church nestling half hidden on the mountain side. It was no hurried affair. There is time to live in the mountains. The closing session was held on the hilltop back of the church. There, overlooking the Hudson valley, with God's message beautifully eloquent in every view, each pastor told of his work, his problems, his hopes and aspirations. Then they prayed.

La Bar kept himself in the background as he put the pastors forward. Yet many of them were in the mountain pastorate at his solicitation, and some of them were sticking to baffling jobs largely because of their love for him.

These pastors are great men. I have fished, climbed mountains and lived with them, and I know. New York Baptists can be proud of their standing in the Adirondack section. With supreme missionary zeal these men fight sin, discouragement and loneliness in the back roads and mountain slopes and villages. And the central personality binding them to the north country and uniting them in a wonderful fellowship, is the Christ who lives and serves in La Bar.

Let us leave him there, where he likes best to be, on the mountain, in the midst of these pastors, praying through problems, seeing visions, radiating assurance, hope and love—La Bar of the Adirondacks.

Pacific Coast Letter

BY LEONARD W. RILEY

The Queen and the Elections

INTEREST in the northwest during the past week has been divided between Queen Marie and the elections as reflected in the big city dailies. It is amazing and amusing to see democratic Americans worshiping at the shrine of royalty. Several men of national reputation have actually been developing hard feeling over the question of dancing attendance on her royal highness, thus marring her pleasure and risking international good-will. The desire for "rank" is not confined to royalty. The injunctions of Jesus in regard to seeking high places for oneself and counting others better than oneself, touch a main spring of human relationships. Measuring up to his requirements is no small task.

The elections this year developed greater interest than usual. In Oregon there was more "mud-slinging" than in recent years. The results, however, testify again to the good judgment of the rank and file of our citizens. This is noticeable especially in the case of the measures submitted by the initiative and the referendum. The doubtful measures were defeated. Eastern Oregon is given a normal school and a tuberculosis sanitarium. This makes the third normal school in the state, there being one at Monmouth and another at Ashland. The exact location of the new one is not yet determined.

George L. White.

For the past fifteen years George L.

White has been identified with Baptist work on the Pacific coast. He was superintendent of the work of the Publication Society, 1911-1919. For the next four years he represented the Publication Society and the Home Mission Society. For the following three years he devoted himself to the interests of the Publication Society and the correspondence work of the Northern Baptist Convention. Recently he has become the western secretary of the Ministers' and Missionaries' Board and in such capacity will be welcome to the churches and conventions of the Pacific coast. Secretary White holds three degrees from the University of Chicago and a Doctor of Divinity from Grand Island college. His service has been of a uniformly high character, and the Ministers' and Missionaries' Board is to be congratulated.

Items of Interest.

Since the death of Walter B. Hinsdale, the associate pastor, H. L. Kempton, has carried on the work of the East Side church of Portland, Ore. Mr. Kempton resigned recently and it is reported that his relation to the church will cease Dec. 1, though his salary will continue until Jan. 1.

The church at New Plymouth, Idaho, erecting a new building. The Junior B. Y. P. U. has raised over 300 of the sum thus invested. The pastor is Herbert Jacobs.

First church, Bremerton, Wash., F. Leach, pastor, will hold special meetings in November and January under the leadership of John Currie, convention evangelist. In October the pastor preached a series of Sunday evening sermons on "Habits and Traits Character a Young Woman Desires, the Young Man Who Is to Be Her Husband," "Qualities a Young Man Desires in the Young Lady Who Is to Be His Wife," "Little Problems of the Married Life," "Home Makers and Brethren," "The Child and the Home." Another series ran in the mornings "Problems that Perplex."

The fiscal year of First church, McMinnville, Ore., W. E. Henry, pastor, ends with October. The treasurer's report showed a total raised for current expenses of $4635 and for benevolence $4237. This church has for many years maintained a fair balance between the two funds. "As much for others as ourselves" is a desirable motto for Christian church. The fact that this church is erecting a new building meanwhile holding its services in the college buildings, has not interfered with its usual ministrations.

Baby Chicks For Sale

Barron strain large type purebred White Leghorn baby chicks, $10.50 hundred. Chicks are very strong and stand cool weather better than hot weather.

Everlay strain Brown Leghorns, $11.50 hundred.

Sheppard strain single comb Anconas, $14 hundred.

Owens and Donaldson strain Rhode Island Reds, $14.85 hundred.

Thompsons strain Barred Rocks, $14.85 hundred.

White Rocks, $16 hundred.

All good, healthy, strong purebred guaranteed.

We pay postage charges and guarantee live arrival on all baby chicks.

Pullets of any breed listed, $1.50 each.

Cockerels, good size, $3 each.

Poultry book on feeding and raising chicks and pullets, $3 postpaid.

The Fulghum Hatchery

Freeburg, Ill.

FRESH FLORIDA ORANGES

Fresh Sweet Florida Oranges

$3 per box of 300, large size.

Sound fruit and satisfaction guaranteed or money back. We pay express charges. A box of these makes an appreciated Christmas gift.

ACME FARMS,

Gainesville, Florida

WINSTON-INTERNATIONAL TEACHERS' BIBLES

SELF-PRONOUNCING

Containing References, a Concordance and the most authoritative Aids to Bible Study. Printed in Black Face Type. Beautiful Bindings.

Send for Illustrated Catalog

THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO., Publishers
American Bible Headquarters
120 WINSTON BUILDING PHILADELPHIA

Harmonious Statesmanship

By HOWARD B. GROSE
 SOMETHING happened in the life of the Young Men's Christian Association during the recent national council meeting at Chicago—something intangible, but full of hopeful prospect. One did not lay his finger on it; it was evidenced merely in the earnestness of the quiet listening attitude of the members, the corner chats in the lobbies, the rooms of the Edgewater Beach Hotel, the air of congenial assurance that pervaded group meetings. It was a feeling of satisfaction in the successful ending and humanizing of a huge ma-

AN INCOME THAT NEVER FAILS

Gifts by the Annuity plan support your evangelization and assure you an income as long as you live. When remembering the national societies in your will please use exact corporate names as follows:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M. D., Home Secretary (re annuities); George B. Livingston, Treasurer, (re wills); 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society, Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th Street, New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society, George L. Estabrook, Treasurer, 14 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention, E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, Frank W. Padel, D.D., Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and wills addressed to any officer named will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

Annuities

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these Single and Double Contracts will be sent to you on request.

Where your heart is, there should your treasure go."

Clark's Famous Cruises

WARD-ANCHOR LINES new oil burners including hotels, guides, drives, etc.

15 days, $600 to $1700
MEDITERRANEAN

"Transylvania" sailing Jan. 29

Cruise, including Madeira, Lisbon, Madrid—Cordova—Granada), Almeria, Carthage, Athens, Constantinople, 5 days Palestine and Egypt, Italy, Madeira, Europe stop-overs.

Round the World Cruise
 119 days, $1250 to $2900.

Norway—Mediterranean Cruise
 15 days, $600 to $1300.

C. CLARK, Times Bldg., N. Y.

chine, designed to encourage and help young men and boys throughout the world.

Two years before at Buffalo, the national council, inheriting some of the functions of the old international committee, was an infant, kicking in its cradle. At Washington a year later, the council seemed to be passing through the period of adolescence; none knew quite what to expect, and many displayed symptoms of uneasiness, of suspicion perhaps, and of doubt.

But adolescence is past; the creature, born for a purpose, has matured. At Chicago, the national council functioned as an adult, every one of its component parts being in perfect harmony with every other; and when the session adjourned, Oct. 29, after four days' intensive work, there was a feeling on the part of the nearly 300 members assembled that something definite had been accomplished. More, each seemed to possess anew a proprietary interest in the council, and to have gained satisfaction from a complete knowledge and faith in what was being done and planned.

As John S. Tichenor, associate general secretary, said: "The council has at last proved itself a workable unit." Certainly that means progress.

The conference sessions were free from wrangling. A piece of statesmanship derived from the World's Conference at Helsingfors, and set in action by Dr. John R. Mott, accomplished wonders in that direction. Shortly after convening, the conference was broken up into groups. In secluded corners these bodies dug into their work, and dug into it so hard and so thoroughly that when the budget finally came onto the floor of the council meeting, pared to provide for expenditures of $4,084,715 during 1927, there was no hesitation about accepting it.

The men knew what that budget contained; they knew it item by item as they perhaps had never known a national budget before, and they willingly lent it their support, with the understanding that if any portion of the $2,950,577 required contributions should prove unavailable, the general board should have the power to make reductions where reductions seemed most feasible without endangering the work. Specifically, the budget calls for general board expenditures of $288,203; home division, $1,449,-

"The best hymnal that America has yet produced."

NOLAN R. BEST.

Hymns of the Christian Life
 EDITED BY
 MILTON S. LITTLEFIELD, D. D.

NEW HYMN BOOKS
 FOR CHRISTMAS

This book will satisfy you in every particular. Beautifully printed, clear bold readable type, reinforced binding—498 Hymns and Tunes, 45 Chants and Responses, 38 Prayers and Collects, 60 Responsive Readings.

Thirty-five thousand copies sold since last February.

Price per hundred $135.00.

Send for Examination Copy today.

A. S. BARNES & COMPANY

Publishers of Hymn Books Since 1855.

7 West 45th Street, New York

663; foreign division, $2,248,170; personnel, $98,677.

The conference did not make a pronouncement on military training, holding that "in the absence of information as to the opinion of the local associations, who are autonomous, self-governing units, reserving to themselves the right to represent their own views on matters of this kind," the national council "considers that it cannot with propriety pass judgment for them on this question." While not included in the resolution, a feeling was evident among some members of the council that espousal of military training is not, as applied to any society or individual, a test of patriotism or of devotion to the highest interests of boys and young men. They recognized the question as one on which, among thoughtful people, there is a wide divergence of opinion.

David W. Teachout, a Cleveland lumberman, a devout religious worker and since 1920 a member of the international committee, was elected president of the council, succeeding Fred W. Ramsey, also of Cleveland.

Here, There and Everywhere

MURAYAMA-SAN of Hakodate, Japan, spoke to the young women of First church, Mount Vernon, N. Y., Nov. 8, on "Factory Girls in Japan." She is a graduate of Wellesley college and is at present attending the national school of the Y. W. C. A.; she plans to work among the industrial girls in Japan.

FIRST CHURCH, Jamestown, N. Y., Robert L. Wilson, pastor, voted, Nov. 3, to build a Sunday-school plant adequate for the needs of its young people. The church gave its Thanksgiving offering to the building fund of Emmanuel church (negro), Jamestown.

ROLLA E. BROWN closed his work as pastor of Sunnyside church, Los Angeles, Oct. 3. During his pastorate of twenty-one months, fifty-four members were received, contributions to missions were increased, the Bible school reached an average attendance of 350 with an enrolment of 600

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Immanuel Bldg., Chicago.

"Greetings to our radio friends. The editors and other workers on THE BAPTIST send best wishes to our helpers everywhere and thank them for their continued interest and helpful cooperation in extending the usefulness of the paper.

"Pastor J. W. Esveld of Omaha has a fine way of enlisting his people as subscribers to the paper. Last summer he chose several young men and women and had them review interesting articles from the paper. They appeared with him in the pulpit and made short addresses on these articles. This was followed, after six weeks of presentation, by a campaign for new subscriptions that gave satisfactory results. Pastor Esveld says that he will repeat the program this autumn.

"First church, Oak Park, Ill., Harold Stanley Stewart, pastor, continues to maintain the largest single list in the state. Rev. W. H. Beebe is the church agent for denominational literature and he has few equals in this line of Christian service. He is on the job twelve months a year. With a list almost equal to 20 per cent of its total membership taking THE BAPTIST or Missions or both, he adds new names and collects for renewals in a business-like manner that spells sustained success. Members of the Oak Park church last year put more than $100 into gift subscriptions for Baptist men in prisons.

"North Shore church, Chicago, Herbert W. Virgin, pastor, has an increasing list of subscriptions for our paper. Oct. 18, this church sent in a list of new names together with one gift subscription for some aged minister and $75 to be used to send the paper to Baptist men in prisons. This gift money came principally from the business men's Bible class and the Philatheas. This church will send in another offering of $100 in the near future for gift subscriptions. What is your church doing to increase the circulation of your denominational paper? Have you learned that in this phase of activity it is more blessed to give than to receive? Try it.

"Pastor G. C. Brenneman of Saulte Ste. Marie, Mich., has found a new method of using THE BAPTIST. Recently when the monthly meeting of his brotherhood found itself without a leader, he took the paper and read item after item from "The World in Transit." Here on the seventh page of the paper every week are six or eight significant events interpreted in the light of Christian ideals. The greatest interest was aroused at once as he read these items and opened the way for discussion. So keen was the interest aroused that the meeting did not adjourn until midnight. If you have a discussion group in your church, here is a treasury of current events of unusual significance, treated in a thought-provoking manner. Use them. Report results to us from time to time. It is good news.

"THE BAPTIST will carry full information concerning the annual meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention in Chicago, May 31-June 5. Read the article, "Twenty Thousand or Twenty-five Thousand—Which Shall it Be?" by Dr. Herbert W. Virgin, chairman of the publicity committee for this meeting, in the Oct. 30 issue of the paper. There can be no doubt that this is going to be the biggest and most outstanding convention Baptists have held on the American continent. If you miss this meeting you will have a life-long regret. What about your friends? If they can be informed of the preparations and objectives of this Chicago meeting, they will be there. You could do nothing better than to put THE BAPTIST into their mail at once. $2.50 a year will bring fifty-two copies to any address in the U. S. A. Get busy at once.

"The office boy says that his teacher once asked him to write a sentence including the word 'imbibe.' She told him that the word meant 'to absorb,' or 'to take in.' And he wrote: 'My aunt imbibes gossip.' He says that he is now convinced that it were better to 'imbibe' THE BAPTIST instead of soaking up a lot of wordy bohunkus.

"WCOY now signs off. Booster or buckler—which? Good night."

and church improvements amounting to $1700 were made of which all but $568 has been paid.

SEVENTEEN PERSONS have recently been received into membership by First church, Akron, Ohio, Frank Wallace Stanton, pastor.

THE CHURCH BULLETIN of Marcy Avenue church, John M. Moore, pastor, urges members to subscribe to Missions, THE BAPTIST and the Watchman-Examiner.

AFTER FIRST CHURCH, South Bend, Wash., closes its revival meetings, it will send Pastor Hugh P. Andrews to conduct a meeting in the Camas church.

LAYMEN OF THE CHURCHES at Centralia, Chehalis, Raymond and South Bend, Wash., provide services for the Lebam church, each group taking its turn every fourth Sunday.

THE THIRD ANNUAL reunion of the fourteen missions of La Salle Street church, Chicago, was held, Nov. 18. Flags were presented to the three churches or schools having the largest attendance.

STEPHEN A. HAMOUSH, the "shepherd boy from Galilee" spoke at First church, Battle Creek, Mich., Nov. 14.

A. LONGFIELD closed a three years' pastorate with Nashville, Mich., church to begin work with the Rives Junction church, Mich.

PASTORS OF THE Washington-Union Association (New York) exchanged pulpits Nov. 14, in the interest of evangelism. The pulpit of First church, Glens Falls, N. Y., was occupied by Edgar C. Smith, Greenwich, while P. H. McDowell, pastor of First church, preached at Hudson Falls.

JOHN LOSH was ordained at Grace church, Denver, Colo., on recommendation of a council composed of forty members from seventeen churches. B. Miller was moderator; W. C. Garber, clerk. Sermon was given by C. B. Miller, charge to the candidate, W. C. Garber, charge to the church, Aaron Schlesinger, ordaining prayer, Joshua Gravett; hand fellowship, Rev. Mr. South. Mr. and Mrs. Losh have charge of the Publication Society colporteur auto in Arizona.

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM MCKERCHER of First church, Sioux City, Iowa, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary, Nov. 14. Mr. McKercher has conducted a Sunday school class for nine years, has been deacon of the church for six years and has served as president of the state convention.

FIRST CHURCH, Glens Falls, N. Y., I

Burroughs Portable Adding Machine

Delivered $100 Easy Terms

Ideal for churches, clubs, church organizations, lodges, and societies. Adds to $1,000,000.00. Has standard visible keyboard and is very simple to operate. Can be carried to wherever it is needed for use. Write for a demonstration.

Burroughs Adding Machine Co.

6392 Second Blvd.,
Detroit, Mich.

es H. McDowell, pastor, prints in its letin the financial statement for October, owing total receipts of $1853 with disbursements of $1021, a balance from the holding fund of $288 and total receipts of missions amounting to $306.

EDWIN H. PRESCOTT of the Newburyport, Mass., church is preaching a series of sermons on questions asked by Jesus. They include: "What Will Ye that I Shall Do to You?" "Where Are the Nine?" "Whom Say Ye that I Am?" "Wouldst Thou Be Made Whole?" "What is Writing in the Law? How Readest Thou?"

AFTER AN ADDRESS by Secy. W. H. Bowler of the Springfield college the entire student body by unanimous standing vote agreed to join a world tour of missions.

AVERAGE ATTENDANCE at the school of missions conducted by Pastor Chas. F. Banning at Delaware Street church, Syracuse, N. Y., was 153. Classes were taught by Miss Elsa Oberg, Dr. Anna Otto and Dr. Banning. A dinner was given to foreign students at Syracuse university by the church which twenty-three students attended. Doctor Otto sailed for India as a medical missionary, Nov. 20.

J. P. BOYNTON of Woodlawn, Chicago, in his sermon prelude Sunday evening, Nov. 27, in "Lying for a Living," said: "Commercialized lying is done by men and women who have sold themselves to perpetuate a colossal fraud and perpetuate a colossal misrepresentation of American civilization. These special writers, both men and women, cartoonists and editors, are fully conscious of the fact that they have sold themselves and their talents. Every time they write an article, draw a picture or build an editorial, they know they are lying, and are lying for a living."

At SANGSVILLE, Mo., George L. Newkirk, pastor, W. S. Dixon, evangelist, held religious services resulting in sixteen additions to the church, thirteen by baptism. Mr. Dixon is conducting meetings with London Baptist church, Kansas City, Mo., G. W. Merrifield, pastor.

J. BURRAS was ordained, Nov. 9, at the Calouse, Wash., church. J. V. McCall, moderator; Mrs. J. M. Risley, clerk; J. Burton, examiner; sermon, by J. L. Tiger; charge to the candidate, Edker; charge to the church, A. H. Bailey; singing prayer, A. H. Bailey, who was assisted in the laying on of hands by all ministers present.

At DANISH BAPTIST churches of Iowa conducted conferences on evangelism in October and November preparatory to religious meetings during the winter months. The people have shown unusual interest in the conferences which closed with the church, Nov. 12.

FRY EDWARD TRALLE of New York

City, delivered five addresses in Keuka college, Keuka Park, N. Y. Pres. A. H. Norton reports that students and faculty were enthusiastic over his work there.

IVARS ELLSON has been called from his three years' pastorate with the Baldwinville church, N. Y., to become pastor of Memorial church, Philadelphia. He is a graduate of Colgate university. P. S. Hensen preached the first sermon in the main auditorium of Memorial church fifty years ago.

ARTHUR C. BALDWIN, Chestnut Street church, Philadelphia, has begun a series of fireside sermons. He preached the first on "Lovers' Lane," Nov. 7.

TWENTY-FIVE MEMBERS, twenty by baptism, were received into the membership of the Pratt, Kan., church as a result of a three weeks' revival meeting conducted by W. Sherman Moore, pastor, assisted by Walter Schodield, Ft. Scott.

PARK STREET CHURCH, Pittsfield, N. H., John A. Swetnam, pastor, held a budget Sunday, Nov. 7, with an every-member canvass in the afternoon. This canvass proved more successful than in any previous year.

FIRST CHURCH, OELWEIN, IOWA, increased the salary of its pastor, C. E. Hillis, Nov.

Obituary

Mrs. Ermina C. Lamb, widow of the late Rev. M. T. Lamb of Trenton, N. J., died at her home on Sunday morning, Nov. 7.

Born in Leroy, N. Y., in 1842, she lived a long and useful life. After her marriage, for twenty-two years she led the active life of a pastor's wife in the Middle West. Later in Montana, Idaho and Utah she assisted her husband in pioneer mission work. In 1894 they came to Trenton where the beautiful "Receiving Home for Homeless Children" is a lasting monument to their labors.

Mrs. Lamb is survived by three daughters, Mrs. E. A. Sharp of Urbana, Ill.; Mrs. S. A. Perrine of Montclair, N. J.; and Mrs. J. M. Minar of Washington, D. C.; also six grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

1, $400. Sunday-school attendance on rally day was the largest in the history of the church.

JUDSON CHURCH of Oak Park, Ill., celebrated its fifth anniversary, Nov. 10; 300 members and a few friends sat down to a fellowship supper. The members responded to the roll call by Bible verses. Musical

MISSIONS

AN International Baptist Magazine

Indispensable to EVERY Baptist who would know what the WORLD is DOING and what his denomination is doing in it.

Its remarkable pictures are windows on the world. Look through them and see your neighbors in Cheyenne and Tokyo, New York and the Congo.

More important than all, the world and its people are viewed from the standpoint of the missionary Christ—He who said "Go ye into all the world—."

Both foreign and home Baptist missions are covered by MISSIONS.

If there is no Club or Club Manager in your church, be the Manager and start a Club. All Helps and sample copies furnished freely on request.

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR
(in clubs of five or more)
Single Subscription, $1.25

Address

MISSIONS,
276 Fifth Ave., New York

Unfailing Income in Old Age

Dear Friends:—

The Lord is leading us gently. We are living in Beulah Land and may soon be called to pass over—nearly 89. Our annuity payments are our income and the interest has never failed us—always prompt and the only investment we have outside the promises which are sure.

We always recommend the annuity plan and I think have secured several names. We have four good children who help us.

God bless our dear Societies and all connected with them.

Sincerely, L. M. & A. T. W.

The above letter was received by The American Baptist Home Mission Society from two of its satisfied annuitants.

Many annuitants have been so well satisfied with this method of investing to advance the work of the Kingdom, that they have returned again and again with additional contributions representing savings which might have been otherwise invested.

For annuity booklet, sample contract, and survivorship rate tables and legacies kindly address:

Secretary Charles L. White,
23 East 26th St., New York City

"Pews, altars and pulpits from the largest exclusive church furniture factory. Write for catalog and particulars. Manitowoc Church Furniture Company, Waukesha, Wisconsin."

numbers were given by three ladies of the choir and the brotherhood quartet. Dr. Benjamin Otto gave an inspirational address. The church was organized five years ago with fifty-six members. Its present membership is 350. It started in a small portable building; now it has property worth $100,000. It subscribed $1000 a year to missions of the Northern Baptist Convention before it called a pastor. Offerings to missions have increased in proportion to the membership. Rev. Joseph Croft Dent has been the only pastor of the church after the Chicago Baptist Executive Council gave it a start under the ministry of Rev. Albert H. Gage. Fourteen new members received the hand of fellowship; Nov. 7, and five more united with the church in the evening.

G. ARVID HAGSTROM, president of Bethel Institute, St. Paul, spent Nov. 3-13 with the churches of South Dakota in the interest of the diamond jubilee fund of the Swedish Baptist General Conference. Nov. 13, he attended the Minnesota young people's convention at Stanchfield, Minn., and gave a lecture on the history of Swedish Baptists. Nov. 15, he returned to St. Paul where the Bethel institute was host at a luncheon for the Twin City Baptist ministers' association. Following this he visited Chicago and other places in Illinois.

AMONG THE OTTAWA UNIVERSITY graduates who are serving the denomination are Kansas pastors Cyrus E. Hanes, Elkhart; Oliver Potter, '19, Girard; Pennington, '23, Salina; Guy Wimmer, Hutchinson; W. L. Bledsoe, '26, worth; and State Secretary J. T. Crawford, '92, Topeka.

MRS. W. L. GEORGE, negro, a missionary from Liberia, spoke in the Ottawa university chapel Oct. 20. She brought with her Maude, a little Bantu girl, as an evidence of the quality of work which is being done among the negroes in Africa by the graduates of America. Maude recited a poem in English, with almost perfect expression.

CROZER SEMINARY, Chester, Pa., is sponsoring a non-sectarian week-day school of religious education under the leadership of Stewart G. Cole, professor of religious education, held at two-thirty every Thursday afternoon during the school year, beginning, Oct. 7. Children from the fifth to the eighth grades are eligible; individual textbooks are supplied. The budget for the school is $1000; attendance, 150.

DR. JOHN F. VINES, formerly of church, Roanoke, Va., began his work as pastor of Calvary church, Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 7. During his pastoral work at Roanoke over 2000 members were received into the church; the debt on the Sunday school building was paid; and a new parsonage built.

DR. VERNON H. COWSERT has resigned as pastor of First church, Clovis, Calif., after five years of his leadership. During the five years 161 members were added to the church; $9500 was paid out for expenses and for benevolences, and the church property was improved.

C. F. LUSK conducted a two weeks' evangelistic campaign at Mt. Moriah, Ohio, during which four persons were baptized on the last evening.

AT FIRST CHURCH, Akron, Ohio, F. W. Stanton is preaching a series of seven Sunday morning sermons on the Lord's Prayer.

THE LONE SCOUT division of the scouts at Rogers Park church, Chicago, won first and third places in the 1926 Illinois all-around championship contests. This is the third consecutive year that the division has won first place. Last year the division was merged with troops sponsored by the B. Y. P. U.

C. H. STULL spent Oct. 24-Oct. 31 in an intensive evangelistic effort with the church, Canton, Ohio.

DR. W. EDWARD RAFFETY, editor of the International Journal of Religious Education, is giving the courses in religious education at the Chicago Baptist Mission Training school.

GIVE HEALTH

The most valuable and least expensive holiday gift that you can make

GIVE health as a Christmas present—to yourself, to every member of your family, and everybody in your community. You can! Buy Christmas Seals.

The work done by these tiny, mighty little seals has helped to cut the tuberculosis death rate by more than half.

Seal every parcel, letter, and holiday greeting with Christmas Seals. Give health—and feel the joy that comes with the giving of man's greatest gift to his fellow man—healthy happiness now and for years to come.

THE NATIONAL, STATE AND LOCAL TUBERCULOSIS ASSOCIATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 1
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO., HILLSBORO, O.

THE CORNERSTONE of the new million-dollar First church, Los Angeles, Calif., was laid, Oct. 31. Among the speakers were J. James A. Francis, pastor; Dr. Remsen Bird, president of Occidental college; Henry M. Robinson, president of the First National bank; Dr. A. J. Smith, Dr. O. E. Gifford and Dr. E. P. Ryland. It is expected that the new church will be completed, June 1.

EAST MAHONING CHURCH near Purchase, Pa., Indiana Association, Pa., celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary, Oct. 30-31. Speakers included M. L. Rowland, Kittanning, Pa., oldest former pastor, who preached at the old-fashioned meeting Saturday evening; C. F. Cornman, Valois, N. Y.; Thomas Lambert, Tidioute; and James Donaldson of Altoona. At the Sunday communion service Pastor M. M. Smith was assisted by former pastors and deacons were assisted by those from nearby churches.

AT FIRST CHURCH, Ansley, Neb., Herbert M. Richmond, pastor, the attendance was so grown that the pews are supplemented by chairs. Two persons were baptized, Oct. 31. Mr. Richmond plans to conduct his own evangelistic campaign this winter with the aid of a singer.

TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR MARRIED LIFE" was the theme of the sermon by Harry Ada at the Church of the Master, Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 10.

AT IMMANUEL CHURCH, Edwardsville, Pa., A. Metz, pastor, 200 persons attended the annual fellowship night, and more than that number, the evening service on "Go to Church" Sunday. Statements of the financial standing of church members to the end of September were sent to every member resulting in a banner month for collections.

WEST MANSFIELD, OHIO, has transferred its membership from Mad River to Marion Association.

CECIL T. AXWORTH closed his work with this church, San Pablo, Calif.; Oct. 31, in order to be available for full-time work. Seven persons were baptized into the church at the farewell service, and seven received by letter or experience. Mr. Axworthy held the San Pablo pastorate while doing post-graduate work at Berkeley University school.

ARTHUR D. HILTON concluded his ministry at Marietta, Ohio, Oct. 31.

BETHEL INSTITUTE, St. Paul, Minn., registrar discovers that 26 per cent of the girls, 23 per cent of the boys, 47 per cent of the seniors, 22 per cent of the juniors, 15 per cent of the sophomores and 10 per cent of the freshmen are honor students. Of this number, 84 per cent are fully or entirely earning their way through school.

WILLOWS, CALIF., church people presented their pastor, J. C. Garth, with a Hudson sedan in appreciation of his thirteen years of service there.

SIX WERE BAPTIZED, Oct. 31, at La Grange church, Illinois, Eaton B. Freeman, pastor. The B. Y. P. U. held a "Drawcab Ytrap" (backward party), Nov. 5.

ALLISON AVENUE CHURCH, Washington Pa., John E. Arblaster, pastor, held father and son meetings, Nov. 14, 16 and 17. The church is now engaged in a loyalty campaign and reports increased attendance.

FIRST CHURCH, Lebanon, Ind., Arthur E. Cowley, pastor, will conduct revival meetings, Nov. 21-Dec. 3. The pastor will be assisted by Russell Kauffman, evangelistic singer.

JUDSON CHURCH, OAK PARK, ILL.

THE ANNUAL Older Boys' and Girls' Conference of New York City was held Nov. 13-14 at Madison Avenue Methodist and Park Avenue Baptist churches. Miss Laura Krahe of Creston Avenue church, New York City, is chairman for the Bronx district.

FIRST CHURCH, Downers Grove, Ill., celebrated its diamond jubilee, Oct. 23-24; 300 attended the fellowship banquet held Saturday evening. Jubilee speakers included C. G. Dixon, Oak Park; E. R. Dow, Wheaton; J. W. Hoyt, Chicago; and the pastor, Arnold H. Kehrl.

CHESTER TUULGA, formerly pastor at La Grange, Ohio, has been called to the pastorate at Niles, Ohio.

JAMES M. STIFLER, pastor of First church, Evanston, Ill., addressed the Methodist ministers' conference, Nov. 1, on "The Religion of Benjamin Franklin." Mr. Stifler conducted the devotional hour four evenings at the Evanston school of religious education, Nov. 1-Nov. 5.

JOHN C. FORD is serving as interim pastor at Dorset, Ohio, Ashtabula Association.

FIRST CHURCH, Ottawa, Kan., W. A. Elliott, pastor, is cooperating with the union evangelistic meetings held in Ottawa during November.

A RECOGNITION DAY for missionaries on furlough was held in Lorimer hall, Tremont temple, Boston, Nov. 12, with Mrs. Henry Peabody presiding.

"IF WE PROMISED to give you a ten-dollar bill on Wednesday evening, Nov. 10, would you come?"—this, on a unique folder that piques the curiosity, accompanies the attractive bulletin of Logan Square church, Chicago. Also there are promised some special features for that Wednesday meeting.

FREE All Charges Prepaid
Subject to Examination

Easiest Reading Bible

The Bible has never been published in any form in which the reading of it has been made so attractive to both old and young as in the "INTERNATIONAL" CHRISTIAN WORKERS' BIBLE

By an entirely new plan, a thread of red ink, running from Genesis to Revelation, binds in one harmonious whole each leading topic. All the precious truths which lie hidden under the mass of unconnected matter and escape the mere reader are brought to light and tied together.

The Rev. Jesse Lyman Hurlbut, D.D., the popular authority in Bible themes, has arranged on this plan Three Thousand Selected Texts.

PROMINENT PEOPLE'S OPINIONS

John Wanamaker: International Christian Workers' Bible is an advance on anything hitherto attempted in making the Bible usable.

Lyman Abbott: Valuable to Christian workers in their endeavor to get at the teaching of the Bible directly and immediately, and not through the medium of commentaries.

BOUND IN GENUINE LEATHER, divinity circuit, with overlapping covers (like illustration), round corners, gold edges, red underneath. Size of page 5 1/4 x 8 1/2 inches, beautifully printed in extra large clear type on extra fine paper; also contains Latest Teachers' Helps to Bible Study.

SPECIAL OFFER The Christian Workers' Bible will be SENT FREE for examination, ALL CHARGES PREPAID. If it does not please you, return it at our expense. If it does please you, remit special price. Published at $7.50, but for a limited time we offer this handsome, most usable Bible at the SPECIAL PRICE OF ONLY $4.90. Send no money but fill in and mail coupon.

THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Largest American Bible Publishers

SEND NO MONEY—Cut out Coupon and mail today

THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO., 1200 Winston Bldg., Philadelphia

Please send without charge. The Christian Workers' Bible. I will remit $4.90 or return same in 5 days at your expense.

Name _____ Address _____

This Bible with Patent Thumb Index, 45c extra. Name in gold on cover 45c extra. Bibles with names on ables not returnable.

PIPE ORGANS

of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.

Electric Organ blowing out-As for organs of any make. Write, stating which catalog is desired.

Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

BLMYER CHURCH BELLS

"Bring People to Church"

Write today for catalog and special proposition—new low prices and liberal terms.

THE JOHN B. MORRIS FOUNDRY CO.,
Proprietors The Cincinnati Bell Foundry
Established 1832
Dept. 12 Cincinnati, Ohio

THE BULLETIN of Ashland Avenue church, Toledo, Ohio, J. S. Kirtley, minister-in-charge, boosts THE BAPTIST among other denominational papers; also the annual meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention with its "Twenty-five Thousand for Chicago" slogan.

ON Nov. 7 Dr. H. O. Rowlands closed his work with the church at Quincy, Ill., where he has been minister-in-charge for a number of weeks. The church bulletin gives an eloquent testimony as to the work Doctor Rowlands has done in the Quincy church and the place that he has found in the hearts of the people. Dr. Carl D. Case began his pastorate with the Quincy church, Nov. 14.

"WHAT HAS BECOME OF THE DEVIL?" was Herbert W. Hines', Central church, Springfield, Ill., Sunday evening topic for Nov. 14.

PASTOR CHARLES H. HEIMSATH, First church, Bridgeport, Conn., gives an exposition of Philippians at the Wednesday evening prayer meeting, and the report is "the program for Wednesday evening is becoming increasingly interesting." This church school has on a campaign for an average attendance of 300.

FOR THE SHUT-INS comes a message through the bulletin of Emmanuel church, Brooklyn, Avery A. Shaw, pastor: "In the central place of your heart there is a wireless station; so long as it receives messages of beauty, hope, cheer, grandeur, courage and power from the earth, from men and from the Infinite, so long are you young. When the wires are all down and all the central place of your heart is covered with the snows of pessimism and the ice of cynicism, then are you grown old indeed."

A store in Havana carries this sign in its window: "Broken English Spoken."

Notes on the Lesson for December 5

RUTH AND NAOMI
Lesson Text: Ruth 1:14-22. Golden Text: Ruth 1:16

This drama of love takes a high place in the world's great literature.

Half-Way

Orpah loved Naomi sincerely and earnestly. The friendship of the two women for each other was pure and sweet, a great test had ever come to prove stability and permanence of that friendship, and so long as things ran along an even path the friendship was shaken. But one day a decisive moment arrived when Naomi started back to people on the west side of the Jordan. Ruth and Orpah accompanied her, three women being widows and sharers of a common sorrow. At a certain place on the road they stopped. Naomi urged her two young widowed daughters-in-law to go back home to Moab. Her arguments were cogent, her plea was rational. Orpah yielded to the plea and returned. There was no breaking of the friendship, no abandoning of the love which Orpah cherished for Naomi; but there was a turning back half-way on the road, thereby an irreparable loss to Orpah, a share in the destiny of a people were chosen to bless the world with the highest spiritual inheritance. Not a word can be said against the character of Orpah, and her love for Naomi so far as it went was irreproachable; but she stopped short of the high adventure which comes only to those who go the way. She is the type of many who go only half-way with their education or with their profession or business with their church, or with their Christianity.

All the Way

"All the world loves a lover" is the plea of Naomi which gave an opportunity for Orpah to go back to her people was the occasion for her to reaffirm her love and to express her purpose to go all the way with the woman for whom she had come to have dominating affection. Steadfastness and devotion was the controlling virtue in the life of Ruth. There are many examples of such devotion in the history of the world, but none is so beautiful and unselfish as the love of Ruth to Naomi. The best model replica of Ruth's devotion is found in the Christian missionaries who expatiate themselves, die to the comforts of life in their own country, sincerely adopt alien people as their people, serve with an abandon of love through years of sacrificial toil, and at last ask for burial place in the land which has come native to them through long residence. When the spirit and devotion of Ruth dies out in society, when Orpahs with their expediency become the heroines of society, and when there is a stronger hold on the affection of men and women than Judah, then shall it profit if the gain in worldly comfort is immense, since the soul is lost.

Select Notes

By AMOS R. WELLS, LL.D., LL.M.

The World's Greatest Sunday School Commentary for 1927
We recommend it

BECAUSE

Millions use it weekly for help, guidance and inspiration. For fifty-two years new friends have learned its value — old ones have considered it indispensable.

BECAUSE

Its wealth of material gives a solid foundation for the spiritual and inspirational interpretation of special themes. It is complete with maps, bibliography, teaching methods and abundant illustrations.

184 pages — $2.00 delivered —
At all booksellers

W. A. WILDE COMPANY
131 Clarendon Street, Boston, Mass.

A Service for Christmas

Joyful Voices

This service presents the Christmas Story in a most attractive manner. Six tableaux are provided for in the Pageant, but are not necessary if merely a service of song and recitation is desired, though they add greatly to the attractive features and are easily prepared. The music is most charming, though not difficult.

$6.00 a hundred
80 cents a dozen

$3.25 for fifty
Single copy, 7 cents

We have a complete stock of the latest holiday supplies for the church and Sunday School.

Greeting Cards
Candy Boxes
Holiday Booklets

Services
Calendars
Testaments

Dialogues
Novelties
Bibles

Send for a copy of our Holiday Catalog, listing our large line of Books and Supplies for the Holidays.

The American Baptist Publication Society

1701-1703 Chestnut Street, PHILADELPHIA

16 Ashburton Place, BOSTON 1107 McGee Street, KANSAS CITY
125 N. Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO 439 Burke Building, SEATTLE
313 W. Third Street, LOS ANGELES 223 Church Street, TORONTO

Order from Our Nearest House

New Books

Hundred Projects for the Church School, by Milton Carsley Towner. New York: Doran. $1.60.

Following an introductory chapter on theory of the project method in religious education, there are a number of projects, each devoted to a great object, with project material suitable for objective grouped according to departments in the church school. A general helpful handbook which will help a perplexed church school worker find the way.

—FRED E. DEAN.

Sunday-school Teacher and the Book, by William Francis Berger, A.M. New York: Revell. $1.25.

The growth of religious education has been laid on the lesson material to the extent that the Bible has been neglected both by the pupils and the teachers. This has brought a crisis in churches. In fourteen chapters Mr. Berger shows how this crisis can be turned into a glorious victory for God. The teacher must be literally saturated with the book, bringing knowledge, faith, hope, power and a passion for results resulting in a great harvest. The chapters are: "The Real Sunday-school Teacher"; "The Teacher and the Book"; "The Teacher's Plan of Work"; "The Teacher in the Old Testament"; "The Teacher and the Church"; "The Teacher's Real Empire"; "The Teacher and Tomorrow's Sheaves."

—O. P. LOVICK.

Introduction to Social Statistics, by Clarence G. Dittmer. Chicago: A. W. Shaw.

Social statistics deals with the measurement of social forces. It is the scientific method applied to the study of human relationships and is fast changing the language of the social sciences. As a science its method is far more difficult than the scientific method applied to the field of the natural sciences. So, the author, who is assistant professor of sociology in the University of Wisconsin, gives the reader an idea of what it is all about. The business is not rather than sentimental, of the yet Professor Dittmer is of the opinion that the practice of accuracy and precise dealing with facts, figures and graphs tends to honesty in treating social topics. If it can do anything toward moralizing arguments about the tariff, socialism, public ownership, bolshevism and the trouble in China, it should be welcome. Be that as it may, to the student who wishes a tried method for gathering social data, for assembling and tabulating them and for graphic representation of social forces and trends, here is a valuable manual.

—U. M. McGUIRE.

Gift Books for Christmas FOREST FRIENDS

By H. R. EVANS

Intimate Stories of Animals, Birds, and Fish
West of the Rockies

Refreshing nature stories from the North Woods. The charm of this book is in its simple realism. You see the creatures of the wilds in their homes. Most of the stories are the direct outcome of what the writer himself has observed in the woods, beside the streams, and upon the bay and river. For the rest he has drawn upon the experiences of friends with whom he was associated for six years in the mountain valleys of the Pacific Coast. A book for every one who loves the great out-of-doors. Illustrated with original photographs.

Cloth, $1.50 net

ANIMAL LAND

By WILLARD ALLEN COLCORD

This charming new book contains three hundred stories, all TRUE, and beautifully told.

It tells about sixty different kinds of animals, birds, and insects.

Some of the stories tell of thrilling adventures; others are humorous and will amuse both old and young.

It contains twenty-four beautiful full-page illustrations and twenty-eight special feature pages.

Cloth, $1.75 net

BEAUTIFUL JOE

By MARSHALL SAUNDERS

More Than a Million Copies of "Beautiful Joe"
Have Been Sold

The life-story of a dog as told by himself. The outstanding qualities of faithfulness, sagacity, and companionship are illustrated by interesting incidents in the dog's life. Underlying the story is a strong plea for kindness not only to dogs but to all dumb animals. Beautiful Joe was rescued and owned by the author's family, and the entire charming story is founded on fact. This is a dog story that will never die or grow old. Illustrated.

Cloth, $1.50 net

ER'S VAN DYKE BOOK FOR ALL YEARS

LIGHT MY CANDLE

HENRY VAN DYKE
TERTIUS VAN DYKE

A Book of reflections—one inspiring little message for each week-day of the year. Here are daily stimulation, incentive to honest thinking and power for successful and happy living.

Cloth, $2.00

CO., 158 Fifth Ave., N. Y.; 17 No. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Send for a copy of "The Selected Book Catalog and Holiday Bulletin," listing our large line of Books and Supplies for the Holidays.

The American Baptist Publication Society

Philadelphia: 1701-1703 Chestnut St.

Boston: 16 Ashburton Place. Los Angeles: 313 W. Third St. Seattle: 439 Burke Building
Chicago: 125 N. Wabash Ave. Kansas City, Mo.: 1107 McGee St. Toronto: 223 Church St.

If your Bookstore cannot supply you, order from our nearest house.

You're Young but Once, by Louise Breitenbach. Boston: L. C. Page. $2.

This wholesome novel is realistic without reeking with gutter vermin. It makes no sacrifice to the abnormal sex problem, but deals with normal and natural people who have a conscience that still functions. The author holds the interest of the reader from beginning to the end. Ann Warren, the heroine of the story, an orphan, heiress to millions, pampered and guarded by designing relatives, has never known the joys that belong to youth. On her twenty-first birthday she leaves her home and goes out into the

The Saving Sense

A Rolls-Royce drove up to the football field of a private school, and a self-important-looking woman called out to a little fellow in uniform: "Will you please call my son, Master Algernon?"

In a moment there was a shout, "Hey Skinny, your ma's here!"—Congregationalist.

"I don't believe in operations," objected the woman. "Even the scriptures are agin' operations. Don't they come right out and say plain as the nose on your face, 'What God hath joined together let no man put asunder?'"

A young dramatist was reading one of his plays to a critic. After a half hour of the reading the critic began to snore. The playwright woke up the critic with the complaint that he was reading his play so that the critic might give an opinion of it and demanded how he could give his opinion if he was asleep during the reading. "But," objected the critic, "sleep is an opinion."

William was so naughty during the day that twice his mother was forced to punish him. He took his punishment quietly enough, but at night when he said his prayers he asked for a blessing on every member of the family and on distant relatives who were not usually included in his evening prayer, and even on the cat, but no mention was made of his mother. When he rose from his knees he looked at her and said, "I guess you noticed you wasn't in it, didn't you?"

"Everything about this place is old," said the hotelkeeper. "You won't be able to find anything lately bought around here."

"That explains," said the guest who was eating the sandwiches the host had brought him. "I thought this ham had an ancient taste—but under the circumstances, what else could be expected?"

The Local Church

ITS PRESENT AND FUTURE
By F. A. AGAR

"We know Dr. Agar personally and consider him one of the greatest church builders in the land."—Alabama Baptist.

$1.00
F. H. REVELL CO., 158 Fifth Ave., New York; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

world to find what she has been denied. Her quest, however, is for the normal, natural and honorable joys of life. She renounces luxury and selfishness and attention for service, friendship and love.

—HAL E. NORTON.

International Golden Rule Sunday, by Charles V. Vickrey. New York: Doran. $2.

Mr. Vickrey, general secretary of Near East Relief, stresses the Golden Rule as the accepted ideal in human relationships. The work of the Near East Relief is presented in picture and story. Specific suggestions are given for the observance of Golden Rule Sunday in the home, the church, the community, amplified by accounts of how it has been done.

—FERN M. BARNETT.

Snowden's Sunday School Lessons, New York: Macmillan. $1.25.

In his usual suggestive mood the author has published another volume of interpretations of the international lessons for 1926. Snowden's lessons are different from the general run of such notes. They are not sermons, neither are they an ambitious attempt to go into detail on the geographical and exegetical points of the lesson text. These lessons drive straight to the practical application of the truth to the men and women of today. The headings or paragraphs are original, the illustrations are fresh, the whole treatment is stimulating to thought and action. The teacher and pupil who are not looking for something already made to wear will find in this book the wool out of which they may spin and weave and make their own garments.

—JOHN A. EARL.

OXFORD BIBLES

Two hundred and fifty years of Oxford Bible publishing has seen so few typographical errors that the accuracy of Oxford Bibles has become the standard of the world.

Text Bible No. 01357

In addition to its accuracy, Oxford Bible No. 01357 is distinguished for its clear, black-faced type. Although measuring only 6 1/2 by 4 1/2 inches it is delightfully readable. Bound in French Morocco with overlapping edges. 12 colored maps. Price $3.50.

Reference Bible No. 03202x

Printed on genuine Oxford India Paper—the thinnest used in Bible making—with same type as No. 01357. Bound in French Morocco. Contains over 50,000 references and 12 colored maps. Price $6.00.

Ask your bookseller for these Oxford Bibles by number or write the publishers. Catalog showing hundreds of these styles upon request.

At your bookseller's

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

American Branch

35 West 32nd Street New York

THREE CENTURIES OF ORGAN BUILDING

No. 3 of a series showing the Kilgen Pipe Organ is built

TO SECURE the desired timbre of each metal pipe, Kilgen begins with the raw materials... melts them, combines rolls, forms and finishes them in the Kilgen foundry. Three centuries of study and understanding go into each voice of the great ensemble.

For example, one special alloy containing 90 per cent tin has been developed for the small-scaled orchestral strings. There are special mixtures for the deep-toned sonorous diapasons. Into the string bases and all front pipes go the best annealed zinc of ample thickness.

Kilgen goes deep into the effect of metal on tone. Here is another reason why Kilgen gives service which must be measured by decades.

Kilgen Organ architects have designed impressive instruments for scores of Baptist churches. They will be glad to give you the benefit of their experience. Write to Dept. E

Geo. Kilgen & Son, Inc.

Builders
Pipe Organs
ST. LOUIS

Volume VII

December 4, 1926

No. 44

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

THE CHAPEL, BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY

Folks, Facts and Opinion

A colony of Porto Ricans is settling in Arizona. The first group of 500 agricultural laborers has already arrived in the Salt River valley.

Dr. Elmer C. Griffith of Kalamazoo, Mich., has an old letter bearing date of July 15, 1837, addressed from Jeremiah Hall, secretary of Kalamazoo institute (now Kalamazoo college), to Rev. John Alden, jr., of Shelburn Falls, Mass., notifying the latter of his appointment as principal of the school at a salary of $600 a year.

The foreign mission board of the Southern Convention offers a prize of $1000 for the best manuscript treating of evangelical Christianity as an alternative for a lost or decaying religious faith. Manuscripts must be submitted on or before Jan. 1. Address for particulars J. F. Love, Cor. Secy. Foreign Mission Board, S. B. C., Richmond, Va.

A curious and unique honor has come to Julian Harris, editor of the Enquirer-Sun of Atlanta, Ga., and son of Joel Chandler Harris. When the Ku Klux movement arose he denounced it as un-American and pleaded for justice to the negro and interracial justice and protested against incompetent and corrupt officials and against the anti-evolution law. At the opening of the fight, his subscriptions slumped 20 per cent. The mails brought threatening letters. The Klan paraded in front of his office. He stuck to his position. At the last election, the Klan ticket was beaten four to one. And Mr. Harris has received the Pulitzer gold medal for 1925 for "the most disinterested and distinguished public service."

Rev. John R. Brown, general secretary of the United Charities of St. Paul, Minn., died suddenly on the night of Oct. 29, in St. Louis, Mo. Having attended a general conference on family welfare, he retired to his room in the hotel for the night, and shortly afterward was stricken with heart failure and died before medical aid could be summoned. For the past three years Mr. Brown made his home in St. Paul, and in connection with his heavy work in administering the associated charities of the city, he found time to preach often. For more than six months he supplied the pulpit of First church, St. Paul, in an interim between pastors. First church, Duluth, was also the beneficiary of a similar service. But his greatest service in St. Paul was done in connection with his efficient administration of the city's organized welfare work. Mr. Brown was a graduate of Rochester university, and of the Rochester Theological seminary, N. Y. He did graduate work in Edinburgh university, Scotland, and was an accomplished scholar. His first pastorate was in Kansas City, Mo., and afterward he was pastor in Providence, R.

I., and Bridgeport, Conn. He went to St. Paul from a professorship in Rochester Theological seminary. His wife and two sons remain.

NEW MACMILLAN BOOKS

Let "This Believing World" do it for you with { the family backslider son or sis that non-church-going friend

This Believing World

LEWIS BROWNE

"It shows that religions may come and religions may go, but religion goes on forever."—Will Durant, Herald Tribune.

"The carefully prepared work of a brilliantly endowed and most intelligently cultivated man who has put into his book irony, satire, scholarship, sympathy and sound common sense."—Hartford Courant.

"I am certain that if I were in your library, though you be preacher, scholar, woman of fashion, day laborer or movie fan, I would so discourse to you of 'THIS BELIEVING WORLD' that you would vow to read it."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

"It is not often that one comes upon a book about religion that so grips the attention that one regrets interruption or is reluctant to lay it down, but this is just such a book."—Boston Globe. Price $3.50

Reality

by Burnett H. Streeter

Author of "The Four Gospels," etc.

"The questions I discuss are living questions to every human being. I shall have failed in my object if this book is intelligible only to philosophers, scientists and theologians."

"My book is addressed in the first instance to the man who has no special training in any of these subjects."

"That the book as a whole will prove easy reading, I am confident." 360 pages. Price $2.50

Luther Burbank:

His Religion of Humanity

by Frederick W. Clappett

This book will prove to the fair-minded that Luther Burbank had gone his own solitary way to triumph in the realms of spirit as all the world agrees he did in the realm of science. Price $1.50

Put this book on your Christmas list

Palestine and Trans-Jordan

by L. Preiss and P. Rohrbach

With 214 photographs and 21 colored plates. Page size 9 x 12.

No Bible-loving home with children should be without a copy of this volume.

Every Sunday School could put it to good use at each session. These pictures are handsome enough to hang continuously around the four walls of the Sunday School room. Price $10.00

Put this book on your Christmas list

The World's Great

Religious Poetry

Edited by Caroline Miles Hill

The most comprehensive, best arranged and lowest priced anthology of religious poetry. 875 pages. Price $2.00

The New Man and the Divine Society

by Richard Roberts

Advocates a return to New Testament Christianity which does in fact gather around the twin doctrines of a "new man" and a "divine society." Price $1.75

Adventures in Habit-Craft

Character in the Making

by Henry Park Schauffler

"As the father of two children, nine and thirteen, it was my privilege to participate in the real adventures in the home as much as in the Sunday School where the children fashioned the habit-craft models that made Sunday School a palace of delight. The children were never satisfied until each parent had watched the new model 'work' and shared with them the thrill of seeing a good habit come to life."—H. V. Kallenborn, Associate Editor, Brooklyn Eagle. Price $2.00

Eight Ways of Looking at Christianity

by Granville Hicks

(1) A Catholic, (2) a fundamentalist, (3) a modernist, (4) a Unitarian, (5) a religious scientist, (6) an agnostic scientist, (7) an English instructor, and, at the close, (8) an artist, are the characters supposed to take part in this discussion of the more important religious issues of the day. Price $1.50

Religion in the Making

by Alfred North Whitehead

Author of "Science and the Modern World"

"But here is the pointed question: Is 'Religion in the Making' of any use to the ordinary bewildered citizen, asking with desperation both of the scientist and the theologian, 'What is it all about?' To the intelligent layman seriously anxious to put his brains to work on the question, yes."—Charles R. Walker (full page), The Independent. Price $1.50

Religious Experience and Scientific Method

by Henry Nelson Wieman

"No book which we have read in recent months has interested us so greatly. Dr. Wieman is not obscure and is never dull. He gives us a most thoughtful and stimulating book. The chapter on 'Christianity and Love' in the first part is exceptionally well worth reading. It is a chapter to which we expect often to return, as we will to many another page in this fine book."—Chicago Evening Post (Editorial Leader). Price $2.25

At your bookstore or from

60 Fifth Avenue
Boston

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
Chicago Atlanta Dallas

New York City
San Francisco

The news of Dr. H. L. Stetson's death which appeared in the Christian Century last week is denied by Doctor Stetson himself in a telegram to THE BAPTIST which reads: "At last reports I was very much alive. I expect to be here some years."

In "The Baptist" of Nov. 13, page 1222, there appeared the report of the Board of Missionary Cooperation as to the contributions to the unified budget. As the report there appears, blank spaces follow the state of Utah, making it appear that Utah has made no contributions. This is not the case. The line that seems to belong to Arizona is the reading for Utah, the line above belongs to Arizona, and so on. There are thirty-three lines of figures crowded opposite thirty-two states. But with this explanation the interested reader can easily identify the contributions with their contributors.

J. F. Watson, executive secretary of the West Washington Convention, and E. B. McQueen, pastor of First church, Rochester, N. Y., have been appointed to the board of the Foreign Society to visit the mission fields of the Far East. The executive committee on the Woman's Foreign Society at the same time appointed Miss Mabelle R. McVeigh as a member of the special deputation. Secy. H. Franklin will accompany the deputation which will sail some time this month. A full official report of this important event arriving too late for inclusion in this week's paper will appear next week.

Dr. Henry van Dyke and his son, Terrence van Dyke, have collaborated in a new book under the title "Light My Candle" published by Revell. The introduction written by the father confesses that "the book is a harvest of youth and age" and that the "reflections are rays from the lanterns of two travelers through the mists seeking the same goal." The title of the book is so pronounced that, as noted by the preface and by the names of the two authors on the title page, the publisher would hardly suspect it to be the joint production of father and son. Here are short and suggestive reflections for each day in the year. For instance, under the heading "On Making Enemies," the gem appears: "It is by no means that the best Christian is he who has the fewest enemies. Indeed, a man can never do anything valuable in the world without making enemies. And the counsel of Jesus is not to avoid making enemies but to love even those who are our enemies—which is quite a different affair."

CAMPBELL MORGAN'S GREAT TREASURE-CHEST of 1188 Sermon-Suggestions
Searchlights from the Word
1188 Sermon-Suggestions—one from every chapter in the Bible. Outlines brief, pregnant with thought, armed with suggestions ranging through the entire Bible, from Genesis to Revelation. $3.75
REVELL CO., 158 5th Ave., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Index

	Page
FOLKS, FACTS AND OPINION.....	1302
EDITORIAL	1305
THE WORLD IN TRANSIT	1307
YOUTH IN THE MINISTRY—VITAL CHRISTIANITY, BY ALBERT G. JOHNSON	1308
GOD'S LIBRARY OF THE FAITH, BY U. M. MCGUIRE	1310
EVANGELISM AND THE PUBLISHERS, BY YORK A. KING.....	1311
BOOKS AS CHRISTMAS GIFTS, BY PERRY J. STACKHOUSE	1313
THE DEVOTIONAL LIFE—THE INDWELLING WORD, BY J. H. JOWETT	1315
CHIMNEY CORNER	1316
BOYS AND GIRLS	1317
YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE KING- DOM	1318
CHURCHES AT WORK	1319
AMONG OURSELVES	1320
NOTES ON THE LESSON	1330

ACCORDING to promise, the first sermon representative of "Youth in the Ministry," appears in this number. Albert G. Johnson, pastor of the Temple Baptist church, Detroit, Mich., is the preacher. An Englishman by birth, he came to America nineteen years ago after some years of technical education in his native land and entered the Moody institute where he took the full course of four years. Three years in the Northern Baptist seminary, Chicago, followed. For nine years he served the Albany Park Baptist church, Chicago, as pastor, taking extension courses in the University of Chicago at the same time. Mr. Johnson is a born preacher. The large and enthusiastic response to his ministry for the past two years in Detroit attests his popularity. When Pres. Geo. W. Taft of the Northern seminary was requested by "The Baptist" to nominate a young preacher for his school, Mr. Johnson was selected.

No service rendered by a religious paper is more valuable than the guidance given in connection with books. As the Christmas season approaches the editors seek to turn attention to what the publishers offer. U. M. McGuire, assistant editor, seeks to create a new interest in the Bible by telling in his own discriminating way how to approach and appraise "God's Library of the Faith." It is the opinion of York A. King, pastor of the First Baptist church, Austin, Chicago, that the publishers might have more of real value to offer in literature on evangelism. Perry J. Stackhouse, pastor of the First Baptist church, Chicago, has gleaned out of a mass of recent books what he considers the finest of the wheat, and treats these under the title, "Books as Christmas Gifts."

The leading editorial points out weaknesses in the process of ordination but awaits the coming of a wiser than Solomon to show a better way. Another good letter from the observing mind of W. L. Ferguson, missionary in Madras, India, will claim the interest and attention of people with more than a single township complex.

The Cross on Peace Hill

"In the Shadow of the Cross"

Pacific Palisades, founded in beautiful Southern California as a resort, educational and residential community by Methodism for Christians of all denominations, is being established literally in the shadow of a huge white Cross, which at night is electrically lighted, and which, day and night, is clearly discernible from practically every home in the community.

To secure a copy of our new folder, "Winter at Pacific Palisades", simply tear out this ad, write your name and address on it, and mail to the Pacific Palisades Association, Pacific Palisades, California.

Pacific Palisades

CALIFORNIA

"God's Garden By the Sea"

The Northern Theological seminary announces that the seventh series of lectures upon the William Cleaver Wilkinsons Foundation will be delivered in the chapel of the seminary, Byrne Hall, 3040 West Washington Blvd., Chicago, by Earle V. Pierce, pastor of the Lake Harriet church, Minneapolis, Minn. The lectures are as follows: (1) "To Look, to Pray, to Go," Tuesday, Dec. 7, 7:45 p. m.; (2) "The Vastness and Viciousness of Heathenism," Wednesday, Dec. 8, 10:15 a. m.; and (3) "The Opportunity for the Gospel and Its Fruit in Foreign Lands," Thursday, Dec. 9. All lectures are open to the public and a cordial invitation is extended to be present. Recently Doctor Pierce made a world tour with special reference to our Baptist missions and in this series of lectures observations and lessons from that trip will be given.

Madras college reports the largest student body, the largest fourth year class and the largest faculty in its history. Among student activities are included the enlistment of a considerable number of its students in religious education work and evangelism among the people outside of the college.

Utah is a trying field for missionary work. For twenty-nine years Miss Frieda A. Dressel has served as missionary among the Mormons of that state under appointment of the Women's Home Mission Society. At Burlington church in Salt Lake City, the officers of the state convention, delegates from every white Baptist church in Utah but one, and a host of friends that overflowed the auditorium, assembled on Sunday evening, Oct. 24, for a surprise reception in her honor. Pastor T. M. Atkinson preached an appropriate sermon. Other Baptist leaders followed in appreciation of the life and work of Miss Dressel. Miss Doris Conley, Mrs. Madge Creedon and Mr. Elmo Hall rendered special music. Two little girls conveyed to the platform a box of roses in the name of the church. Mrs. H. J. Fitzgerald of Immanuel church presented a purse that had been contributed by the various churches. Miss Dressel is a graduate of the Baptist Missionary Training school at Chicago.

FRIEDA A. DRESSEL

The investigation of political gifts from utility magnates to promote the election of friendly officials seems to have moved from Illinois to Indiana. The charge is that Samuel Insull and Edward Jackson, candidate for governor of the state, entered into a conspiracy whereby the former should contribute to the campaign expenses of the latter, and in case of Mr. Jackson's election should be rewarded by the appointment of a public utilities commission favorable to Mr. Insull's interests. So say the papers. The facts are matters for the court. Meanwhile, the innocent public is supposed to register surprise.

A good many years ago Bishop Taylor of the M. E. church undertook the establishment of a line of self-supporting missions across central Africa. In the Congo News Letter, for October C. H. Harvey, in a gentle and human story and with high appreciation of Bishop Taylor, told how the bishop's enterprise failed. Incidentally he points out the difficulties the way of achieving practical self-support in Africa.

(Continued on page 1330)

ABINGDON BOOKS

The Top of the World

By WELTHY HONSINGER FISHER

The record of a remarkable journey which Bishop and Mrs. Fisher took to the mountain fastnesses of the Himalayas. Here they talked and lived with their Buddhist friends while beholding the top of the world and looking upon the most marvelous panorama to be found in the world. Mrs. Fisher took most of the pictures in the book.

Illustrated and boxed. Net, $2.50, postpaid.

A Tuft of Comet's Hair

By F. W. BOREHAM

In this group of essays we have another series of fascinating analyses of humanity from many varying phases. And as everybody is or should be interested in appraisals of human-kind this volume will meet with wide acceptability.

Net, $1.75, postpaid.

My Gray Gull

By WILLIAM VALENTINE KELLEY

"A satisfying interpretation of life, a common-sense attitude towards the problems of human existence, and an inspiration that lifts the soul into the ranges of higher realities."

—Zion's Herald.

Net, $1.50, postpaid.

The Heights of Christian Love

A Study of First Corinthians Thirteen

By DOREMUS ALMY HAYES

Wide reading and rich experiences are apparent in these chapters. Not every author can draw upon his personal experiences and marshal his reading through the years with such happy results.

Net, $1.50, postpaid.

Christ To-day

By LUCIUS H. BUGBEE

A careful and well-balanced inquiry relative to the influence and significance of the person, teachings and example of Jesus Christ in present-day life. The Kansas City star says that he "sets forth a sympathetic and masterful Christ."

Net, 75 cents, postpaid.

The Spiritual Element in History

By ROBERT W. McLAUGHLIN

Much has been written in recent years about the modern attitude of science, philosophy and psychology to religion, but this is the first time that the relation between history and religion has been treated in this manner.

Net, $2.50, postpaid.

Mr. Possum Visits the Zoo

And Other Nature Stories

By FRANCES JOYCE FARNSWORTH

The zoo is always a center of attraction to the children as well as to those of riper years and larger growth. The children will be delighted with the stories assembled in this book.

Frontispiece. Net, 75 cents, postpaid.

Parties That Are Different

By ETHEL OWEN

"It is original, novel, sometimes surprising, and altogether wholesome and attractive. It will solve many perplexities, as it tells what to do and how to have loads of fun with very little expense or preparation."—The Omaha Bee.

Illustrated. Net, $1.00, postpaid.

AT THE BETTER BOOKSHOPS

THE ABINGDON PRESS

New York Cincinnati Chicago Boston Detroit
Pittsburgh Kansas City San Francisco Portland, Ore.

The Baptist

EDITOR: JOHN A. EARL
FIELD EDITOR: G. CLIFFORD CRESS

ASSISTANT EDITOR: U. M. McGUIRE
OFFICE EDITOR: JANET T. VAN OSDEL

Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879 Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY BY THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION AT 2320 MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Single Subscription, $2.50 a year. Clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries, postage is $1.04; in Canada, 52 cents.

The Troublesome Question of Ordination

WHEN BAPTISTS began to ordain men to the gospel ministry by ecclesiastical procedure they set in motion a train of troubles that nothing seems to stop. In communions which regard the church as a divine institution established by our Lord, and by his command and precedent provided with a regular succession of priests, ordination is not burdened with the inherent weaknesses which exist in communions based upon congregational polity. Even the Methodist and Presbyterian churches have no such difficulties in ordaining men to the Christian ministry as hamper the Baptist denomination. They have standards which the candidates for the ministry must reach before they are qualified for ordination, and the organization is so well geared that no looseness is permitted in the processes by which ordination is secured. But Baptist churches are so independent and so free that any one of them may ordain a candidate for the ministry without the ordinary practice of calling together a council composed of the pastors and delegates from neighboring Baptist churches to advise the local church about the wisdom of action in seeking to set aside a man for the special service of the gospel ministry. This, however, is seldom done, but none the less it is within the rights of any local Baptist church to do so. That is only one of the inherent weaknesses of the democracy upon which Baptist churches are supposed to function in ordaining men to carry the "Reverend."

There are other weaknesses. On account of the fact that Baptists repudiate fixed formula in the form of a standard creed and insist on the freedom and right of the individual to interpret the truth for himself, there is really no established body of doctrines upon which the candidate may be examined. If he thinks that the New Testament is a sufficient guide of faith and practice for Baptists and if he undertakes to interpret the New Testament in the light of his own experience and knowledge, he may run against serious difficulty in discovering that the council which examines him does not agree with his interpretation. If, on the other hand, he follows slavishly the articles of faith which most local Baptist churches have adopted as their declaration and gives his statement of Christian doctrine in the words of these historic articles, he may be suspected of the questionable diplomacy of a certain schoolteacher in the old days who, asked by the school board if she taught the geography of a round or a flat world, replied that she could teach it either way according to the wishes of the board. There always will be trouble in Baptist ordination examinations until either fixed standards of doctrine are set, or until the necessary, common-sense freedom is exercised in permitting the candidate to state the fundamental doctrines of the New Testament in his own language.

But probably more annoying than either of the troublesome matters mentioned is the almost utter lack of any educational requirements or ethical standards for the man who asks some local church to make him a Baptist minister. This is written with the fullest appreciation of the men who, entering the ministry handicapped by inadequate educational training, have done a worthy piece of work in the fields to which they have been called. Yet even in their case a certain level of educational standards should have been required. In late years attempts have been made, with some degree of success, to raise the educational standards for ordination; but because there still persists among many Baptists the idea that the Holy Spirit can overcome the handicap of insufficient educational preparation on the part of the candidate, the efforts to lift educational requirements to a higher level have been largely blocked. As to ethical standards, definite and recorded, we do not know of any such being required. Conversion, divine call to the ministry and views of Christian doctrine are the three basic lines upon which all examinations proceed. The fundamental principles of Christian ethics are seldom if ever mentioned to the candidate. The emphasis upon his correctness in doctrine seems to shut out any chance for an expression of the candidate on honesty, purity, courtesy, temperance and all the other virtues and graces which constitute and vitalize Christian ethics.

Some time ago we were asked for information about a certain preacher by the pulpit committee of a church which had him in mind as a prospective pastor. The questions were altogether doctrinal. After answering the questions of the committee, we turned to the chairman and suggested that we might ask a few questions. On being assured that it would be wholly agreeable to do so, we asked if the committee had inquired from reliable sources about the home life of the man they had in mind, if they knew that he was true to his wife, that he paid his honest debts, that he was respected as a true gentleman in his community, that he cherished high ethical and social ideals and demonstrated these ideals in his daily conduct. There was silence. The committee had taken these things for granted in a minister and were anxious only about his doctrinal orthodoxy. The man about whom they inquired fortunately measured up to all the standards, doctrinal, educational and ethical; but the pity of it was that a basic thing in any minister was wholly overlooked.

Possibly it is this attitude of mind on the part of some of the people who constitute the councils of ordination which permits laxity in the morals of some men admitted to the high calling of being ordained ministers of Christ. We cannot dogmatize on this, but we are sure that the troublesome question of ordination will continue to vex us as a people so long as we permit these weaknesses to exist.

Page Thomas Jefferson

THE CYCLE of the American revolution seems to have come almost to completion. And, curiously, it is culminating in the British empire rather than in the United States. The imperial conference just closed in London has effected an understanding among the various members of the empire which amounts to one of the great revolutions of history. It is now definitely settled that the British parliament can no longer govern the dominions. Except India, in which experiments in the direction of autonomy are in progress, every dominion will now have not merely its own local parliament, but will have all of the power of a self-governing state. The governor general, appointed by the king, will have no more power in the dominion government than that of a titular and merely formal representative of the king himself. No international agreement reached by the London government can bind South Africa or Canada. Great Britain has no more power in the government of a dominion than the dominion has in the government of Great Britain. The empire has become in fact and in good faith a commonwealth of independent but permanently associated and cooperating nations, all of them governed under the constitutional forms of democracy. Thus is brought to reality one of the world's most cheering hopes forecast by THE BAPTIST more than a year ago.

What Do You Want for Christmas?

THE QUESTION which forms the heading of this editorial is the leading question of thousands of households at this season of the year. The answers, of course, vary with the age of the respondent and with the financial ability of the interrogator. But the value of the answer in any case lies in both necessity and taste. Many of us anticipating Christmas postpone the buying of certain things we need in the hope of receiving them as gifts and so place them in the family list of things we want. For men the list is familiar: neckties, hose, muffler, fountain pen, pocketbook, stickpin, hair brushes and other toilet articles. The list for women is too formidable to print here, but it is as familiar as the list for men. The getting together and the exchanging of lists among the members of the family is almost as much fun as the actual distribution of the presents on Christmas eve or morning.

We are wondering how many books will be found on the lists as they are made up. With the popularity of public libraries which are now found everywhere and from whose ample shelves books on every subject and for every age may be drawn free of charge, with both private and public libraries giving out the latest books of fiction at a nominal rental, with democratic newsstands and ubiquitous drugstores on every corner flaunting all the magazines constantly, with movie theaters catering to the acquired taste of the people for news, fiction and drama in tableaux and in cinema, the publishers of the best in literature find it increasingly difficult to market their product among the buying public. Why should we buy books when we can get them from the public library? Why should we wade through interminable pages of romance or history when a celluloid film will throw it all on the screen for us in dramatic movement at reasonable cost and in an atmosphere of music and art? These are questions which persist as long as no answer offered seems to convince the mass of people that the public library and the commercial cinema are adequate substitutes for literature, the bookseller and publisher suffer.

And yet every person who thinks consecutively for a few minutes and who has some background of culture knows that nothing can take the place of a good book. It is sometimes said that travel is an education in itself. But the value of travel depends upon the amount of reading a traveler has done and the measure of culture he enjoys. The size and character of a man's private library, other things being equal, are a pretty fair index to his culture. Eliot's five-foot shelf is famous, but probably thousands of people have read the advertisement who have never read the books. Never was there a time so rich in literature as today. The presses are turning out a daily production unprecedented in both volume and value and at a price within the limits of the purse of the poorest. Put on the list of things you want for Christmas a good book or two. THE BAPTIST every week is serving both the publishers and readers with reliable information about the best religious books in its review pages. The publishers are seeking to reach our readers with attractive advertisements of the books they have to offer. This is the time of the year when a new book of genuine worth is a real friend.

The World in Transit

An interpretation of significant events in the light of Christian ideals.

How Percolates the Truth About the Farmer's Problem

Bankers of the southern states, cooperating with the Federal reserve system, are now raising a fund to stake the cotton growers so that they may hold part of their great crop of cotton over for next year's market. The purpose of the plan is to prevent the dumping of the crop and to hold up the price. Thus business will take one more step toward the inevitable goal of community price insurance for the producer. Gradually the farmers and even the bankers are discovering the folly of subjecting agriculture to the exigencies of a competitive and speculative market, especially when that market is rigged to operate against the farmer. Experience will continue to drive home the truth that some form of cooperative insurance must be developed whereby the community shall cease to penalize production.

Will the Red Tide Be Controlled or Harnessed?

History ought to have taught mankind something about the way to deal with those great, infrequent tidal waves of social impulse that rise from the depths of the common mind. Every careful student of society knows that one of these waves is rising upon the shores of present civilization. It is the creative force beneath the major change that is going on in the world. It has already engulfed the whole Soviet area. It is sweeping across China. It nears the top of the dikes in northern Europe. It is pressing steadily into Latin America. Those who fear it most are dealing with the futile program of King Knut for the control of the sea. It laughs at dams, and where it breaks it carries havoc. The best way to strengthen it is to resist it by force. There is one untried method to rob it of its terrors, that is, to canalize it. Study it. Inquire if there may be in it of value that can be utilized to irrigate and fertilize existing arid and sterile social areas. Call in the social engineer to tell how to distribute the values where the need is greatest. Wisely used, the tide may be tamed and made to contribute social enlightenment. Left to the wisdom of those whose engineering is limited to the building of dams, its accumulating force may become irresistible.

Do Powers Propose, Can China Dispose?

In Washington it was learned that the United States and eleven other powers are about to make public their decision not to abandon their extraterritorial rights in China. So ran a news dispatch of Nov. 22. In the wake of events official announcement of the decision would appear before this copy of THE BAPTIST reaches the reader. But what does China say about the matter? Here is a statement of Gen. Chang Kai Shek, leader of the Chinese army, supported also by the attitude of Gen. Yu Hsiang: "The present revolution will not end extraterritoriality rights and concessions and unequal treaties have all been abolished." The attitude of the revolutionary government toward the missionaries has a great interest for many of us. It is this, as stated by Mr. Chang Kai Shek: "The new government will not interfere with the activity of missionaries in China. We have no quarrel with Christianity and no antipathy toward the missionaries." It is a ticklish situation, to be handled with great care. But by what authority does the United States come to be involved in a "foreign entanglement" with eleven other powers unnamed on terms unnamed and implying possible war, without the knowledge of either the congress or the people of the United States? A bit of careful inquiry into this secret diplomacy before the shooting begins would become a people having the average intellectual maturity of a youth of fourteen years.

Who Owns the Prayers, Clergyman or Congregation?

It is an echo of the Detroit question about the invitations to American Federation of Labor men to occupy church pulpits. A daily paper comments in these words: "Morning worship in any church is not the property of the clergyman in charge, but of the parish members. They pay for and have a moral right to receive a Christian message from the pastor or a message of similar import from some clergyman in good standing." There is one element that vitiates the argument. Contributing to a church gives no moral right to control it. One may refuse to pay, if he sees fit, but when he pays, the money belongs no longer to him but to the church. The transaction is a gift, not a purchase. The moral right to control both worship and the pulpit inheres not in any individual or faction but in the membership acting collectively. The clergyman is its servant to carry out its collective will. If the congregation is wise, it will encourage the largest possible freedom in the pulpit. If the pastor is wise, he will not abuse that freedom.

May a College Man Think? What a Preposterous Ideal!

Mr. C. W. Barron, publisher of Barron's, who recently lectured to the Baptist brotherhood of Battle Creek, Mich., gave to the press on that occasion or about that time an interview in which he said, "I regret to note that most of our colleges are socialistic and undemocratic, as well as irreligious in their teachings." The answer would seem to be easy—fire them. In fact, that is what Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries is trying to do at the moment. Dr. Henry Flury, world war veteran, graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and instructor in a Washington high school, wrote in the Forum, in competition with other contestants, a definition of socialism. He won the prize. General Fries demands his dismissal. But there is a hitch. The school board and influential friends support the teacher. Moreover, college and university educators have formed an association to maintain the freedom of teaching. Whether they stand for socialistic, undemocratic and irreligious teaching is a matter easily ascertained. Perhaps they have merely done some thinking. It is a dangerous practice.

Can Religious Education Survive This Incubus?

One of the latest essays of H. L. Mencken releases from his prolific vocabulary of scorn and ridicule a severe indictment of religious education, especially as its method is applied in the current practice of the Sunday school. By way of conclusive example he says that the blighting influence of the Sunday school to which he was subjected in his youth is largely responsible for the cynical attitude he holds now toward human life generally, including religion. The indictment seems to be decisive. One can hardly imagine a more unanswerable arraignment of any system of education than a complaint from Mr. Mencken that he is a sample of its normal product.

Youth in the Ministry

This message as well as all the messages to follow are typical of the regular preaching of the young men who have contributed manuscripts for publication at the request of the editor. A careful and sympathetic reading of the sermons as they appear from time to time will reveal a cross section of the Baptist pulpits of the North so far as they are filled by young ministers.

Vital Christianity

BY ALBERT G. JOHNSON

VITAL Christianity is a tripod of combination. It is a trinity of expression. It is a belief to hold.

The agnostic says, "I do not know"; the Christian affirms positively his belief. He is not necessarily a dogmatist. However, he holds definite beliefs concerning the Christian faith, especially in relation to the central object of his belief, the person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ. To him Christianity is a religion of the living Christ himself. He stands out in bold contrast to the too flexible and uncertain tendencies of much of the modern religious thought and expression. He is a convictionist. He says; "I believe."

Vital Christianity is also a practice to sustain.

There is a close connection between belief and life. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." The scriptural appeal to Christian living is Christian doctrine. Paul's masterful argument throughout his writings bears this out. First he names a Christian doctrine—something to believe—and upon this foundation makes a powerful appeal for Christian living. Let me illustrate. In the early chapters of Romans the apostle elaborates upon the great doctrines, justification by faith and kindred truths. But in chapter twelve listen to his plea for Christian practice: "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God"—an impassioned appeal to Christian living. The apostle's characteristic word "therefore" carries you back to the argument that the powerful motive for Christian living is Christian doctrine. Important as Christian doctrine is, Christian living is of vital importance. Our beliefs shape our conduct. It is wrong to say, "It matters not what a man believes as long as he lives all right." As food determines the condition of the body, so our beliefs determine our character and conduct.

In Relation to the World

Again, vital Christianity is a propaganda to perpetuate.

On the resurrection side of the tomb the Lord Christ, speaking to a group of his disciples, the nucleus of a new society, the invincible church, issued the church's orders. "All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you; and lo, I am with you all the days, even unto the consummation of the age." The propaganda is international in scope, specific in detail, unchanging in character for all time. The history of the Christian church is a history of the propagation of the gospel. And the Baptist contribution in the propagation of Christianity is a thrilling story, demonstrating this fact that needs emphasis in our age. History demonstrates that the success of the propaganda of the gospel in the world depends upon absolute obedience to the orders in the Great Commission. The gospel has no propagating power in itself but moves only as the propagandist is himself moved by the Holy Spirit in obedience to Jesus Christ.

Christianity as a belief is Christianity in relation to the Lord Jesus himself. Christianity as a practice is Christianity in relation to our fellows, the society we touch. Christianity as a propaganda is Christianity in relation to the world.

Center and Circumference

Therefore we are confronted with three concentric cycles of thought and activity. Let us move inward from our thinking from the outer circle of the international sphere of the Christian propaganda; penetrate the second circle of the sphere of Christian practice, into the inner circle, to the supreme object of our belief, into the presence of Christ himself, the very hub of this larger circumference; and here let us be quiet and "listen in." There are moral and spiritual principles involved which I want you to understand. The center is always greater than the circumference, just as a positive is always greater than negative, for without the center there can be no circumference. Again, there is a principle of equilibrium involved. Some people are ever seeking Christian experience. It is paramount; but unless that experience produces life, character, and culminates in service, we should be to say the least, eccentric.

Vital Christianity is a combination of heart and mind and hands; it is a trinity of devotion, intelligence and service. At the hub is Christ—God's great heart—the Son of his love. He is the source and inspiration of our life, the supreme object of our belief, the soul of devotion and the devotion of the soul. I am speaking of the Christ of the New Testament, the Christ of the cross, the Christ of Christian experience. There is a vast difference between a cold intellectual knowledge about Jesus and the warmth of an experimental knowledge of Jesus. Jesus is the most known about, and yet the most unknown of men. Jesus is lost in the labyrinths of fantastic theorizing. Some have placed him in ill equipped laboratories of final analysis, and theories have run wild over him. His head has failed to beat, his mind to function. His personality is gone; and the analysis chart reads: "Jesus is principle and impersonal." Mr. Gladstone, once asked, "What is Christianity?" replied, "Christ."

*"What think ye of Christ is the test,
To try both your state and your scheme.
You cannot be right in the rest,
Unless you think rightly of him."*

In an earnest quest to discover the secret of those fruitful lives and consequent refreshing Christian movement rough the ages that have blessed a world of men, the crystal stream of their inspiration and power has been traced to one great impelling and propelling principle, an answering allegiance to the lordship and mastery of Jesus Christ in their lives. Some one has said, "Until a man is crowned Jesus Lord of all, he has not crowned Jesus Lord at all."

"We are saved to serve." True, but remember, we are saved to worship, and we can only serve aright as we worship aright. Here is that vital principle again—we must be right at the center. In the cathedral of Copenhagen, a place where the lovers of beauty and the devout heart gather, stands the figure of Thorwaldsen's Christ. It is recorded of a traveler who came from afar to see the masterpiece, that he looked upon the framed production with a critical eye and from every angle possible. Eventually he turned away in disappointment, when a little girl ran by, who sensed his disappointment as she watched his face, said: "Ah, sir, you can't see him that way; you must get very close and fall on your knees and look up!" There must come first the unveiling of that manifested City. This is the place where all the great souls began, where we must begin. It was Zinzendorf who exclaimed after his ardent gaze upon the "Christ of Calvary," "I have only one passion and that is himself—himself."

Jesus, Lord and Master

To call Jesus Lord and Master implies a personal relationship to him that touches the whole man. A study of the term and its usage in the New Testament is richly suggestive. The word "master" occurs over and over again in the New Testament, but the original significance of the word reveals a varied meaning. "Master" means "teacher," the word used by the pupil when addressing his teacher. It is derived from the old Hebrew word rabbi, "teacher." This is the word used by Peter when addressing Jesus on the Mount of Transfiguration; "Master (teacher), it is good for us to be here." Judas used the word twice; once at the table—"Master (teacher), is this?"—once in the garden, "'Hail Master (teacher)', and he kissed him." It reveals the depth of his sin. It is an endearing term, the Aramaic form as used by Mary, "my teacher." The emphasis is upon the personal relation between the pupil and teacher. In this relationship the word is used in another sense; it also implies the thing he teaches. This is the word used by the young ruler when asking the burning question, "Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" It is the word Jesus used when addressing Nicodemus, "Art thou a master of Israel and knowest not these things?" If we would call Jesus Lord and Master, we must acknowledge him as our authority, "my Teacher," and the authoritativeness of which he teaches. I wonder if in this day of advanced methods of religious education, we are not facing a danger. Any method of teaching that minimizes the presence of the great Teacher with the pupil, or his absolute authority as Teacher and in the thing he teaches may be religious education, but not necessarily Christian.

This word "master" yields another meaning. It conveys the idea of subordination to a superior. This is seen in the use of the word by Peter on the morning after the night of fruitless toil. You recall how Jesus gave an order to "launch out, and cast the nets for a draught," to which Peter replied, "Master, we have toiled all night and have taken nothing; nevertheless, at thy word, I will let down the net." You remember with what success they did it. Now, this word "master" as used by Peter is the word "superintendent," one who stands over. How richly suggestive! A relationship that recognizes that he is the Superintendent of our lives, it is ours to obey his orders implicitly, a relationship that should exist between Christ and us if we would call him Lord and Master.

Again, this word "master" implies the relationship which exists between the slave and his owner. What! Slavery! It sounds repulsive. Paul speaks to Timothy after giving final instructions concerning his walk and warfare, of being "meet for the Master's use." The phraseology of the Roman slave enters in; his person, property and all belonged to his master. The word "master" here is the word despotes—the sovereign master—a despot. Paul reveals the secret of his own life in relation to Jesus Christ and its impact upon society. He speaks of himself as "the bond servant of Jesus Christ." This is the climax of Christian life and experience; it means, if we would accept the Lordship of Jesus Christ over our lives, that we enter into the happy bondage of slavery to him, wherein we find our emancipation complete. This is the vital thing. It is more or less of a crisis in an individual life.

Charles, Kingsley wrote on entering his twenty-second year: "My birth night. I have been for the last hour on the seashore, not dreaming, but thinking deeply and strongly, and forming determinations which are to affect my destiny through time and eternity. Before the sleeping earth and the sleepless sea and stars, I have devoted myself to God—a vow never (if he gives me the faith I pray for) to be recalled."

The chivalric service of Christ is beautifully set forth in the devotion of the mediaeval knight to his earthly king. He knelt bare-headed, without war arms, and placing his hands between those of his superior, swore:

"Hear, my Lord! I now become liegeman of yours for life and limb and earthly regard; and I will keep faith and loyalty to you for life and death. God help me!"

"Who then this day is willing to consecrate himself to the Lord?"

Near East Relief.

God's Library of the Faith

God's Library of the Faith sings through all the years, "See the Christ stand!"

BY U. M. McGUIRE

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL is credited with the advice that the Bible should be read as if one had never seen it before. To a good many people the advice would be superfluous, because they are not sufficiently familiar with the Bible to wear off the edge of novelty. But the advantage of such an approach is that one dismisses a mass of inherited presuppositions about the Bible, and thus gives to its literary material a chance for fresh and sincere self-expression.

When the study is so approached, one of the first and most vital discoveries is that only in the most superficial and artificial sense is the Bible a book. Not only does it never call itself the Bible or designate itself as a book, but in all sorts of ways it tries to tell the reader that it is something other than a book. For the uses of pious rhetoric one may speak of it as "God's Holy Word," or as "the Book." But originally it was spoken of as ta biblia, "the books," and since all books of that early age before the invention of printing were written by hand, the contents of the Bible were called also the scriptures. In brief, it is a collection of pamphlets, a library in a single cover. Until one gets this peculiarity of the volume in mind he is not prepared to begin any intelligent study of the collection as a whole.

The Principle of Selection

But as soon as one begins to consider the several pamphlets, he makes some thrilling discoveries. He finds that they were written at different places remote from one another, by persons in vastly different situations and with different experiences, in different historical conditions, and in times that were centuries apart. They have come out of strenuous human lives; express human thought, feeling, purpose, struggles, joy, sorrow, love, hate, success, failure, victory, defeat, hope and despair. They were written, copied, selected, preserved, collected, revised, edited, translated, printed, bound, distributed and interpreted by human hands and minds, and all of these processes except the original writing are still going on. The original writings are lost and it is interesting to inquire just what there is in these books as we have them today that remains exactly as it was in the copies that came from the hands of the original authors.

It is not hard to discover the principle of selection that culled these pamphlets out of the innumerable writings given to the world through the long ages and assembled them as belonging properly together and as worth preserving. That principle is their connection with the Christian religion. They are as nearly as possible the original sources of our knowledge of the facts and principles of this religion. This is the obvious and sufficient reason for selecting, collecting, preserving, treasuring and studying them through successive generations of Christians age after age. For the purposes of Christian faith and teaching it sets them apart from the mass of the world's literature. Their singular value as sources of information about our Saviour and our salvation associates them inseparably with the whole range of the religious experience of the Christian, makes them precious beyond all other writings in the world and gives to them an authority for the guidance of Christian faith and life that is unique and irrevocable.

One does not read far in these books before he begins to sense the Eternal. They are charged with eternal meaning. They shine with a radiance of eternal truth. They are warm with the impulses of the eternal Spirit. They sketch the purposes and portray the character of God. They express the urgency of both his holiness and his grace. In them his call to righteousness and the best life becomes unmistakable. They awaken, inspire, impel and guide the soul to its highest quest for God. They set all human life both personal and social in the presence of God, and over it all they proclaim the reign of God.

Inspiration Undebatable

Any dogma of inspiration is superfluous. The method of inspiration is as inscrutable as the most deeply hidden things of the human spirit. To mince phrases about the way God managed to secure in this collection of pamphlets a revelation of himself is to trifle with the merest superficialities of religion. What is evident is that he does. Their inspiration is a present fact of experience, self-evident and undebatable. It can be set aside only by the unscientific denial that the existence of God can find a possible registration in the field of human consciousness. As surely as the Bible is permitted to tell its story it delivers a message from God to men. And taking the collection of pamphlets as a whole, it is unique among the world's libraries in this power to reveal God. If words are used with reference to essential spiritual values rather than to formal pronouncements, truth is not strained by calling the Bible the word of God, for as such it operates within human experience. Probably Paul was thinking within the limits of the Old Testament collection of books when he had in mind such of them as were then in existence when he said, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction and for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished for every good work." At least the Bible does for human life what he conceived to be the normal object of all scripture given by inspiration of God.

Since every one of these sixty-six pamphlets is historically conditioned in its origin, transmission and present form, only historical study can bring out their full meaning and value. Of course a mere study of the geographical history and literary characteristics of the scriptures would be an academic exercise and would miss the great essentials of their message. But a mere study of those subjects is not suggested. Indeed, can there be a mere study of the Bible on those lines? If once the student gets the historical setting of such a book as Jeremiah, for instance, that the drama of human experience therein described passes before him, so that he can feel the passionate anxiety of the men and nations involved, and so that he catches the very swing and flash of their rhetoric, he will find himself drawn irresistibly into the presence of God and will feel himself fairly driven to repent, to worship God and to devote himself to the cause of righteousness. And the more critically exacting the historical quest, the more richly is it rewarded by spiritual discovery. After all, is not the historical Christ the real Christ, and the historical Bible the real Bible?

Among the uses of a library one of the highest is that of putting the reader in communication with the master spirits of the race. For this purpose again the Bible unique. For that portion of its material which lies within the field of human history introduces the reader to a mountain range of religious experience and of moral and social idealism crowned by a line of majestic personalities that runs through twenty centuries and towers in unequalled spiritual sublimity. What a list of names: Abraham, Moses, Samuel, Elijah, Amos, Isaiah, Jeremiah, John the Baptist, and Paul! A world that strews flowers on the grave of the Unknown Soldier ought to be able to appreciate the great unknown geniuses or known geniuses so lost in their message that they did not care to be known, who out of their consuming spiritual stress gave the world such stories as those of Noah, Joseph, Ruth and Daniel; such a promethean epic as Job; such an appeal to international good-will and missionary endeavor as Isaiah; such songs of exalted worship and serene trust as the nineteenth and the twenty-third psalms; such an inspiring portrait of Jesus as the Gospel of Luke; such a eloquent tribute to the Christ as the book of Hebrews; and an overwhelming photo-drama and oratorio of the conflicts and the victories of faith as the Revelation.

But the chief value of this library lies not in the scattered masses of moral, spiritual and social wealth buried like golden ore in its ranges. It lies in the person of Christ therein presented to human faith. There is a ritual in the Bible that symbolizes, however imperfectly, his saving work. There is an idealism in the Bible which can find its realization only in him. The validity of the moral and religious truth of the Bible lies only in its Christly implications. There are hopes in the Bible that only he can fulfil. There is a vast human hunger revealed in the Bible that only he can satisfy. There is a world's sickness of sin exhibited in the Bible which only he can cure. There is a wilderness of human darkness and error spread out to view in the Bible into which only he can bring light, order and beauty. As in Browning's poem the young harper David sang to the demented and bedeviled King Saul, so to a perplexed, distressed and bedeviled world, God's Library of the Faith sings through all the years "See the Christ stand!"

Just Use Me

BY E. C. BAIRD

I am the Bible.

I am God's wonderful library.

I am always—and above all—the truth.

To the weary pilgrim, I am a good strong staff.

To the one who sits in black gloom, I am a glorious light.

To those who stoop beneath heavy burdens, I am a sweet rest.

To him who has lost his way, I am a safe guide.

To those who have been hurt by sin, I am a healing balm.

To the discouraged I whisper a glad message of hope.

To those who are distressed by the storms of life, I am an anchor sure and steadfast.

To those who suffer in lonely solitude, I am as a cool, soft hand resting on a fevered brow.

Oh child of man, to best defend me, just use me.

Evangelism and the Publishers

BY YORK A. KING

Some time ago I heard a distinguished Episcopal bishop say, "The revival for which we have been praying is just here. I think I hear the sound of the going in the top of the mulberry trees." And after a few moments' reflection he added, "God has done all he can do. The revival I never needed a great work of grace more than it is now. The church alone seems to be hesitating. When she is ready the revival will be here."

Recently one of our daily papers editorially observed, "The revival of religion for which the churches have been praying is almost here. The statesmen are calling for it. There was there a time when so much space was given to religious matters in the daily press as at the present. The church alone seems to hold the key to the situation. When she wants it, we believe the revival will come."

Of the recently published books on evangelism which I have read, I am impressed with the prominence some of the publishers give to this important subject. Although there is a sameness in them all, there is enough variety to make them readable, and each makes a substantial contribution to the great cause.

"Christ in Man-Making" by Herman Harrell Horne (Dodd Press), a book of 100 pages, covers three lectures: "Christ in Heredity," "Christ in Environment" and "Christ in the Individual Will," and is a philosophic study of genetics, eugenics and good-will employed by God in directing his work in bringing all the race up to the standard of Jesus Christ, the complete man. Mr. Horne claims that by putting Christ in control of all the forces known to science which shape life, and by the use of our good-will, we shall cooperate with God in his effort to redeem man.

In striking contrast to the above is "Harnessing God" by Paul Rader (Doran). While these nine sermons cannot claim homiletical greatness, they burn with a zeal for God and a passion for the souls of men. Mr. Rader magnifies the place of prayer and "the fullness of the Spirit" as essential to the coming revival. One chapter is devoted to "How and What to Believe to Be Saved." By "Harnessing God" Mr. Rader means that there is a power, not his own, which man may utilize in his effort to save the world.

A book by Charles N. Pace entitled "Bring Him to Me" (Methodist Book Concern) claims to be a short study of modern methods in the redemption of men. Mr. Pace begins with the impression made by Raphael's "Transfiguration" and holds up the spirit of that as the great magnet. Then, transposing the picture to the twentieth century, he shows what Christ can do for the wicked man where all corrective efforts, such as surgery, social betterment, sociological and other corrective laws have failed. The church says frankly, "I cannot help you but I know One who can," and points the sinner to the Lamb of God who transforms the man within and without. This book sounds a note for which one looks in vain in many writings on modern evangelism.

"The Unguarded Gate" (Abingdon Press) by Floyd W. Lambertson, gives the result of the author's psychological study of youth. The book contains forty exquisite junior sermons in story form. Several of these are set forth in pantomime, calculated to catch the attention of the older members of the congregation as well as the children for whom they are especially written. The material is carefully prepared, and the teachings are attractive and convincing. Using the gateway to the castle to arouse interest, Mr. Lambertson points out the gateways to the soul with an appeal that only those things which are true, honest, just, pure and lovely be admitted. The chapters on "Making the Great Decision" and "Living the Christian Life," are of special evangelistic value.

"Many Mansions"

A book of sermons preached by John MacNeill of Toronto on "Many Mansions" (Doran) was blessed of God in awakening slumbering saints, comforting longing souls, establishing in the faith uncertain Christians and bringing many men and women to accept Christ as Saviour and apply for membership in the church. Mr. MacNeill takes the reality of eternal life as a starting point and without departing from the scripture, reasons concerning the future existence of man. His frequent reference to science and philosophy holds one's interest. Brief stories and poems illustrate his points. The subject matter—heaven, hell, judgment, recognition of loved ones and kindred topics—guarantees a hearing. The results confirm our conviction that sermons on great Biblical themes should characterize all preaching in these days of promised refreshings from the presence of the Lord.

Leonard M. Edwards' "Every Church Its Own Evangelist" (Methodist Book Concern) has seven addresses in which the author discusses evangelism from the present-day point of view. He majors the opportunity of the "evangelistic pastor," giving workable plans which can be adjusted easily to the average church. "Climatic Essentials" is the term he uses to describe certain prerequisites to successful soul-winning. He deals with the common fallacies—(1) Evangelism is difficult therefore we should import expert help, and (2) evangelism is so easy that we need give it no special attention—by magnifying the special power which has been provided for this difficult but only worth-while task. The volume is helpful in suggestions, rich in illustrative material and sound evangelistically.

It is difficult to write a great deal upon the same general topic without repetition. L. R. Scarborough's book "How Jesus Won Men" (Doran) has many suggestions, differently expressed, that we find in his "With Christ after the Lost." But this is a real contribution to the cause of evangelism and sets forth the sane methods our Lord used in the real object of his mission. This writer, like his Lord, has definite convictions of man's need of a Saviour. And by a careful study of the Master's methods in dealing with all sorts of people, he gives us a constructive program which might well be followed by present-day churches.

Charles L. Goodell's book on "Motives and Methods in Modern Evangelism" (Revell) has two especially interesting chapters. "Evangelism of the Modern Mind" sets forth the real message of successful evangelism of all time, which is the story of Jesus presented so that men of today can understand and feel the presence of him who always subdues, masters and conquers his hearers. "Pentecost and Power" reveals the secret of the dynamic necessary for all successful Christian work.

"Evangelism" by F. Watson Hannan (Methodist Book Concern) gives methods used successfully by a pastor several years ago and still workable. This author majors with I should call "church evangelism." While he recognizes the value of union meetings of all the churches in community, he is frank to say that far less harm is done and more permanent good results from individual church persistently pursuing the cause of evangelism through regular avenues of the church's normal activities. This calls "continuous evangelism." He discusses "personal evangelism" under "The Conduct of Periodic Revivals" and "Practical Evangelism Conserving Results" using the Master of Soul-Winner's methods in accomplishing results.

"Evangelism in the Remaking of the World" by A. Wright Leonard (Methodist Book Concern) has six interesting chapters covering practically all the principal phases of this subject. Beginning with the evangelistic pastor he discusses evangelism among the young people, the Bible school, in the social services of the church and closes with a splendid chapter on "Safeguards of Evangelism." This book throbs with soul-winning passion. It is well balanced with ripened experience and rich in illustration.

"The Evangelism of Jesus"

Ernest Clyde Waring's "The Evangelism of Jesus" (Abingdon Press), a well-arranged handbook that might well be used in class work, contains six studies in the personal evangelism of our Lord. Each chapter opens with a devout prayer and closes with a series of questions which add to its value as a textbook. The doctrinal point of view of this writer is interesting. His statement of religious beliefs is modern, the spirit of the book is splendid, the scripture passages are well selected, the arrangement of facts logical and the tone of the book is helpful. It is different enough from all the others to make it attractive and contains a message for sinner and saint in all the essential phases of Christian development.

One can hardly conclude this little study without query: Is it not singular that such a time as this, when the whole Christian world is thinking and talking evangelism, has not brought forth some great soul stirring treatise on that subject?

God Is With Us

GOD IS with us in our sorrows. There is no pang that rends the heart, I might almost say none which disturbs the body, but Jesus Christ has been with us in it. Feel you the sorrows of poverty? He "had nowhere to lay his head". Do you endure the griefs of bereavement? Jesus "wept" at the tomb of Lazarus. Have you been slandered for righteousness' sake, and has it vexed your spirit? He said, "Reproach hath broken mine heart." Have you been betrayed? Do not forget that he, too, had a familiar friend, who sold him for the price of a silver penny. On what stormy seas have you been tossed which have not also roared around his boat? Never gloomed of adversity so dark, so deep, apparently so pathless, but where you stooping, you may discover the footprints of the Crucified One. In the fires and in the rivers, in the cold night under the burning sun, he cries, "I am with thee; be not dismayed; for I am both thy Companion and thy God."

—SPURGEON

Books as Christmas Gifts

Some things to make the pomp of kings ridiculous

BY PERRY J. STACKHOUSE

"GIVE ME a book, health and a June day and I will make the pomp of kings ridiculous," declared Emerson. In our northern latitude there are no June days during the Christmas season, but when the blustering, freezing winds of winter are raging and the air and earth are white with snow, give me a book, health, and a radiant replacement, and I will make the pomp of kings not merely ridiculous, but imbecile.

This is the time of year when the problem of Christmas gifts becomes acute. Christmas suggestions for her and him leap at us in headlines of the advertisements in our daily papers. Let us note the suggestion made years ago by Amos Bronson Alcott, "Of gifts there seems no more becoming to offer a friend than a beautiful book." Here are three books that may help to solve the problem of Christmas gifts.

Among the "Other Essays" in "My Gray Gull and Other Essays" by William Valentine Kelley are "The Religion of Life," "An Orchid in the Garden of Human Sentiments," "Minetta Brook," "The Water Mark in Human Nature," "A Physician in Wonderland," "A Business Man's Philosophy," and "The Ethics of Ridicule." These essays deal with problems of religion and philosophy. They are rich with literary allusions, and the preacher will find an illustration for a sermon on almost every page. A possible criticism of the book is the many pages that the author devotes to a study of the ethics of auburn locks. No famous person in ancient or modern times with a head that gleamed with scarlet flame has escaped the scrutiny of the author of this book. Like the unknown writer of the epistle to the Hebrews who called the roll of the illustrious patriots and martyrs and warriors in Hebrew history, Doctor Kelley summons the eminent men and women with anset in their hair and recounts their mighty achievements in God and home and country. People who are sensitive concerning the Titian tint of their hair will be comforted, satisfied, and may perhaps develop a superiority complex as a result of reading this book.

The book will be like the shadow of a great rock in a weary land to preachers who have been influenced by the older theory of life—that there is only the chimney corner for the man who has counted his seventieth birthday. Here is a volume of essays that reveals a keen and penetrating mind with a modern outlook upon life and its problems, optimistic and as fresh as a flower with the morning dew upon it, and written by a man who has passed his eighty-third birthday. Doctor Kelley, at eighty-three years of age, still looking for new worlds to conquer, is a fine illustration of the statement of Washington Gladden, "When we have learned how to live, men will be at their prime at seventy and men 100 years old will be found in every block."

Some of the new challenges to faith, as set forth by Sherwood Eddy in his "New Challenges to Faith" are evolution, relativity, behaviorism, psychoanalysis, the historical method, and the new discovery of the influence of the mental mystery religions upon early Christianity. In the chapters of the book he deals with "The New Science," "The New Psychology," "A New Discovery of God," "The New View of the Bible," "What Is Christianity?" and "A New Reformation."

Mr. Eddy is not an authority in the realm of science, psychology, or theology, but he has made a close study of the results reached by men who are experts in these fields of thought and has written a book that contributes toward the solution of some of our modern religious and social problems. Mr. Eddy declares: "Science and religion need each other. If divorced, a materialistic science and an unscientific reactionary religion are positive menaces. Acting together a humanized science and a scientific spiritual religion can lead mankind to the enrichment, organization and integration of life in a developing, cooperative process."

The problem of God is the most important that confronts the human race, and the greatest contribution that any philosopher, scientist, theologian can make to human happiness and progress is to teach us what he knows about God. The mechanistic philosophy as it is being taught in some of our schools and colleges and popularized for the masses by such men as Clarence Darrow, is that there is no God, no salvation, no immortality, nothing but cosmic collapse at the end. It is the idea that man is little more than an animated clod and that the universe is a mere machine without sympathy or purpose.

Mr. Eddy finds God in nature, in men, in a world of values, in persons of spiritual genius, and finally, in personal experience. He writes: "Let us seek God in nature and we shall find him there—not merely things, or matter, or mechanism, but the God whom all nature reveals. Let us seek him in man. For if at the center of the universe there is this principle of love, then only those who look with the eyes of love will see the truth of things and will see him at work in his world. Let us seek him in the inner values of life, in whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are good. We shall find the source, sum and end of all the values united in a God who is love. Let us seek him as he has spoken in times past, through the prophets and men of spiritual genius. But especially, if we may judge by results, we may discover him in Jesus and in following his way of life. Finally, in our own hearts, if they be pure, if they be humble, if they hunger and thirst for God, we shall find him within."

Probably the most important chapter in the book is on the new reformation. Here speaks the prophet, and like all true prophets he has no comfortable words to utter concerning our present economic and religious order. Mr. Babbitt after reading this chapter will be confirmed in his opinion that the captains of industry were justified in using the financial thumbscrews to prevent Sherwood Eddy from appearing on the platform of the Y. M. C. A.

It is a dark picture that the author paints of the life of today. There is the menace of lawlessness and crime. There is the breakup of the home, the weakening of the institution of marriage and the rapid increase of divorces. There are the extremes of unshared wealth and unrelieved poverty. "The results are written in the lives of crushed humanity—crowded tenements, unsanitary surroundings, congested and demoralized family life, sickness, child labor, mothers forced into industry, ignorance and low mentality, untrained and undesirable citizenship, growing class hatred of masses sodden with misery and despair." There is the materialism of our age. Material things, instead of being the simple means of life, have become its end, its standard of measurement, its God—Mammon. He writes: "Our present social order in times of peace is causing more poverty, more wounds and crippled lives and more deaths than the world war ever did." God knows our social order is bad enough, but with all due respect to Sherwood Eddy, it is hardly as bad as that.

There is surely need of reformation, and Mr. Eddy next raises the question whether the forces of organized religion are prepared to be the chief agency of such a reformation, or whether they are themselves in need of reformation. The fact that he finds lack of growth and absence of power in the church, denominational divisions with party strife and factions, would seem to indicate that the physician of the souls of men must first heal himself. The new reformation, according to the author, will have at least three characteristics. It will be true to the scientific spirit and genius of the age. It will combine vital, personal religion and social application. It will have the dynamic of spiritual passion.

An editor of one of our religious magazines recently was mourning over the fact that since the passing of

Abingdon Press

Rauschenbusch no great prophet of the social gospel had emerged. Sherwood Eddy, as revealed in the pages of this book, seems to have some of the marks of such a prophet.

In his recent book, "Religious Perplexities," Dr. L. P. Jacks, principal of Manchester college, Oxford, perhaps better known to Americans as the editor of the Hibbard Journal, has no infallible answer to the perplexing questions of our times. He does not attempt to sidestep these questions. He faces them squarely and suggests as a solution not any intellectual formulae, but what might be called a sort of spiritual adventure. He thinks that "when ever the truths of religion are too much defended they are cheapened and when cheapened they become uncredit-able." For this reason religion has suffered as much from its would-be friends as from its avowed enemies. He quotes with some approval the suggestion made by extremists that "there would be more believers in God if all the theologians would take themselves off."

According to the author, the first and greatest religious perplexity—the source of all the rest—arises in the mysterious fact of our existence as individual souls. Why are we here? Doctor Jacks writes: "Did we but know the purpose for which we are present in the world, should we not have in our hands the key to all the questions we raise about God, freedom, duty and immortality? But if we know not why we are here, how can we hope to answer the other questions?"

Religion, according to Doctor Jacks, must rest upon a psychological basis. It is determined by man's needs and desires; by the aspirations and failures of the human spirit. Here he introduces his Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, the coward and the hero found in the breast of every man.

The two are perpetually at variance. The reason of the one is the unreason of the other, and the truth of the one is the falsehood of the other. Religion is a power which develops the hero in the man at the expense of the coward in him. As the change progresses there comes a moment when the cowardly method of reasoning ceases to dominate the soul. At the same moment the heroic element awakens and looks with longing toward the dangerous mountain tops. Thenceforth the man's reason becomes the origin of the new spirit that is in him, no longer fettered to the self-center, but mounting up with wings as an eagle.

His conclusion is that in a world where no reason can give why the soul should exist, this soul, nevertheless, resolves to create a reason for its own valor in the sun and certain faith that the universe, indifferent to the coward, will be friendly to the hero; will respond to his effort; will lend him his own creative energy and bring him at last into fellowship with the divine spirit which first prompted his attempt to the heroic. This life of the heroic spirit he defines as "religion in being."

Doctor Jacks thinks that "one of the fruitful sources of religious perplexity is over-anxiety about the defense of religion. We have cooped up the faith in theological fortresses, surrounding it with an immense array of our works, creeds, dogmas, apologetics, institutions, and have used up our resources in holding to our position against one another when we ought to have been attacking the common enemy on the open field."

He contends that Christianity does not begin with the idea of God as moral governor. It allows us to arrive at it perhaps at the end of a long pilgrimage in experience but if we never get there, it makes no lamentation, pulls no long face and does not treat us as lost souls. He believes that the religion of Jesus is the spirit of comradeship of man with nature raised to its highest power, a spirit which perceives itself to be not alone, but loving, befriended and supported. In its essence the gospel is a call to make the same experiment, the experiment of comradeship, the experiment of fellowship, the experiment of trusting the heart of things, throwing self-care to the wind in the sure and certain faith we shall not be deserted, forsaken, betrayed and that our ultimate interests are secured in the hand of the Great Companion.

The power and beauty of Doctor Jacks' book will be recognized by any reader, but its appeal will be limited to a comparatively small group of strong, choice, courageous spirits. The man who starts out on such a spiritual adventure as is advocated by the author must be willing to take all the hazards. He must have the spirit of Tennyson's Ulysses.

"Strong in will,
To strive, to seek, to find and not to yield,
For my purpose holds
To sail beyond the sunset and the paths
Of all the western stars until I die.
It may be that the gulfs will wash me down.
It may be we shall touch the happy isles

But the great mass of mankind wants to touch the happy isles and is not ready for an adventure that may wash down into the gulfs. The universe that he is asked to trust often seems harsh and forbidding to the average man. It has nothing but evasive answers to the problems which his soul propounds. In Christ he finds a God who satisfies his needs, and in the church with its ordinances, its worship, its confession of faith and fellowship with Christian people there comes to him a sense of salvation and security and he would disagree emphatically with the statement of the author that there is no place on earth where a man's soul is less safe than in one of these masterpieces of military architecture.

The Devotional Life

The Indwelling Word

"Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly."—Col. 3:16.

By J. H. JOWETT

FIRST of all, let us literally carry out the apostle's counsel. Let us go among the words of the Lord Jesus exploring for the word. For the treasure which we are seeking is described in the singular number, "the word"; and the hiding-place of the word is described in the plural number, "the words." The words offer us a varied field for exploration, and the object of our quest is the essential word which is hidden in their depth. To be an explorer in this field is not merely to be busy with the words, reading them with diligence, or committing them to memory. That would be as if I were to bury myself among a gathered pile of purses, feeling their material, tracing their patterns, observing the grace and novelty of their designs, and yet never opening them to find the treasure which may be hiding in the secret pocket. It would be as if I were to handle a pile of oyster shells, turning them over and over, noting their shapes and their individual lines and features, and yet never to open them in quest of a possible pearl. I am to go among the words of Christ looking for the word which is the pearl of great price.

The Quiet Quest

And this cannot be done hurriedly. We cannot rush through a chapter of words and come out of it laden with the word. It is the reward of patient and leisurely movement. I well remember Dr. Joseph Parker advising me in my early ministry never to "gallop" through the scriptures. "Go slowly and look around!" What do motorists see of the wayside flowers when they are scorching along at thirty or forty miles an hour? What do they hear of the songs of birds, or what do they see of the movements of the shy, graceful things which only venture out when everything is quiet and still? The "word" is the surprise which is given to the soul which moves with reverent and unhasty steps. If we rush along, we shall miss it.

Sometimes the word is hidden in a parable, and I am to find the living thing cradled in folds and garments of deftest imagery. Sometimes the word is concealed in words which the Master spoke to another, and I am to listen with a sort of over-listening, a kind of eager eavesdropping, to see if there is anything meant for me. Sometimes the word is veiled in a work. Some deed of the Master's is a medium of revelation. Or it may be only a look or an attitude or a gesture, and the word I am seeking is to be found in their inner significance. Sometimes the word is conveyed in a disciple's letter, a letter written to the Romans or to the Ephesians, or to a few folk at Colossae or at Philippi, and I am to read it carefully, reading also between the lines, if perchance I may find the abiding truth which is the light of the ages, and which is the lamp for the doings and goings of our day. In all these many fields the treasure is hid, and if I am to find it, the Master says I must have all my wits about me. I am to be as alert as a merchant. I am to be as wakeful and busy as a speculator who has found a treasure in a field and who gives himself no rest until he has made the purchase and the land is his. It is in this spirit and with this passion I am to go in search of the "word of Christ."

And I am to let the word of Christ dwell in me. The word is not to be a transient thing, going in at one ear and out of the other, like a caller who stays for an hour and then continues his journey. This word is to dwell with us, to settle down with us to make its home in the inner room of the soul. It is to live with us in the privacies of our being where our own word is born, and where our own words take life and shape and quality. The word of Christ is to dwell there as a mentor, as a monitor, nay, as a creator, determining my word, my words and my work, and so fashioning their virtue and expression that they will incarnate the life and spirit of the Lord. The divine word is to dwell within me to make the tenant divine.

Like a Royal Presence

And the word is to dwell within me richly. It is not to be on the same level with other things, one of a fellowship of commoners who belong to the same rank. It is to be of an altogether different degree and quality. It is to be like some superb and royal presence, moving with authority and grace. The word of the Lord is to dwell in the soul with rich and rare distinction. And because the word is so exalted, because it is so rich and glorious, it enriches everything it touches with something of its own distinction. This is the real philosopher's stone; it transforms everything into spiritual gold. It endows everything with divine quality—our thoughts, our wishes, our affections, our purposes, our actions. It touches everything into gold.

—From "Life in the Heights," published by Doran.

The Chimney Corner

Sandoe's Pocket*

BY ELSIE SINGMASTER

(Continued from last week)

AT THE exit from the Pocket the Wambaughs and Stoughs and Starks waited, curiosity having got the better of hatred.

"Are you going to bring it along?"

Miss Tinley called, "Yes." Her car climbed the little rise, dipped over and was seen no more.

"It's my belief she'll never come back," said some one. "She's gone and the money's gone. All them hundreds."

Mrs. Gates' residuary estate amounted to $300, but in the Pocket three hundred was equal to three million in some other quarters.

As if Miss Tinley had taken the sun with her, the light changed suddenly and the Pocket took on the gray color of dawn and twilight. Almost at once, before the Saxes and Yeatts and Wolfs began to descend from their vantage point at the schoolhouse, or the Wambaughs and Starks and Stoughs turned from the exit to the Pocket, snowflakes began to fall. They were small but they lay for an astonishing long time without melting.

THE Wolf cabin stood nearest the schoolhouse, and at her door Mrs. Wolf paused with open mouth and dismayed eyes.

"Do you think she ain't comin' back no more, Pop?"

"I'll bet any money she ain't," said old man Yeatts.

Mrs. Wolf opened her door and stood with her hand on the latch looking backward at her departing menfolk. Forlorn, untidy, toothless as she was, she took immense pride in the ability of her son to correct her husband.

Indoors it was as cold as out. The woodbox contained a few sticks, the rest of the supply was uncut in a pile on which the snow was gathering. Mrs. Wolf stepped out and lifted the unwieldy saw. Once a woman in the Pocket refused to prepare dinner until her husband provided wood, but that was in summer. In winter such boldness meant cutting off one's nose to spite one's face. Mrs. Wolf wrapped her apron more closely round her head and set to work.

Then Mrs. Wolf did what all the Pocket women did, she built a fire and sat before it. When she saw by the old clock that it was time, she put potatoes on to boil, enough to serve warm for dinner and cold for supper. Often sitting thus, she looked up the hill toward the schoolhouse where George was learning, or toward Miss Tinley's house where Miss Tinley moved about doing such strange, interesting and unnecessary things. This morning she did not lift her head. There was presently an unbroken sheet of white between her house and Miss Tinley's.

Wolf and young Wolf came home at noon. From his surliness Wolf volunteered a single remark. This was the twenty-eighth of November—that meant there would be twenty-eight snows during the winter.

"This ain't going to lay," he prophesied. "But the rest'll lay."

Young George looked up suddenly, then down—he had lost interest in grammar. As though he read his son's thoughts, Wolf made one more remark. "She went while the goin' was good."

It was Saturday, and somehow even in Sandoe's Pocket there was a vague conviction that something pleasant should happen on Saturday. Something pleasant always did when Miss Tinley was here. But now Miss Tinley was gone. It was hardly reasonable to suppose that she who had worked so hard in their service would abandon them in this fashion, but they had had experience of other desertions.

At half past nine every candle and dim kerosene light was out and the Pocket lay dark under the gray sky. It was strange that having rested so much and done so little the Pocket should be able to sleep profoundly, but no one waked or turned.

THE first snowflakes drifted down in front of Miss Tinley's windshield before she had gone a mile. The first flake startled Miss Tinley—suppose she should not be able to get back! But that was foolishness, no November snow would block the roads. The woods thickened, the vistas to right and left grew gray; a timid person who meant to be in Sandoe's Pocket that night would have returned at once. But Miss Tinley drove on.

Miss Tinley knew Hagerstown well, even the store where she could buy the sort of monument she wished. She had been in correspondence with the proprietor—naturally one could not buy a monument offhand! Mrs. Gates' was ready, but it was not a shaft twenty feet high; it was no more than three feet high. By the time Miss Tinley had had her lunch and had bought enough peppermint drops to treat all the Pocket, and some simple books for the school library, it was late afternoon.

The monument was not so heavy that it could not be loaded into the back of the car. The proprietor and his assistant packed it in carefully and Miss Tinley started away.

The concrete was clear, but on the macadam there was a coating of snow which grew deeper. The snow still fell and when the macadam gave place to dirt, darkness had fallen. Here again a timid person would have stopped. There were only a half dozen houses in the first five miles; beyond the road would be unbroken and probably hard to find. But Miss Tinley drove on.

At the last house a door opened and a voice shouted an invitation to spend the night, but she did not hear. It was now six o'clock and she had eight miles to go. There was little to distinguish the road from the aisles of the forest. But here was the bridge over the creek she was still right. Beyond were farms. Presently she saw a pile of logs left by woodcutters, then a tall pine—she was still in the right way. After a long time she took her flashlight and looked at her watch. It was seven o'clock and she had come two miles.

In the next two miles she lost the road twice and had to back. It was now eight o'clock. A realization of her foolish hardness came over her with the deepening snow. But it was too late to repent; turning would be impossible and the distance to the nearest house equal to that to the Pocket.

At nine o'clock she passed another pile of cordwood—she was still in the right road; at half past she started to climb the last hill. Her engine throbbed, but the car moved on its way. Her head stood still at the last steep rise; it seemed that she would never reach the top, but finally the engine ceased to labor, the road dipped downward and she was in the Pocket. Turning off the light she looked about. All was dark; neither curiosity about Mrs. Gates' monument nor interest in their teacher's safety could keep the Pocket awake. Miss Tinley sighed.

She drew up before the schoolhouse close to the door, and there she was busied for a long time. She seemed to be dragging something in across a board which she laid from the floor of the car to the step. Having finished, she drove into the little garage, then went into her house. In a few seconds a fire blazed on the hearth; in a few minutes she made herself a cup of tea and ate some bread and butter, then she went to bed. She set her alarm for six o'clock. Clearly she had some unusual Sunday morning work!

(To Be continued)

*This story appeared in the October issue of the Woman's Home Companion, and is reprinted here by special permission of that publication and also of the author.

BOYS and Girls

More About Stamps

Our Boys and Girls:

Only one week has passed since you read the first notice of how this beggarman was begging for stamps to get a book translated into some Oriental language as our especial Christmas present to the bookless children of the Orient; and yet in these seven days the following receipts have come to me:

Willing Workers (class of boys)
Marion, Kan.	$.50
C. of Janesville, Wis.	5.00
Smith, Brooklyn, N. Y.24
J. Erwood, Chicago, Ill.24
Timmerman, Milwaukee, Wis.	1.00
E. S. Carlin, Camden, N. J.	5.00
Friend, Melrose, Mass.50
Friend ("Panama Limited" envelope)04
Memory of a father, for Christmas	25.00
Memory of a mother, for Christmas	25.00

$62.52

It seems to me that for one week's this is doing remarkably well; but hope that next week a great many boys and girls will wake up and send in stamps. My dears, do you realize that it is only because you live in a Christian land that you have books and magazines to read? In lands where Christ is not worshiped the children are bookless; and I can't imagine a finer gift for us to make to the King, for 25 this year, then our own rightful share in the translation of a book for the bookless.

If you honestly and truly can't afford to send even one stamp (just one little red stamp will help a lot, you know), read what Tim and Peggy did last week's story in this column and do likewise." For anybody will give you a stamp, gladly, for a gift; and anybody may even give two stamps, or three, or six, or ten stamps—who knows? So, if you don't do anything, I shall be forced to think because you are one (or all!) of the living list of words: ungrateful! impatient! lazy! forgetful! procrastinating! (in case this is too big a word, here's a longer way of saying it more understandably: "putting it off till the next minute.")

Do you any of the above? Of course

There are some of the things the letters last week said: "Enclosed find fifty cents worth of stamps for your stamp book. The money is from my class box. We wish you success in your grade!" ("Willing Workers" class box: Marion German Baptist Sunday School, Mrs. Draewell, teacher.)

"I have read your request for stamps on the boys and girls page of THE BAPTIST and enclose a book of stamps which we think is a good way to send them. A dear lady has given me the stamps to send, for we think your plan of helping boys and girls to get books in their own language by a shower of stamps is just a fine plan. Hoping it will be a great success, with love, Olive Timmerman, nine years of age."

If Olive, aged nine, can do this lovely deed of interesting a "dear lady," how about some one else aged nine? Or you, Mr. Ten-years-old or Miss Eleven?

"I saw your request for a shower of postage stamps. Although I am seventy-three years old I should like to help in this good work, and shall send a money order for five dollars but should rather not have my name given. I hope many will help you in your new endeavor."

"Enclosed is my check for five dollars.

I know it will do good."

"Every year in December there used to be two dear persons for whom it was the greatest fun to plan surprises; but now that they are never to be here for Christmas again, I want to cover some of the sadness of the lonely day by putting a sudden merry light into the eyes of little unseen children somewhere in the world, who will be overjoyed when they handle for the first time a book which actually speaks their own language! Books have always meant so much in our home. There are memories upon memories of the evenings that used to be when we all sat by the fireside, each reading contentedly. It will be new for some one left so alone to be joined in imagination by that throng of little unseen new readers, loving every single word because it will be the only book they have, dear things!"

Perhaps many of you who read these words also are going to be missing someone for whom you bought books—little books in big type, with jolly pictures, or fat books with deep, wise titles and long, wise words. Here is your chance to heal part of that ache in a beautiful way.

Please Send Stamps:

1. to Miss Margaret T. Applegarth, 14 Arnold Park, Rochester, N. Y.,
2. without attaching them to the paper; each envelope will be opened carefully so that none will be lost.
3. Please give name and address. All acknowledgements will be made on this page from time to time.
4. Read back members of this page for Nov. 13, 20, 27 for suggestions.

"BOOKS are keys to wisdom's treasure,
Books are gates to lands of pleasure,
Books are paths that upward lead,
Books are friends; come let us read!"

In Regard to "Friends on the Shelf"

During children's book week a story appeared here called "Friends on the Shelf," which used the titles of many well-known and a few less known books in the text. A prize was offered for the best list of these books, with their authors. Only two lists, sent by Theodora Louise Hubbard of Cambridge, Mass., and Gwendolyn Erb, Malden, Mass., qualified for a prize, although honorable mention belongs to Mary MacNeill of Omaha, Neb., and to Shirley Corbeau of Detroit, Mich., whose lists were good, but incomplete, both as to titles discovered and authors. The full list is given herewith: 1. David Copperfield—Dickens. 2. Oliver Twist—Dickens. 3. Little Dorrit—Dickens. 4. Little Women—Alcott. 5. Under The Lilacs—Alcott. 6. Hans Brinker and the Silver Skates—Dodge. 7. Robinson Crusoe—Defoe. 8. Gulliver's Travels—Swift. 9. Treasure Island—Stevenson. 10. Arabian Nights—Many ancient authors. 11. Great Expectations—Dickens. 12. Pride and Prejudice—Austen. 13. Autocrat of the Breakfast Table—Holmes. 14. As You Like It—Shakespeare. 15. The Pirate—Scott. 16. The Talisman—Scott. 17. The Bow of Orange Ribbon—Barr. 18. Water Babies—Kingsley. 19. Childe Harold—Byron. 20. Kidnapped—Stevenson. 21. All Sorts and Conditions of Men—Besant. 22. Cloister and the Hearth—Reade. 23. The Spy—Cooper. 24. Last of the Mohicans—Cooper. 25. Bleak House—Dickens. 26. The Black Dwarf—Scott. 27. The Lightning Conductor—Williamson. 28. The Promised Land—Antin. 29. Our Mutual Friend—Dickens. 30. Sense and Sensibility—Austen. 31. Measure for Measure—Shakespeare. 32. Hard Times—Dickens. 33. Helen's Babies—Habberton. 34. Midsummer Night's Dream—Shakespeare. 35. Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush—Ian MacLaren. 36. Days of Auld Lang Syne—Ian MacLaren. 37. Pickwick—Dickens. 38. An Egyptian Princess—Ebers. 39. Seats of the Mighty—Parker. 40. The Princess—Tennyson. 41. Far from the Madding Crowd—Hardy. 42. The Light that Failed—Kipling. 43. When We Were Very Young—Milne. 44. Through the Looking Glass—Carroll. 45. The Marble Faun—Hawthorne. 46. Comedy of Errors—Shakespeare. 47. Friends on the Shelf—Bradford Torrey. 48. All's Well that Ends Well—Shakespeare.

Young People and the Kingdom

CONDUCTED BY EDWIN PHELPS, GENERAL SECRETARY, B. Y. P. U. OF A.

"Meeting Helps" on Devotional Topic for December 19

THE HEART OF CHRISTMAS

(Note: These "helps" are built around the material given in "Young People's Leader" the official magazine "for all Baptist young people." Subscriptions to the "Leader" may be made through the B. Y. P. U. of A. at $1 per year.)

After reading the material as given in Leader, read if possible the first four chapters of "The Children's Master" by Scutt. This is one of the books on the national missionary reading contest list and is written for children, but every one will enjoy reading it. If some member of your church does not have it, you may get it from the Publication Society for $1.25.

Perhaps you are not in a position to send out the suggested "investigating squads." If you cannot, perhaps you can get several of the young people to help you "remember" about last Christmas. Have your own private confab and discuss freely what things in the community helped the Christmas spirit along. For instance, did the school promote the sending out of Christmas cards to people in far-off lands? Did the church sponsor the sending of baskets to the poor? Did the families who had reunions meet in the spirit of Christ and think and pray for others? Did the Sunday-school class decide to do something "Christmasy" for some one? Or was it just the attitude of individuals in the family that helped? Take as many as possible of the institutions, customs and practices of your own community and see how these helped, hindered or "closed" the feeling of good-will at Christmas.

In your meeting, you might gather around the Christmas tree, or a temporary fireplace made of crepe paper, and talk informally about the heart of Christmas. If the leader does not wish to volunteer all the information, those who helped gather the "remembrances" about last year could tell of one or more instances. The meeting might close with the telling of the stories given in "The Children's Master," stressing the fact that although we may not do any more than smile cheerily at some one, we are helping to make the heart of Christmas—Christ—a living, throbbing reality for ourselves and others.

And Still Another

Student conferences—they have been talked about, thought about and written about. And here is another that is not "just another conference." It is to be an assembly drawn from all the colleges of the nation to explore new territory.

The colleges and universities of the United States are asked to send delegates in December (during the holidays) to a national student conference at Milwaukee. It is called after overwhelming pressure from student groups in every part of the country. The leaders are convinced that the time has come to face, not in a fragmentary and sectional but in a thoroughgoing and national way, the futility and impoverishment of our spiritual resources as we face unparalleled world confusion and disharmony. The aim will be to discover the resources of Jesus and the way in which they may be made available in the present student generation. When the question is thoughtfully raised whether civilization as we know it is to endure or perish, it is not surprising that there is a longing for such an opportunity to share whatever God may have given to any of us of insight, vision or conviction.

Those who will go to Milwaukee have tried to solve questions of race, of war, of campus standards and of economic, political or personal adjustment. These attempts have revealed our spiritual impotency to meet adequately our immediate social needs to say nothing of helping a world which holds out its hand to us.

Some are haunted by the question whether we are not really made for defeat; perhaps it is futile to go on. Some, however, have faced the difficulties, finding a new, deeper experience of life. These have dared to inquire into and test the resources of religion. For some the laying hold of the resources that are our heritage as Christians has been easy; for others it has been impossible. Some are perplexed in their attempts because of apparently conflicting experiences and interpretations. It is not easy for many students to believe in the kind of God they once trusted. It is still harder to lay hold of power that is near but for some reason inaccessible. For that reason they are asking those who have found life in Christ to point out the way by which they came to their experience.

December 5 Topic
THE UNIVERSAL SYMPATHY
OF CHRIST

December 12 Topic
SEEING THE OTHER
FELLOW'S SIDE

For a full treatment of these topics,
see Young People's Leader.

The program will be designed, therefore, to reveal relentlessly the contrast between the kind of people we are and the kind of madhouse world we have made for ourselves, and the dream we share with One, the first in his line, "who absolutely trusted the Unseen, had utter confidence that love was at the heart of all things, utter confidence in the absolute power of that absolute love and in the liberty of that love to help him."

The conference will open in December before the official opening. Begin now all student groups are studying a syllabus prepared for special use. What are the criticisms of the campus life in each particular group? What about individual students—what are they doing, and what seems to be the reason for this lack? What things, any, do students do that help them come the people they want to be? What ways have they failed to find satisfaction from such things as meditation, reading, thinking, prayer? Why have they failed? What forces the world are making it hard for men to live up to their best? How far are the social forces the result of the individual's personal conduct? How far are they due to the nature of civilized life? How far due to innate human nature? What were the real causes of your interest or your experience at five years in your life when your mind has turned definitely to religion? What man or person of whom you think a great one and who is regarded as a follower of Christ especially attractive to you? What difficulties are you facing when you try to give religion an essential place in your life? These are a few of the questions which the students are facing. The trying to answer them through investigation and observation. In addition, these student groups are reading many of the books dealing with present-day problems.

And the results of this conference. Watch your papers for the details. Most denominational papers as well as the daily newspapers, will have news about this great gathering. For lasting results: "If 3000 students be found who will dare to think things and act upon what is involved in the contrast between what we are and what Jesus intended us to be, no one can tell what may come of it. One thing seems sure: it will lead us to a new penitence and perhaps to great deeds and adventure. Such experiences have ever been the necessary precursors of enhanced spiritual life and power."

Churches at Work

If your church has developed interesting and effective methods of carrying on its work, we shall be glad to have an opportunity of telling other churches about them through the medium of this page. Material should be addressed to the Board of Missionary Cooperation, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

TAKE A GUIDE BOOK.

Every traveler wants to start around the world without some preliminary knowledge of the route. It is recommended that every prospective passenger booked on the World Tour provide himself with the following:

The Missionary Quiz Book (free).

The Guide Book of the Foreign Mission Society (new edition), twenty-five cents.

World Work in the Orient, twenty-five cents.

Baptist Guide Book of Europe (free).

Altogether, thirty-four different leaflets, including the Book of Remembrance, are recommended for side-trips. A packet of all these leaflets may be obtained for $2.25 from any of the literature bureaus of the Board of Missionary Cooperation. The value of the leaflets included is $2.70. The addresses of the bureaus are: 276 Fifth Ave., New York City; 703 Ford Bldg., Boston, Mass.; 2328 South Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.; 504 Columbia Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

World Tour Developments.

Many states report deep interest in the coming World Tour which is to be held by Northern Baptists during the month of January. Plans are being formulated and the activity shown indicates a large participation. Many good suggestions have been made. One is to have a large world map in the church to trace the route of the World Tour.

A poster contest in the Sunday school would interest the children in the tour. In the midweek meeting, or in a gathering of the church members, they could appear with their luggage and, ready to embark on the airship, discuss the tour. Pastors might devote a Sunday evening in January to a lecture. The Baptist Observer announces that it will supply for thirty-five cents an outline map of the world that is large enough to be hung on the wall in the meeting room and studied by the family each day. It will also supply small maps of the world for two cents.

These might be used by the children who could fill in in color the countries where Baptists are at work. The Board of Missionary Cooperation, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City, will supply the maps or churches desiring wall maps for forty-four inches, for twenty-five cents, and a map of the world in colors, twenty by twenty-eight inches, for thirty-five cents.

Dr. P. H. McDowell, Glens Falls, N. Y., is using the slogan, "A station a day is the January way" on his church calendar. Without doubt other churches will also adopt slogans.

A SUCCESSFUL HOUSE PARTY.

Under the auspices of the Woman's State Society, Pennsylvania, sixty-seven women representing seven associations and twenty-nine churches, attended a house party at Bucknell college, Lewisburg, Pa. The women were welcomed by the Lewisburg hospitality committee and a full program followed. Miss Ina Burton, women's national promotional secretary, presented the denominational program and led discussions on the various phases of women's work. A missionary play, "A Dream with a Mission," and stereopticon views of Bucknell and China were interesting features. The conference was voted a success by all who attended.

MORE ABOUT THE BAPTIST DOLLAR

Dr. F. A. Agar, who recently made the statement that in 1918 the Baptist dollar produced by the members of our churches was divided seventy-seven and a half cents for local church maintenance and twenty-two and a half cents for beneficence and world missions while today eighty-five cents is spent for local church maintenance and fifteen cents for beneficence, explains the situation by saying: "Perhaps 52 percent of our membership attends the services of worship some time during the year, while 48 per cent practically never comes inside the door from one year's end to the other, unless it be for a wedding or a funeral. Also, while 51 per cent gives of record for current expense and local maintenance, only 32 per cent is known to give anything for our denominational enterprises at home and abroad. The per capita giving for current expense and local maintenance is $17.93 per annum, while for missions it is $3.92. After all, a person and his or her money are one and the same. They must both tell the same story of love and life. If there is any discrepancy between the story told by a person's confession and that revealed by his expenditures, the average onlooker usually will pass judgment on the basis of the use made of the money in the individual's life."

ANOTHER EVERY-

MEMBER CANVASS

Trinity church, Omaha, Neb., reports fine results from a thorough every-member canvass. Every member of the church was mailed a letter telling how the next Sunday's service would be conducted and giving an itemized statement of the budget for the year. With this letter were four pledge cards to be signed and presented at the Sunday morning communion service.

The next Sunday the service was unusually impressive and the pledges were turned in. There has been an increase in attendance, a number who had not been present in months taking part. The number of pledges received, both for the support of the church and for missions, has increased.

GOOD REPORTS.

The First church of Stockton, Northern California, has voted unanimously to accept the goal suggested by the committee of the board, and to send in one-twelfth of the suggested amount each month. If the local treasurer does not have on hand a sufficient amount to justify this remittance, the trustees will borrow the money at the local bank and pay interest on the loan in order that the denomination may not be burdened with this extra obligation. Churches following this policy deserve commendation and we should be glad to hear from them.

The First church, Boise, Ida., reports a fine spirit of cooperation after an every-member canvass in which every resident member was visited.

There are three small churches on Cape Cod, Mass., yet last year each one of these churches met its missionary apportionment in full and two of them went beyond their goals.

Lesson Helps

The Gist of the Lesson, Torrey. New York: Revell.

This concise treatment of the international lessons for 1927 is the twenty-eighth vest pocket edition prepared by the author. The static and conservative interpretation which marks everything Doctor Torrey turns out will appeal to those teachers who must have a final word on the lessons. Here is the final word written with a dogmatic assurance which is comforting to all who must have the authority of the infallible and inerrant scriptures.

—JOHN A. EARL.

Among Ourselves

Letter from India

By W. L. FERGUSON

THE place of India in the British commonwealth of free states and the interests of India loom larger year by year. Here is a congeries of nations held together as a great empire with a population of more than 320,000,000, with potentialities vastly greater than many have hitherto supposed. Intrinsically India is not poor. She has great areas of fertile land, vast forests, iron in abundance, salt and coal mines, great seacoasts with valuable fisheries, a limited number of gold mines, hoards of gold melted into jewelry and probably much more hidden in the strong boxes of the wealthy. India's problem is to get this wealth into the open where it may produce for the prosperity of the multitudes. The heavy hand of a dead past is still upon the land and the people; because of this, development and progress move haltingly. I refer to caste customs and their blight upon almost every department of life and activity, for caste is designed to regulate living and acting down to the most minute detail.

Times Are Changing

But times are changing, slowly in some places, more rapidly in others, and reforms are being considered or are taking place. At present there is a royal commission investigating agricultural conditions. Since 85 per cent of the people of India are dependent upon agriculture for the whole or a part of their income, the subject of investigation is important. The head of the commission has taken pains to point out to his colleagues that they are face to face with an aged system of agriculture, indigenous to India, a system which has been built on experience through many centuries, and whose worth has been proved. It is not therefore to be criticized wholesale or lightly. The technical details in agriculture will not occupy the commission as much as the problem of aiding and advancing the well-being of the actual cultivators of the soil. A study of economic factors, such as landlordism, rents, loans, interest, markets, as well as the general organization and conduct of agriculture, is an important phase of the commission's work. It is not purposed to import western methods of cultivation with western farm implements, but to take the Indian cultivator as he is, and by suggesting better methods encourage him to reform his ways and to improve his unsatisfactory economic position. If some method can be devised to keep land owners and agriculturists out of the hands of the sowcars, who are professional money lenders and usurers, and if crops can be protected from the ravages of thieves and wild beasts, to say nothing of neighbor's cattle, great good will come to the tillers of the soil. The obstacles are many and great; but it is hoped that this official investigation will point the way for the removal of some of them.

Mahatma Gandhi has come to the front in a new role. He promised some students that he would spend an hour a week reading to them, and he suggested certain of India's sacred books, expecting them to choose among them. They, however, asked him to read the New Testament to them. He consented. The orthodox Hindus and some Mohammedans have insinuated that this action of Mr. Gandhi indicates that he is a secret disciple of Christ, a Christian at heart; but he replies that no such conclusion is to be drawn; that if he had his own interpretation put on what he reads in the Vedas, the Koran, and the Bible, and was allowed to become what that interpretation would move him to be, he would be a composite of all religions. Mr. Gandhi is devoting himself more and more to social reforms. He has declined to resume the leadership in politics although he has been requested to take up that burden recently. He has had his disillusionment in the political realm, and he now sees that the process of liberating India must be slow, and that India's women must play a prominent part in this liberation. His latest utterance was in regard to the cruelties of child marriage. Two shocking cases, one in Madras and another in Calcutta, where these little ten-year-old brides lost their lives at the hands of their husbands, served to call forth a strong rebuke of the Hindu social system and summons for reform.

In Madras there is an Indian Lac Samajam (society) working for amelioration of the lot of the devad commonly known as dancing girls. There are large numbers of them in the city, and their lot is deplorable. In ancient days, it is said, the devadasis were women devoted to renunciation of marriage and the home and were dedicated to sacred service in the temples; religious music, painting, and other fine arts were their sphere. During the centuries they have fallen from their high position and their name has become connected with dishonor. The Indian Ladies' Samajam has established a rescue home for members of the devadasi class where a living number can be cared for and helped to learn some useful and remunerative employment. Eight young girls, who otherwise might drift into a life of shame, are being cared for and educated by these women. This is one of the new movements among Hindu women and progress will be watched with interest.

The Widow Remarriage Association

A few days ago I saw the report of the Widow Remarriage Association. It is an arresting document, for it shows that remarriage of child widows is becoming popular, especially in northwestern India. Such marriages in the Punjab province have passed the thousand mark, but Hindu orthodoxy is not so much in evidence there as in Madras where there have been but seven remarriages during the year. In education Madras is ahead of many other provinces, but in reform where caste and religion are concerned is far behind. Perhaps that is the reason Madras is commonly called the benighted presidency."

The triennial election hubbub is throughout the country. Numerous candidates are speech-making and vote-basking; billboards flame with appeals to voters to remember such-and-such a candidate and to vote for him. In this respect at least, Madras is not benighted, for the hustle of the candidates is modern and up-to-date as things go in the East.

Mission work proceeds with regularity in spite of the drastic reduction in funds and forces under which we all labor. Missions must be of the Lord; if they were not, they never could survive the treatment they receive, such as misrepresentation among the churches at home and among the peoples abroad by word of their spirit, aims and methods are not understood, and the starvation ration upon which they are often maintained. At present the Methodist Episcopal

Our Book of Books

THE greatest book since human life began,
Divinely written by the mind of man,
A book whereby hope soars above earth's sod—
Our Holy Bible, sacred word of God.

Wherein we read of men and times, long gone,
Of Moses, Joseph, David, Solomon,
And Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul,
Peter, James,
Ruth, Mary, Martha—many famous names.

Our book of books! Immortal and sublime,
Majestic volume in earth's course of time,
An inspiration from the world above,
Extolling virtue, wisdom, worship, love.

A book supreme, a literary gem, Proclaiming Christ, the Babe of Bethlehem.

—CHARLES NEVERS HOLMES,
in Boston Transcript.

church of America (North) has a commission touring India to observe, investigate and report concerning the work of at body's missionaries and institutions in this land. Word also has arrived fromurma of the coming of Dr. George B. Huntington, treasurer of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, who is on a tour of all the fields of the society for the sake of becoming cognizant of the work of the mission treasuries and the business side of the missions. His trip will be devoted largely to the offices of the treasurers and to conferences with the missionaries. May great and lasting good come to him and to us as the result!

Bishopville, Vepery, Madras

Nebraska Notes

By R. R. COON

THE B. Y. P. U. state council met for a two day's retreat at Grand Island, Nov. 6-7. Edwin Phelps of Chicago, general secretary of the national B. Y. P. U., and Ezra Duncan of Omaha, director of religious education for Nebraska, were present. Much of the time was spent discussing the problem of strengthening the work of the society in the state. Young people of Nebraska plan to cooperate with the other forces of the denomination in promoting evangelism. The world tour, the stewardship essay contest and the special Easter offering received attention.

The evangelistic committee of the Grand Island Association met in Grand Island, Nov. 10, with State Secretary Arton in charge. Franklin Day of Chicago was present and laid emphasis on the importance of churches and individual meeting budget requirements. Records show that a large increase is necessary to "balance accounts." Delegates were present from seven churches of the association. This gathering was also preparatory to the evangelistic campaign. The first regular program in the new Grand Island college auditorium-gymnasium took place on Home-coming day in music and a banquet. The college compliment seems to equal that of last year with many freshmen enrolled from the city. It is a misfortune for the ministerial students registered that no Greek was taught at the college this year. Announcement is made that fellowships in the department of Zoology of Northwestern university have been awarded to E. Dickerman, Glen Beal and Joseph W. Dickerman of Grand Island college.

Edwin Phelps, speaking at the Grand Island church, presented practical suggestions in regard to the attitude of older people toward young people and their evangelism.—Evangelist R. Richards aided for W. B. Westover in a revival at Grand Island which resulted in eighteen conversions. Mr. Richards also aided Pastor V. Fry in a two weeks' campaign at Wymore where twelve were received into the church by baptism and two by profession.—Six persons have been baptized at Ansley, R. C. Richmond, pastor.—W. G. Pumphrey closed his pastorate at Wymore, Oct. 3, following a two weeks' meeting.—W. T. Dodd has resigned as pastor at Arthur.—J. J. Bristow, minister for fifty-seven years, died in Lincoln, Oct. 4. He had not been in active service for many years; his last work was with prisoners in the state penitentiary.—Mrs. N. E. Axling, mother of William Axling, missionary to Japan, died recently at Gothenburg.—At a meeting held, Nov. 12, in Calvary church, Omaha, J. W. Brouger and W. H. Bowler gave addresses.—Johnston Myers, pastor emeritus of Immanuel church, Chicago, is arousing interest in the coming Northern Convention to be held in Chicago in May.

Mrs. Isabella Brande

By HERMAN C. RICE

THERE are a host of friends of Mrs. Isabella Brande of Grinnell, Iowa, who will regret to learn of her passing away, Oct. 23, at almost ninety years of age. Mrs. Brande had been a member of the First church for fifty-eight years and had been associated with it from the year of its foundation in 1858. In that year she and her husband, Rev. Thomas Brande, came to Grinnell from Wisconsin. They traveled by railroad to the end of the line, which at that time was Iowa City, and came the rest of the way on a lumber wagon. Mr. Brande supplied the newly organized church for a time and then returned to Wisconsin, returning to the church as its pastor ten years later.

MRS. ISABELLA BRANDE

From that time until her death Mrs. Brande was a veritable mother to the church. The church was her life. Its problems were her problems and its victories, her victories. Whatever success the church has had and whatever contribution it has made to the life of the community and the broader reaches of kingdom service stand as a memorial to her good life.

Indianapolis News Letter

By FREDERIC ARTHUR HAYWARD

INDIANAPOLIS, like other cities in America, has been thrilled by the visit of a queen from overseas. The newspapers made much of the visit and many people felt that it was a matter of historic importance. Even the queen herself seemed to labor under that impression, because in her address (heard over the radio) she suggested that it would please her greatly if the fact of her being in the city were passed down to the children and the children's children. Many city officials and leading citizens arrayed themselves in evening clothes, paid $8 for the privilege of eating in the same room until the midnight hour and considered the evening one of significance. However, some of us have not forgotten that report of Everett Gill on religious conditions in Roumania in which he said: "Though Roumania desires to be considered a modern nation, the government shows evidence of being still a medieval state. Nowhere in all Europe, not even in bolshevik Russia, have our Baptist people suffered such persecutions during the past five years as in Roumania. This unpardonable state of affairs cannot be

The Baptist

Chicago, December 4, 1926

Vol. VII

No. 44

THE BAPTIST is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 2320 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Rates: Single subscription $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries, postage $1.04 extra; in Canada 52 cents.

Change of address: Old and new addresses should be in our hand two weeks before a change goes into effect. Give key number as it appears on label.

Remittances: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment is through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, add exchange.

Renewal notice will be sent previous to date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should send in renewal promptly or, if paper is not desired send discontinuance order.

Advertising: Display: Per agate line, 30 cents; full page, $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituaries: 100 words free; 4 cents per word for additional; resolutions printed verbatim, 4 cents per word; cash to accompany order.

Correspondence should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, 2320 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

No manuscripts returned unless accompanied by full return postage.

Want Ads

For Sale by Judson Press, 1107 McGee St., Kansas City, Mo., "Christmas Joys," a new forty-minute play for children, eighteen to twenty-five characters. Alive, humorous, full of teaching.

Chaplain Frank M. Wells, "The Soldier Evangelist", National Military Home, Leavenworth, Kan. Twenty-fifth season. Time open for fall and winter meetings with pastor wanting Bible evangelist. Terms: Entertainment and $50 up weekly according to financial strength of church.

In Washington, D. C., Edith Kern maintains a delightful "Home Away From Home" for transient guests—individuals or groups. Running water, private baths. Excellent, inexpensive dining rooms near Garage. Quiet, convenient location near Auditorium and White House. Address: 1912 "G" St., Northwest.

Christmas Gift, "Mother", by Bennetts O. Miller, D. D., a 50-page book, beautifully printed and bound. 75,000 already published. Appropriate for old or young. Warmly commended by Dr. S. Parkes Cadman and many Christian leaders. Price 40cts., 3 for $1, dozen $3. Home Publishing Co., Kingston, N. Y.

ascribed to fanaticism and ignorance on the part of the local clergy and police, for the central government has manifested from the first its determination to crush, if possible, the Baptist movement. In the opinion of Baptist leaders of Roumania, only the sympathy and moral support of the Baptist World Alliance has kept the cause from being cruelly and utterly crushed. Unhappily the last chapter of the struggle for religious freedom has not been written. Though the new state of Roumania has had its boundaries enormously enlarged through the sacrifices of the allies and America and notwithstanding that the Roumanian government formally and solemnly promised under its seal and signature to grant full liberty to its minorities in matters of religion, languages and schools, in fact and deed, it has deliberately sought to evade its oath."

In Indianapolis we have a Roumanian Baptist church and the persecution of the past few years is well known to the members. It is only right that Baptist people should understand in the light of the inflated propaganda the facts in the case. Until Roumania shall give people within her borders the right of religious self-expression regardless of their religious thinking, the state should not be extolled or exalted by the people of our land. We think this information should have traveled ahead of the queen so that in each visited city statements of truth and fact could have been issued and Baptist organizations could have expressed their convictions at an opportune time.

Evangelism

A meeting held with the Woodruff Place church at which time Rev. Roy C. Deer of Terre Haute gave the address, is an indication of a series of services of various kinds stimulating the program of soul winning. Rev. Guy C. Black comes to the city soon to begin a house-to-house visitation campaign. The men are warming up to this newer type of evangelism and it is hoped Baptist churches will enter into the plans (released by the Church Federation) with a large degree of enthusiasm. Among the later churches reporting special meetings are Temple church, Rev. W. H. Harris, pastor, after two weeks' meetings reporting twenty-three accessions; Calvary church, Rev. Clarence Wilhelm, pastor, reporting thirteen new members, and Lynnhurst church, Rev. C. H. Scheick, pastor, suggesting that more than thirty will come into the church. These are significant reports like many others constantly coming to our office. We feel that Indianapolis churches have never gotten under way with more enthusiasm and a sense of activity along distinctive spiritual lines is everywhere noticeable.

Churches without Pastors.

In a news letter a few weeks ago we mentioned several church vacancies, and the results have been marvelous. It certainly "pays to advertise." But we feel like the man did in our town who had advertised his house for sale. Within two hours he called the paper saying, "If I had owned twenty other houses I am sure I could have sold them. Please discontinue the ad." Unless we have been mistaken in the generous response from some of the finest men in the ministry, THE BAPTIST is taken in more ministers' homes than we dreamed. The letters coming to this office represent the spirit of our ministry. Sacrifices have been suggested, activity has been stressed and spirituality held high as our goal by the men who would like to come to Indianapolis with the possibility of location. We wish we had twenty other churches that we might welcome to this city many of the men who have written.

Ministers' Meeting.

Monday, Nov. 15, the regular monthly Baptist meeting was held at headquarters. The address of the morning on "New Testament Evangelism" was given by Rev. Harold L. Proppe, pastor at College avenue. Mr. Proppe brought a clear-cut statement of the early church and its attitude toward this important mission. Many strangers were present, including several outstanding evangelists, holding services in the churches. The interest was good. The addresses of last year on missionary achievements and of this year on evangelistic goals have been stimulating.

Notes from Southern California

By HOMER J. VOSBURGH

IN the spring of 1924 Rev. Frederick W. Hatch became pastor of First church, Santa Monica, one of the most attractive beach cities of this region. At that time there was another church, Emanuel, small in numbers, in the finest and most rapidly growing residential part of the city where many members of First church resided. In order to promote denominational efficiency, a large company of members withdrew from First church and, with the members of Emanuel church, formed a new organization in that section of the city and took the name of Trinity church. Mr. Hatch became pastor of this church in the fall of 1924. This organization has had steady growth and bids fair to become one of our leading churches. Mr. Hatch is a minister whose wide reading and intimate contact with the best general and theological literature give richness and breadth to his preaching.

Rev. Thomas B. Frizelle became pastor of Emmanuel church, Long Beach, Sept. 1, 1924.

This was a small church, comparatively young, and was situated in a good type of residential community. It had built a house of worship but of this rested a debt of more than $100,000, a heavy burden. During the past two years this debt has been reduced by about $35,000. The assistance of First church, Long Beach, and of some generous friends in other parts of the state is appreciated. Mr. Frizelle is a industrious, indefatigable and resourceful worker.

Dr. George D. Knights has resigned as pastor of First church, Long Beach and has accepted the position of promotion secretary of Redlands university. Doctor Knights became professor of English literature in Redlands university in 1909 and held that position for three

AN INCOME THAT NEVER FAILS

Gifts by the Annuity plan support world evangelization and assure you an income as long as you live.

When remembering the national societies in your will please use exact corporate names as follows:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M. D., Home Secretary (re annuities); George B. Huntington, Treasurer, (re wills); 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society, Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th Street, New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society, George L. Estabrook, Treasurer, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention, E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, Frank W. Padelord, D.D., Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

Annuities

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these Single and Double Contracts will be sent to you on request.

"Where your heart is, there should your treasure go."

Church Furniture
Pews·Pulpits·Chancel·Furniture
-Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
Catalogues on request.
General Offices—1069 Lytton Bldg.
CHICAGO

"Pews, altars and pulpits from the largest exclusive church furniture factory. Write for catalog and particulars. Manitowoc Church Furniture Company, Waukesha, Wisconsin."

CHURCH FURNITURE
Everything for Church and Sunday School use. From Factory to You. Fine catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co.
1117 South 4th St., Greenville, Illinois

years, although the last two years of that he was also vice-president of the institution. His pastorate at Long Beach began from March, 1912. The church has had continuous growth. When he came membership was 500; now it is 1500. Then it gave $1800 annually for missions; now it gives $30,000. Three colonies have been sent out to form other churches in the city. First church has been turned to these new interests not only hundreds of members but large sums of money. Recently $10,000 was given toward the debt of one church and to the other church $1000 is given annually toward the pastor's salary. In its budget for the current year $10,000 is allotted for work in Long Beach. During some of these years Doctor Knights has been a member of the board of trustees of Redlands and an active worker in its affairs. He will bring to his new position the advantage of intimate and long contact with the work and of wide popularity in the state. Redlands already has become a great institution and the work of Doctor Knights will make it distinctly greater. No man among us is held in higher esteem.

A Word About Swedish Baptists

From an Address at the Scandinavian Baptist Congress in Copenhagen, Denmark.

By J. BYSTRÖM

SWEDISH BAPTISTS are specially indebted to the Baptist brotherhood in America, Germany, Denmark and Holland. Our pioneers, Captain Schröder and F. O. Nilsson, missionary among Swedes, came from America. Many of the excellent ideas which they had acquired in America were transplanted by them in our country during the fourth decade of the last century, and those ideas were fruitful. Then came the liberal support which was granted Baptist mission work in Sweden, at first from the American Baptist Publication Society in Philadelphia and later from the Baptist Missionary Union of Boston.

From Germany our brethren, C. M. Björkman in 1845, and F. O. Nilsson in 1848, were baptized by Rev. J. G. Oncken. Mr. Oncken was the first Baptist preacher in Sweden. The attendance of Rev. J. G. Oncken and Dr. Julius Kobner at the General Conference of Swedish Baptists in 1858 and their valuable contributions to the discussions, had a great influence on the development of the polity and the final standpoint of our denomination in Sweden.

From Denmark P. E. Ryding and A. Forster came in the early days to preach for Christ in our land. The latter was the founder of the first Baptist church in Sweden in 1848. I wish to call attention to two other points. Here in Denmark F. O. Nilsson was granted a first place of refuge when on account of his Baptist faith, he was banished from his native land, Sweden, in 1852 and 1853. And you lent your baptistry for the baptism of Rev. Anders Wiberg when in 1852 he was baptized in the sea on one of the Danish shores.

From England also kindness has been shown to us. Dr. E. Steane and Rev. I. A. Hinton in an effectual way advocated the cause of the persecuted Swedish Baptists during the middle of the last century. The names of these brethren are, like many others, indelibly inscribed in Swedish Baptist history.

The Swedish Baptist church, organized at Borekulla, Halland, in 1848, counted six members. From those six the work has grown so that there are now more than 60,000 Baptists in Sweden. In America there are tens of thousands of Swedish Baptists; there are also thousands in Finland. Today there are about 100,000 Swedish-speaking Baptists.

Progress has been good, but it could have been better had we worked more eagerly for Jesus Christ and labored more zealously for the kingdom of God. As special reasons for our success, we may mention that (1) we early had good, gifted and well educated men as leaders in our denomination—Rev. Anders Wiberg, Dr. A. Drake and Editor Karl Möllersvard, three brothers Palmquist, Rev. Wilhelm Lindblom, Dr. T. Truvé, Prof. C. G. Lagergren and others. (2) Even in the sixties we had a good school for the education of ministers. Bethel seminary was founded in 1866. Col. K. O. Brady was its president for forty years. Its leader is now Dr. C. E. Benander.

Besides Bethel seminary, Örebro mission school has been at work for several years and many young men have been educated there.

From the beginning of our history we have had an extensive Sunday-school work, which in a high degree has contributed to our denominational progress.

Most of our churches have hopeful young people's societies and junior societies which are organized into one Swedish Baptist Young People's Union. In addition, we have the Baptist women's union and a society for social work.

Our Baptist Union is carrying on a considerable foreign mission work through which we strive to share in the evangelization of nations which do not know the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Evangelism in Our Schools

By ALLYN K. FOSTER

IN this year of evangelism which has just begun, a report from the colleges and schools as I have seen them this fall may be of interest. The work of the Board of Education has always been strongly evangelistic. Those who are carrying that work forward in the colleges differ from the ordinary evangelists only in that they often have to interpret knowledge in terms of religion. Students after acquiring new knowledge must learn how to piece this on to the old without loss of any essential value. There are many times, therefore, when those of us who work with students find that we must think their problems through with them, instead of exhorting them.

My first visit was to Wayland academy at Beaver Dam, Wis., a school with a fine intellectual and spiritual atmosphere. I cannot talk in terms of statistics because "drawing the net" is rarely possible, but E. P. Brown, the principal, I

For Foreign Mission Service

There is urgent need for:

AN EDUCATIONALIST:

For superintendent of the Normal School, Rangoon, Burma. He should have special training in education and be familiar with normal school methods. It is desirable that he have the degree of Master of Arts.

A PRINTER:

For the Mission Press, Rangoon, Burma. He must be thoroughly experienced in all branches of the printing business including both technical and commercial aspects. College graduate preferred.

All candidates should be under 30, in vigorous health, married or unmarried, members of Baptist churches and of unimpeachable Christian character.

Correspondence with candidates is considered strictly confidential.

Write to P. H. J. Lerrigo, Candidate Secretary,

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
276 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

LT Russell Conwell's FIELDS of GLORY

Do not know Conwell's "Acres of Diamonds?" "Here is his great sermon, heart-moving, soul-stirring message with a wealth of illustration, and a spiritual fervor seldom found in the printed page."—Christian Index. $1.25

WELL CO., 158 Fifth Ave., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

am sure will agree with me that there was a deep religious spirit during the days of my visit. Several individuals told me of their decision to join the church, and I have no doubt that if I had given an invitation, many would have responded. I felt, however, that with the staff of teachers that Wayland has, there would be little difficulty in bringing these out.

We have a fine group of Baptist students at Ann Arbor, led by Howard R. Chapman. I felt that the 100 or more students that gathered in the Baptist guild meant business for the kingdom this college year.

Perhaps we do not realize how important a college we have at Kalamazoo. Here 400 students are being intensively trained, not only in academic studies, but in the issues and purposes of life. Pres. Allan Hoben's brief statement of the ideals of education printed in his catalog is the finest short statement I have ever seen. Roughly paraphrasing, it means that the purpose of Kalamazoo college is fellowship in learning which issues in service to our age. That is our college evangelism, and it is universal among all our institutions. Here again I could not give an invitation, but I am trusting the statements of the faculty that the feeling was deep.

I spent almost a week at Hebron academy at Hebron, Me., where there are 200 as fine young men as I have ever met. For almost a week I lived among them, and in every address sought to make the Christ life attractive to them. I wish some of our Baptist friends might plan to visit this remarkable school. Its campus and equipment are among the best of the secondary schools. R. L. Hunt, principal, has done a remarkable work of reorganization, and the school is offering first-class competition to the many other schools in this section of the country.

I am closing a visit of some days at Suffield school, founded in 1833, and now at the top of its prosperity. Many Baptist notables got their start in Suffield, and the names of McArthur, Phelps, and others are household words here. There has been a conspicuous figure connected with this school for the past twenty years, well known hereabouts, but not so well known over the country as he ought to be, Rev. Raymond Maplesden. Several trustees told me that had it not been for his efforts at a critical period, there would be no Suffield school. Mr. Maplesden was for fifteen years a missionary in India with a conspicuous record, and has lived most of his life since his return in Connecticut. Where is there a man more worthy to honor than such a man whose service has been so distinguished? If I may judge by the attention I receive in the classroom and in chapel as I bring forward the claims of Christ, there is a sound evangelistic spirit here, too. We must remind ourselves that we cannot measure great realities with the yardstick of statistics, but I believe that there has been a growing interest in religion throughout all the colleges and schools I have visited during the past six years.

Letter from Burma

BY O. HANSON

OVER a century ago Baptists began missionary operations in Burma. If ever providence gave a certain field to a certain church, Burma was given to us. Other fields have been added; the workers have wrought valiantly. We have laid foundations broad and strong. No denomination has had more efficient pioneers. As evangelists, educators, translators, authors, organizers and leaders among backward races no body of Christians holds a higher record than Baptists. At headquarters appeals are coming in constantly for the opening of new work, but little material is available for impressing our constituency with the importance and necessity of continuing and enlarging upon the old. The fact that we have been so successful in some of the world's most strategic centers compels us to continue and to consolidate our gains. Burma has today 269,000 Christians of whom 165,000 are Baptists. A new generation, with hopes, aspirations and ambitions beyond the imagination of even half a century ago, is confronting us.

The Indian empire is the second Baptist country in the world. The Bay of Bengal has sometimes been called the Baptist bay. From the time of Carey Baptists have had a large share in the spiritual and intellectual progress of this mighty empire. We hear of the unrest and the changes that are taking place. We have done our share to inspire the backward, downtrodden millions with new hopes for a brighter future, and we must stand by them that they may realize their dream. If some people at home think of India and Burma as countries now able to take care of themselves, let them ponder the reports that have lately been broadcast all over the world. The recent riots in India show us to what extent we still are needed. There are many thoughtful Indians that see in Christianity the only solution of India's problem. There has been published lately at home and abroad the action taken recently by the government of Burma to put a stop to slavery and human sacrifices on the northern frontier. Our stations like Myitkyin, Bhamo, Namkham and Mong Lem on the China side are in touch with tribes and communities where the sacredness of human life is not yet known.

The future of our work should be more glorious than the past. In many respects it will be different and will make large demands on us. In the days gone by we did the work of the pioneers. We had to blaze the way, break the sod, lay the foundations with little help from the natives. Now we are working with a large indigenous constituency which some may regard as quite able to do the whole work. But this is not the case. We still need workers from home. Much of the work should be, and will be, turned over to the native people, but they are not able to carry the whole burden all at once. In some of the most important departments the guiding hand of the missionary is still needed. The ideal arrangement would be to turn over as much of the old work as possible to the nationals and leave the missionary free to open up unoccupied centers. An intensive policy that concentrates everything within a few stations with the missionary at the head, is not in accordance with the best Baptist tradition. The way of Paul has been our way and it should so continue. When we have established a church in one center we should move on to the next. The most disheartening part in the present situation is that we are not able to enter the doors flung open before us.

American money is still needed. We should regard it a privilege to have a share in the future glory of this world. Here too we are facing important changes in our policy. Many of our indigenous churches seem to have been under the impression that American money is inexhaustible and will forever increase rather than decrease. Now that they are facing the facts of reduced appropriations, they find it a difficult

Baby Chicks For Sale

Barron strain large type purebred White Leghorn baby chicks, $10.50 hundred. Chicks are very strong and stand cool weather better than hot weather.

Everlay strain Brown Leghorns, $11.50 hundred.

Sheppard strain single comb Anconas, $14 hundred.

Owens and Donaldson strain Rhode Island Reds, $14.85 hundred.

Thompsons strain Barred Rocks, $14.85 hundred.

White Rocks, $16 hundred.

All good, healthy, strong purebred guaranteed.

We pay postage charges and guarantee live arrival on all baby chicks.

Pullets of any breed listed, $1.50 each.

Cockerels, good size, $3 each.

Poultry book on feeding and raising chicks and pullets, $3 postpaid.

The Fulghum Hatchery

Freeburg, Ill.

FRESH FLORIDA ORANGES

Fresh Sweet Florida Oranges

$3 per box of 300, large size.

Sound fruit and satisfaction guaranteed or money back. We pay express charges. A box of these makes an appreciated Christmas gift.

ACME FARMS,
Gainesville, Florida

"FOR CHRIST AND THE KINGDOM"

Crowds of Souls

By CLINTON WUNDER

PASTOR BAPTIST TEMPLE, ROCHESTER

"Promotion, advertising, financing, publicity and generally 'running' a three million dollar church is some job. The preacher-manager tells us how he does it."

—Boston Transcript

Introduction by Clarence A. Barbour. $1.50

F. H. REVELL CO., 158 5th Ave., N.Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

blem. The fact is that in many cases have been too slow in educating our churches to take care of themselves. We want to introduce some system placing some limit to appropriations from the church. If we had a uniform rule that would, say fifty years old, should require no more help from home, better results than now obtained would be coming. As it is, the question of a supporting, self-governing and self-sustaining church is left almost entirely to the individual missionary. In theory we all believe in it, but in practice it is evident that we have left it too much with the individual to enforce it or do as he thought best. This should be changed. A time limit should be fixed for each every field, gradually, naturally graduate school of religion, providing revised practical training for the pastor, religious education, college and secondary teaching, missions and social work.

Divinity School of University of Chicago

large faculty and hundreds of electives give special opportunities to those who wish to specialize in any religious vocation.

students may become candidates for degrees of A. M., D. B., and Ph. D.

Students in the Divinity School may take advantage of the affiliated Chicago Theological Seminary.

Faculty of the Divinity School includes:

Journal of Religion American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literature The Institute

correspondence work for academic credit. Divinity School is conducted through the Study Department of the University.

lar Bible study without academic credit annually followed by ten thousand students, is conducted by the American Society of Sacred Literature.

information as to courses, opportunities for remunerative work, scholarships, fellowships, address

SHAILER MATHEWS
Dean of the Divinity School
The University of Chicago
Chicago, Illinois

and automatically becomes self-supporting. The American money thus released should be used for new work in unoccupied territory. We should thus always be moving forward. There would be always the inspiration of new conquest and new territory annexed for our Master and King. We have begun building and we dare not lay down the work half finished. Burma and our other fields must belong wholly to Christ.

A New Translation of the Psalms

By HERBERT W. HINES

IN J. M. Powis Smith's translation of the Psalms, a sane and thoroughgoing scholarship checks up on the King James version of the Psalter and gives us its estimate in such a way as not only to avoid offense, but to beautify, dignify and glorify this marvelous mine of the world's best devotional literature. In a snappy preface of less than three pages the translator states his method of approach, and in four brief articles totaling twenty pages at the close of the book, he furnishes material about the Psalms that any one should know to appreciate them. These four are entitled: "The Date of the Psalter," "The Hymn-book of the Second Temple," "The Poetry of the Psalter," and "The Religion of the Psalter."

Professor Smith has given a title to each psalm, which in most cases is an expressive summary of its contents. He sets the psalms off in their original groupings of five books and indicates those which are acrostic, such as psalms nine and ten, which, by the way, were originally one. The judgment of the translator is supplemented by the work of the printer, and the book is one to delight the heart as well as the eye of all who love to see the permanent in human thinking and feeling enshrined in beautiful form.

The translator has a profound admiration for the classical renderings of the King James version and does not seek to depart from them merely for the sake of variety or novelty. But where they do not express the meaning of the original Hebrew, he translates differently, and in cases where the original text is obviously corrupt, he accepts changes carefully guarded by the rigid canons of textual criticism. Our judgment of his success as a translator will therefore be based on his renderings of some of these passages. A few from the more familiar psalms will suffice for examples. In the first psalm the traditional phrase, "Whatsoever he doeth shall prosper," is rendered, "Whatsoever he does he brings to success." The original Hebrew has a causative form for this verb, and it has the same subject as the "does." Therefore Professor Smith's translation is not only closer to the original, but more picturesque. The same is true in the second psalm where the Hebrew "goim" is rendered "nations" instead of "heathen" as in the authorized version. So in Psalm 100 "All ye lands" becomes

BAPTISTS and all Christendom ARE READING THESE BOOKS

THE PRACTICE OF THE PRINCIPLES OF JESUS

Wm. P. King $1.50
"Would that every one who names the name of Christ might read this book and profit by the truths it so admirably voices."—CHURCH MANAGEMENT, Second Edition.

THE MEANING OF GOD

Harris Franklin Rall $1.50
The editions of this book have had a wide circulation and rare helpfulness to clergy and laity, to students and teachers. Third Edition.

HOME FOLKS

Clovis G. Chappell $1.50
Startingly fresh, frank and helpful, and already in its third edition, this new book of sermons is a lifetime of experience, illustrating and analyzing the forces and elements that enter into making or breaking of the American home. Third Edition.

"The Village Tragedy and Other Sermons," by the same author. $1.50 Third Edition.

PUTTING IT ACROSS

Wm. Herman Leach $1.25
This excellent book on church management by the editor of CHURCH MANAGEMENT will help in the routine and organization work of the Church.

SPIRITUAL ADVENTURING

Bertha Condé $1.00
Aptly titled "Studies in Jesus' Way of Life," this new book by Miss Condé is suitable for either personal or group study and devotions. Fall Publication.

EXPANDING HORIZONS

Cornelius Woelfkin $1.50
This outstanding preacher's latest utterances, The Cole lectures, Vanderbilt University. First Edition, ready Jan. 15.

JESUS OUR IDEAL

W. P. Whaley $1.00
Attractively written and bound, this little volume points to Jesus as the attainable ideal in business and pleasure; in thought, word and deed. Second Edition.

THE CALL TO CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

Julius Earl Crawford $1.25
Here is a book that has lifted this subject out of the realm of controversy and doubt and placing it among the practical Christian programs for individuals and churches. Fourth Edition.

TWO INVALUABLE COMPANION VOLUMES

By WILBUR FISK TILLET PROVIDENCE, PRAYER AND POWER

Studies in the Philosophy, Psychology and Dynamics of the Christian Religion
"It is believed that no book has appeared in recent years wherein these great doctrines have jointly received such full, satisfactory, and helpful treatment as in this latest volume by Dean Tillett."

First Edition $2.50 Octavo

THE PATHS THAT LEAD TO GOD

A New Survey of the Grounds of Theistic and Christian Belief

"Who can say that no serious books on theology are written in our day, when the imprint is still fresh on a book like this? It is a noble and notable volume," says the Christian Century.

Third Edition $2.50 Octavo

Order these books through your own Religious Book Store

COKESBURY PRESS
NASHVILLE TENNESSEE

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Immanuel Bldg., Chicago.

"Tonight we are to have the story of 'The Little Red Hen,' and its twin, 'The Wise Little Pastor.'

"Once there was a little red hen and she found a grain of wheat. She said, 'Who will help me plant this grain of wheat?' The rat said, 'I won't.' The cat said, 'I won't.' And the dog said, 'I won't.' The little red hen said, 'I will then.' And she did.

"When the harvest time came, the little red hen said, 'Who will help me harvest this wheat?' The rat said, 'I won't.' The cat said, 'I won't.' And the dog said, 'I won't.' The little red hen said, 'I will then.' And she did.

"Then the little red hen said, 'Who will help me thresh this wheat?' The rat said, 'I won't.' The cat said, 'I won't.' And the dog said, 'I won't.' 'I will do it myself then,' said the little red hen. And she did.

"When the wheat was threshed, the little red hen said, 'Who will help me grind this wheat into flour?' The rat said, 'I won't.' The cat said, 'I won't.' And the dog said, 'I won't.' 'Then I will do it myself,' said the little red hen. And she did.

"When the flour was ground, the little red hen said, 'Who will help me bake this flour into bread?' The rat said, 'I won't.' The cat said, 'I won't.' And the dog said, 'I won't.' 'Very well then,' said the little red hen, 'I will do it myself.' And she did.

"When the flour was baked into bread, the little red hen asked, 'Who will eat this bread?' The rat said, 'I will.' The cat said, 'I will.' And the dog said, 'I will.' 'No you will not,' said the little red hen, 'for I am going to do that myself.' AND SHE DID.

"Once upon a time there was a wise little pastor and he found the denominational paper called THE BAPTIST. He said, 'Who will help me plant this paper in the homes of our church?' Deacon Do-Nothing said, 'I won't.' Superintendent Go-Slow said, 'I won't.' And Mrs. So-Busy said, 'I won't.' 'Very well then,' said the wise little pastor, 'I will do it myself.' And he did.

"When the list of subscriptions had about expired, the wise little pastor said, 'Who will help me renew these subscriptions?' Deacon Do-Nothing said, 'I won't.' Superintendent Go-Slow said, 'I won't.' And Mrs. So-Busy said, 'I won't.' 'Very well then,' said the wise little pastor, 'I will do it myself.' And he did.

"When many members of the congregation, especially the young people, had become interested in the paper and were ready to use its contents helpfully, the wise little pastor said, 'Who will help me plan some winning programs wherein our youth may give expression to the ideas they have absorbed from its pages?' Deacon Do-Nothing said, 'I won't.' Superintendent Go-Slow said, 'I won't.' And Mrs. So-Busy said, 'I won't.' 'Very well then,' said the wise little pastor, 'I will do it myself.' And he did.

"At last there came a day when this whole congregation having finished its earthly stewardship, was called to its heavenly home. There it was discovered that the members who had read their fellowship journal during their earthly pilgrimage were wise and the rest of them were foolish. The readers of the fellowship paper had a world-wide, kingdom outlook, whereas the others were pitifully provincial. Then the angels inquired, 'Who achieved this heavenly development in these wise ones while down below?' Deacon Do-Nothing said, 'I did.' Superintendent Go-Slow said, 'I did.' And Mrs. So-Busy said, 'I did.' Then the angels answered and said, 'You are deceiving yourselves. The palm goes to the wise little pastor who saw that the field was the world and dared to use those means of creating world vision that were ready to his hand. He saw his task AND DID IT.' And from all those whom the wise little pastor had led to read THE BAPTIST, Missions, good books, and other literature which stimulated the consciousness of international Christian fellowship in sympathy, prayer and service, there arose a grand 'Amen.' FOR HE DID IT.

"WCOY now signs off. Wise or foolish leader? Good night."

"All the earth," in the interest of accurate translation.

In Psalm nineteen we read in the Smith version:

"There is no speech, nor are there words; Their voice is not heard."

This is quite a variation from the authorized version, indeed, the opposite of it, and yet an accurate rendering of the Hebrew text can hardly be other than Professor Smith has offered. The comforting section of the twenty-third psalm, "He restoreth my soul," is translated, "He gives me new life." This is a case where accuracy gives us a jolt, for the Hebrew "nephesh" does not mean "soul" in our sense, but rather "life." Hence Professor Smith does not translate it by "soul," as note the following from Psalms 103 and forty-two:

"Let my whole being bless the Lord."

"As a deer longs for the water-courses, so my whole being longs for thee, O God."

In Psalm 119:18 the authorized version reads:

"Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law."

The Smith version has it about the same, except that it uses for the opening word, "unveil." In the Hebrew the regular word for "open" is not used here, but a word meaning "unroll" or "unfur," of which "unveil" is a felicitous and expressive rendering.

Accuracy and crispness of expression show up as a result of the Smith variations from the King James version compared with the Hebrew text, and these will make this new translation of abiding value.

The Saving Sense

The teacher had asked her class to give a sentence with the word "notwithstanding" in it.

After a reflection, a small boy answered, "Daddy's britches are all glazy at the back; notwithstanding."

—Presbyterian Advance.

"What was the result of the flood?" asked the Sunday-school teacher of her class of boys.

"I guess the principal result was mud," answered literal James.

The story is told of Mr. Gladstone whispering to his wife one morning in church during the delivery of a sermon, "I can't hear what that preacher's saying." "Well, never mind, dear," answered Mrs. Gladstone. "Just go to sleep. It will do you more good."

The minister answered the doorbell.

"Excuse me for interrupting you, sir," said the caller, "but I am collecting for the poor. Do you happen to have any old clothes?"

"Yes," answered the minister.

"Would you be willing to give them to me? I can assure you that they will be put to a worthy use."

"No, I cannot give them to you."

"What do you do with them?"

"Each night I brush them carefully, fold them and hang them over a chair. Each morning I put them on again."

The young man had just proposed and been accepted. He noticed a beautiful smile on the face of his beloved.

"Are you so happy, dear?" he asked.

"I'll say so!" replied the girl.

"Mother's been saying for two years that I'd never have a chance to marry, that I was so silly no man, not even a donkey, would propose to me, and now one has!"

Insurance at Cost

SAVE 10% TO 30%

FIRE

LIGHTNING

TORNADO

WINDSTORM

AUTOMOBILE:

Fire and Theft

Public Liability

Property Damage

Collision

No assessments; easy payments. Same management (over 25 years) as the National Mutual Church Insurance Company. Address

Mutual Insurance Corporation

Henry P. Magill, Manager.

Room 745—53 W. Jackson Blvd. Chicago, Ill.

Here, There and Everywhere

NUMBER 1, VOLUME 1 of the Budget is a snappy eight-pager dated November, 1926," comes from "the home-church," otherwise known as the First Church, Beaumont, Tex.

ARE YOU A CHRISTIAN for service or for sport?" asks the Temple church bulletin in Los Angeles.

UNIVERSAL PEACE" is the goal of the young men's class of the West Hollywood church—peace among nations, among churches, within the church, in the individual heart. Each young man will write to a foreign country (China, England, Germany, India and France) declaring the purpose of the class to work for universal peace through the Prince of Peace, and inquiring what young men in that country are doing to secure this peace. Pastor J. S. Keyser teaches the class.

REPORTS RECEIVED from time to time from the press, field editor of THE BAPTIST, who has waged on behalf of the paper in a personal missionary campaign in California, state a most enjoyable fellowship of work with the Baptist leaders of the SHERWOOD EDDY was the guest of Kalamazoo college, Kalamazoo, Mich., Nov. 8, and spoke on Russia's challenge to the Christian world at the regular morning service of the college. He was inducted to the faculty and students by the eminent Emeritus Herbert Lee Stetson.

CONCORDIA (Kan.) church, a union of American and Swedish churches in the community, W. G. Holmberg, pastor, dedicated its new building, Sept. 26. Ray W. Ark, Kansas City, Mo., was the speaker in the raising of $27,000 in cash pledges, $2000 more than the amount necessary to complete the building. The cost of construction, $47,000, with the cash, gives the church property valued at $50,000. The York evangelistic party reported a seventeen-day revival, closing Nov. 3, resulting in sixty conversions.

JAMES FRANCIS GOODMAN, pastor of First church, Imlay City, Mich., has been elected chairman of the recently formed interdenominational ministers' conference in that city. The conference, covering a district forty miles in diameter, is for the purpose of promoting a finer friendship, a deeper spirituality and a broader outlook.

HECTOR C. LELAND, minister-at-large, is filling a six weeks' engagement with the Hamburg (Iowa) church, but will be available as occasional supply or acting pastor about Dec. 15. His permanent address is DeWitt, Iowa.

FIRST CHURCH, Roodhouse, Ill., closed a two weeks' evangelistic campaign, Nov. 7, conducted by the pastor, G. W. Claxon. Delegations attended from the churches of Manchester and Barrow.

MISS ELIZABETH STUCKER, a senior in Ottawa university and daughter of Rev. and Mrs. E. S. Stucker, won first place for contraltos in the Kansas contest at Kansas City, first in the district contest at Tulsa and third in the national contest at the sesquicentennial at Philadelphia.

S. W. POWELL, pastor of First church, Anderson, Ind., assisted by two members of his church, conducted an evangelistic campaign at the Baptist Temple, Logansport, which resulted in eighty-five conversions.

CONVERSIONS TAKE PLACE weekly at Temple church, Detroit, Mich., Albert G. Johnson, pastor. Attendance at the church prayer meetings is so large they are held in the gymnasium. Home prayer meetings are held each week. The Sunday evening services are evangelistic and are well attended.

EVANGELIST L. D. LAMKIN has closed revival meetings at Harvard Park church, Springfield, Ill., and reports many conversions.

E. BOND GRIFFITH, for ten years pastor at Gilbert Memorial church, Mount Clemens, Mich., reenters the evangelistic field,

Jan. 1. Mr. Griffith spent eight years in evangelistic work before going to Mount Clemens; during his ministry he has held more than 100 evangelistic campaigns in Canada, in ten states and in England. He may be addressed at 15 Ferrin Place, Mount Clemens, Mich.

CONGRESSMAN HOOPER of Battle Creek, Mich., was the principal speaker at the Armistice day services at Kalamazoo college.

FIRST CHURCH, Oakland, Calif., J. Whitcomb Brounger, pastor, received 125 new

Send for this Catalog. It is Free

CATALOG OF Selected Books and Holiday Bulletin

This 136-page illustrated, classified, descriptive catalog contains the very best and most popular among the newer books of all publishers, as well as the older standard favorites. Something will be found in its pages for every age, taste, and need, ranging in price from 10 cents to $10.00.

There are books of Fiction, Poetry, Biography, Humor, Gift Books, Children's Books, Religious Books, Devotional and Inspirational Books, Bibles and Testaments, Holiday Greeting Cards, Calendars, Candy Boxes, Novelties and Christmas Supplies for the Church and Sunday School. Many Christmas Entertainments are listed.

You can do all of your Christmas shopping through the pages of this Catalog. Send for it

The American Baptist
Publication Society

1701-1703 Chestnut Street
Philadelphia

16 Ashburton Place, Boston 313 W. Third St., Los Angeles
125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago 1107 McGee St., Kansas City
439 Burke Building, Seattle

Write to Our Nearest House

gift of gifts—the one that is treasured as a companion for years to come, that becomes dearer as the years pass—the Bible. With the special gift-giving season approaching, we call attention to the Bibles advertised in this issue of THE BAPTIST—Bibles to meet every age and every need—children's illustrated Bibles and New Testaments, pocket Bibles, Home Bibles, special gift Bibles, workers' Bibles, new translations of the Psalms and of the New Testament, the King James' version, the American Standard Bible—if there's a wish expressed for a certain type of Bible—such a Bible is sure to be found in some place among these. We are sure to be able to give so much space to the Bible at this fitting time of the year, that the advertising columns and also the editorial pages in such a rich publication as the one on "God's Library of Bibles."

"Conviction" or "Evidence" Which is Better?

Read that wonderful chapter—Hebrews 11. If you look it up in any version other than the American Standard Bible, substitute in your reading the word "Conviction" for "Evidence" and then the word "Assurance" for "Substance." What a difference! What a wealth of meaning verse 1 has taken on! But just how and why? In our reading and exposition of Scripture we need to be clear on these differences. The House of Thomas Nelson & Sons, publishers of the American Standard Bible, invites you to give your views on these vital changes as given in the American Standard Bible.

Write a Letter—Earn an Award

The publishers want to hear from all the readers of this publication as to how and why this chapter in the American Standard Bible is so much clearer and more accurate than in any other version. The best answers to this question, which should not exceed one hundred words, will be entitled to the following awards:

For best letter $25.00

For ten next best letters (each) $5.00

For three next best letters (each) $10.00

No letter received later than January 31st, 1927, will be considered. The Judges will be the Editor of the Christian Herald, the Editor of the Christian Endeavor World, the Editor of the Record of Christian Work. Whether or not your letter entitles you to an award, every person sending an answer before February 1st, 1927, will be rewarded with a beautifully engraved copy of the great Love Chapter, I Corinthians XIII, on heavy white paper, suitable for framing. There are no other set rules. If you haven't an American Standard Bible or New Testament, you can doubtless borrow one or consult it at any public library or at the office of Thomas Nelson & Sons.

Nelson American Bible
(Edited by American Revision Committee)

NELSON BIBLES

in all sizes, types and styles of binding are obtainable wherever Bibles are sold.

Thomas Nelson & Sons, 381 W. 4th Ave., N. Y.

Kindly send me a FREE copy of your book entitled "The Wonderful Story," telling how the Bible came down through the ages. This does not obligate me in any way.

Name _____

Street No. _____

City _____

members, Sept. 1-Nov. 7. A "G. O." club has been organized with 500 members, each pledged to "get one" during the year. Doctor Brougher left, Nov. 8, to attend the meeting of the executive council of the Northern Convention at Chicago and Baptist meetings as follows: Nov. 10, Portland; Nov. 11, Spokane, Wash.; Nov. 12, Butte, Mont.; Nov. 14, Minneapolis; Nov. 15, Chicago; Nov. 16, Des Moines, Iowa; Nov. 17-18, Chicago (executive committee); Nov. 19, Omaha, Neb.; Nov. 21, Colorado Springs, Colo.; Nov. 22, Denver; Nov. 25, Los Angeles; Nov. 26, San Diego; Nov. 28, at home.

MARION AVENUE CHURCH, Aurora, Ill., Henry Clay Miller, pastor, held open house in the social hall of its nearly completed new building, Nov. 7, in celebration of its silver jubilee. Nearly every department of the church and Sunday school took part in the program. Offerings received amounted to $1015. The church was organized in 1901 by a group of forty-eight men and women under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Walker. Eight of the original charter members were present at the services. The pastor announced that the church, built at a cost of $150,000 for a community place of worship and social center, will never be closed.

FIRST CHURCH, Yakima, Wash., Walter Ingram, pastor, has a program for next year with the objectives: Membership, 1000; organization of the man power of the high-school course to one with a standard four-year college curriculum, which plan to confer its first B.A. degrees, June, 1928.

J. F. POUCHER spoke to 150 persons in attendance at the annual fathers' and sons banquet held, Nov. 15, at Immanuel church, Omaha, Neb., J. W. Esveld, pastor. T. Bruner was toastmaster; John Burke spoke for the sons; Prof. L. G. Kratz led in music.

LLOYD P. BLOODWORTH of Ft. Worth, Tex., has a two weeks' revival meeting beginning

THE UNION AMERICAN AND SWEDISH CHURCH, CONCORDIA, KAN.

We Raise Money

For sixteen years the Ward Systems Company has successfully directed dignified fund-raising campaigns of the higher order. During these years it has raised millions of dollars for Colleges, Churches, Hospitals and Charitable Institutions.

Let Us Solve Your Financial Problems

Our latest Church fund-raising campaign plans have been very successful and economical. Write us stating your requirements. All correspondence treated confidentially. Our latest booklet and confidential analysis blank sent free.

The Ward Systems Co.

28 E. Jackson Blvd., Dept. D.,
Chicago, Ill.

church in special work for men; completing plans for a new Christian education building; gospel team extension work; a week-day Bible study course open to the community.

DR. ELKHANAH HULLEY resigned the presidency of Broadus college, Philippi, W. Va., Nov. 4, resignation to become effective July 31, 1927. During the twenty years that Doctor Hulley has acted as president, the institution, originally located at Clarksburg, was moved to Phillippi, and has grown from a school offering a three-year

Oct. 31, at East Park church, Decatur, John B. Bell, pastor, resulting in 102 admissions. On the last night, Evangelist Bloodworth raised enough money to buy pastor a car. Clinton, Iowa, and the First church, Portland, Ore., follow Decatur. Mr. Bloodworth's schedule.

W. A. STEINKRAUS resigned his pastorate at Logansport, Ind., Nov. 21, and will begin work with First church, Moline, Jan. 1. In his three years' pastorate at Logansport 300 people were received into membership. Forty people received hand of fellowship, Nov. 7, twenty by baptism.

FIRST CHURCH, Monmouth, Ill., R. Theodore Gasaway, pastor, has redecorated building at a cost of $2300. Forty-three members have been received into church since Oct. 1, twenty-seven by baptism.

DR. FRANK PETERSON was the principal speaker at the Armistice day program at Bethel institute, St. Paul, Minn.

THE NEW AUDITORIUM and church parlor of the Federated church (Baptist and Congregational), Grass Lake, Mich., will be ready for occupancy soon. Six young people were baptized Nov. 28. Edgar Enman began his pastorate there, Oct. 1.

N. J. PETERSON begins his third year as pastor of the Fort Bragg, Calif., church. During his pastorate 102 persons have been received into the church; last year Sunday-school attendance reached its highest average.

ROCHESTER, PA., church observed its second annual homecoming, Nov. 7, with 100 persons present. Five adults were received by baptism and 260 joined in the communion service. In the morning W. F. E.

The New Way—

A SAFE, SOUND and SENSIBLE plan of financing enables you to Build, Remove Debts or Carry Out your Endowment Program.

Over $125,000,000 has been raised for religious enterprises by members of our Associated Organizations.

Now is the time to arrange for your 1927 Financial Program.

HEDRICK, MARTS & LUNDY, Inc.

Harriman National Bank Building,
527 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

*Members of the Joint Board of Campaign Counsel
and Planning.*

Write for a copy of "Financing Philanthropy".

Two Translations

The Psalms

By J. M. Powis Smith

They have been newly translated from the Hebrew in a language and style combining accurate scholarship and reverent spirit. They are beautifully bound in rich red and gold.

It is a translation that will be gratefully received by the devout reader and the scholar alike, because both scholarship and fine religious feeling have gone into the making of it.—Journal of Religion.

$3.00, postpaid, $3.15

The New Testament

By EDGAR J. GOODSPEED

Particularly suitable for gifts are the pocket and regular editions bound in either leather or morocco. Their prices range from $3.00 to $4.50. The Popular Edition in cloth is $1.00. Postage is 10 cents extra.

The University of Chicago Press

22 Ellis Avenue Chicago

preached on "The Church of My People," and in the evening on "A Five Dollar Prize Sermon." The speaker participated in an evangelistic visit under the laymen's league. Contributions for both current expenses and benevolences made a new record.

THOMAS G. HULL corrects an erroneous impression in this wise: "When a Doctor of Philosophy philosophizes in a field in which he is not preeminently recognized he is bound to get into trouble. When I read the short article on 'Malnutrition' appearing in the Nov. 20 issue of THE JOURNAL, I, of course, expected to hear from a D.D., in defending their prerogatives as a rank outsider. But now I fear the vicinity of my M.D. friends also. All I merely to inform you that I am not a physician but a bacteriologist with a few attached sometimes to my name.—Sincerely, Thomas G. Hull."

R. COON, who keeps our readers informed of Nebraska matters, writes that in the report of the Nebraska State Convention our issue of Nov. 6, page 1196, the editor has made him say that the address of the University of Chicago Press was "informing, partial and personal," whereas his report complained that Mr. Cress's address as being "informing, personal and impartial."

3 EARLE MURRAY HAND, a recent graduate of Gordon college, was ordained to the ministry by the church at Franklin, Mass., of which he has become pastor.

REV. E. L. LOOMIS, four years pastor of the South Boston church, began his new pastorate at the Maplewood church of Malden, Dec. 1, succeeding Rev. H. C. Abbott, now of the Fifth church, Philadelphia.

REV. A. W. WARREN closes his eight year ministry at the First church, Gloucester, to begin his pastorate with the church at Torrington, Conn. This takes an excellent minister out of one state to enrich another.

DR. C. H. MOSS, long time pastor of the great church at Malden, has been engaged as stated supply of the Winchester church. Dr. Moss is in his vigorous maturity, and will bless that church.

THE RUGGLES STREET CHURCH, Boston, has called Rev. J. T. Rider, Jr., associate pastor at Tremont Temple, and leader of the great Brotherhood there. It is expected that the call will be accepted.

ON THE TUESDAY of "President's Week" at King's Chapel noon service, President C. D. Gray of Bates college, was the preacher.

Obituary

Charles F. Hackett, Sr. died at his home at Parker, S. D., Oct. 20, at the age of seventy-three years. He was a native of Mannington county, N. J. As a young man he worked for four years with the American Baptist Publication Society at Philadelphia. In 1874 he came to Dakota territory and a few years later became editor and publisher of the New Era, which newspaper he edited forty-eight years.

In boyhood Mr. Hackett united with the Woodstown, (N. J.) Baptist church. He took his membership to the Parker Baptist church and was for many years a church deacon and member of the mens' Bible class. In THE BAPTIST of the issue of Nov. 28, 1925, a pre-mortum account was published of Mr. Hackett's long and useful life.

Mrs. Mary French Alger, widow of Rev. Nathan W. Alger, a pastor beloved in Lunenburg, Passumpsic and Bellows Falls, Vt., and East Santa Cruz, Calif., and for two years state convention secretary of Vermont, entered the "land that is fairer than day" from her home in Albuquerque, N. M., Nov. 1, 1926, after a year's illness. Although her home had been in Albuquerque since 1892, she had made long visits in New England, Pasadena, Topeka and Denver. Besides her husband a son who died at four years of age and a daughter, Mrs. Edgar A. Field, had preceded her. The other children are Dr. John L. Alger, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. Susan A. Stubbs, Albuquerque, N. M.; Dr. Edmund J. Alger, Pasadena, Calif.; and Mrs. Bruce Kinney, Denver, Colo. Over eighty-six years filled with faith and hope and love form a long trail of beautiful memories and inspiration to all who knew her.

The SUPREME GIFT

THE gift of an Oxford Bible gives keen joy on Christmas Day and comfort, inspiration and guidance in all the days to come. It is the gift that is appreciated by everyone, young and old. The choice of a Bible with Oxford on the title page assures highest grade of materials and workmanship, accuracy in the text and reasonableness of price.

OXFORD BIBLES ARE BETTER BIBLES

Oxford Children's Bible

Contains 32 full-page illustrations and special helps for children. Clear type. French Morocco binding.

Size 5 3/4 x 3 3/4 inches. No. 03327 - $3.00

Oxford Older Folk's Bible

With extra large type, excellent for older folks or those with impaired eyesight. Durable French Morocco binding.

Size 9 1/4 x 5 3/4 inches. No. 01608 - $5.55

Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible

With 300 pages of teacher's helps. Printed in heavy black-faced type. French Morocco binding.

Size 7 1/4 x 5 inches. No. 04453 - $4.35

Scofield Reference Bible

A welcome gift to any Bible reader. Has helps on the pages where needed. Black-faced type. French Morocco binding.

Size 7 x 4 1/2 inches. No. 53 - $5.50

Oxford Pocket Bible

Clear, black-faced type Bible. Very compact and light. Printed on Oxford India paper. French Morocco binding.

Size 5 1/2 x 3 3/4 x 3/8 inches. No. 0113x $3.50

Oxford Home Bible

An extra large type Bible, with 24 beautiful colored illustrations and Family Register. French Morocco binding.

Size 9 1/4 x 5 3/4 inches. No. 02608 - $6.75

Ask your bookseller for these OXFORD BIBLES by their numbers. If unobtainable, order direct from us

OXFORD BIBLES

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS, AMERICAN BRANCH

35 WEST THIRTY-SECOND STREET

NEW YORK CITY

Folks, Facts and Opinion

(Continued from page 1330)

The building of the new Baptist hospital at Ningpo, East China, toward the completion of which Chinese people have contributed over $50,000, is under way. The hospital will commemorate the service of Dr. J. S. Grant and other Baptist physicians.

At a recent dinner in Boston, Pres. H. C. Herrick of Newton Theological Seminary deprecated the controversy between fundamentalists and modernists in the face of the inroads upon natural religion now being made by scientific and mechanical philosophy. He exhorted upon Christians to unite for the defense of the common faith against materialism.

An event of unusual importance in the annals of the Chicago Baptist ministry conference was the privilege enjoyed by it, Nov. 22, of hearing Prof. A. A. Newman of Mercer university in an address on "The Position of the Baptist Church." With remarkable conciseness and lucidity he developed the subject historically and brought to light a body of thought with which most Baptists are unacquainted. THE BAPTIST will endeavor to publish the near future to discuss the vital significance of his message.

On Oct. 24 P. C. Wright of New York City, his brother, Charles A. Wright, M. D., of Melavan, Wis., returned to Merton, Wis., their birthplace, to conduct a medical service in the Baptist church for their parents and others who had been members of the church during the youth of the Wright brothers. Both united with the church in boyhood. P. C. Wright was ordained there in 1895. The family moved from the place about thirty-five years ago and neither of the sons had returned for years. Friends were present from Milwaukee, West Allis, Wauwatosa, Waukesha, Pewaukee, Madison. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Holland, and the people of the church gave the visitors a most right royal welcome. Former teachers and friends in the public school were greeted.

At the Detroit Council of Churches ought to be heard in its final session concerning the tangle about labor contracts in that city. The executive committee of the council passed October 28, in response to the public, a statement in which the story is briefly retold of the attempt of some business men to prevent representatives of the American Federation of Labor from speaking in some of the churches. The document concludes with the significant paragraph: "We must in the gravest and most serious manner protest against this whole attempt to dominate the pulpits of Detroit by a part of men many of whom are unrepentant professing Christians; . . . insist with the greatest possible emphasis that the existence of a free and independent pulpit is essential to its life and witness, and that any influence which would interfere with the complete independence of the pulpit is of the most pernicious character."

The golden anniversary was the subject of a special celebration at the Baptist Missionary Training school in Chicago, Nov. 15. Miss Jeannette Wright favors THE BAPTIST with a racy account of the occasion. There was a golden anniversary dinner at which gold was the characteristic color from the sweet potatoes on the table to the streamers and the toy balloons used for decorations. Reminiscent addresses from Misses Alice Brimson, Margaret Erbe, Florence Gastman, Eleanor Carman, Florence Carman and Misses Dowell and Spencer, were followed by a suggestion from Miss Brimson that the faculty and students make a special contribution to the golden anniversary fund. The suggestion was carried out hilariously.

A day of prayer has been designated for 10,000 cities and towns in the United States to be observed, Jan. 6, by locals and members of the W. C. T. U. It is designed to be preliminary to a nationwide campaign for the enforcement of prohibition and for the election of a dry president.

The BEST BIBLE in the WORLD for the MONEY

ILLUSTRATED SELF-PRONOUNCING GIFT BIBLE

SUITABLE FOR YOUNG AND OLD

BOUND IN GENUINE FLEXIBLE LEATHER

THE GIFT OF GIFTS

CONTAINING

The KING JAMES or AUTHORIZED VERSION OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS

HAS

SELF-PRONOUNCING TEXT

All the proper words being accented and divided into syllables for quick and easy pronunciation

LARGE BLACK FACE TYPE

SPECIMEN OF TYPE

and of Ar'pad? where are the go Séph-ar-vá'im, Hé'ná, and I have they delivered Sâ-mâ'ri-á mine hand?

35 Who are they among all the of the countries, that have deli

IT ALSO CONTAINS

A NEW SERIES OF HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE

Selected for their general utility

INCLUDING

4500 QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS which unfold the Scriptures. A feature of great value to old and young

31 BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS showing scenes and incidents of Bible History, handsomely printed on enamel paper in phototone ink

12 MAPS OF THE BIBLE LANDS IN COLORS

Printed on superior white paper, size 5½ x 8½ inches. Suitable to carry or for home reading

Bound in GENUINE FLEXI-BLE LEATHER with overlapping covers, red under gold edges, round corners, headband and purple marker. Each Bible packed in handsome box

This Special Bible is bound in DIVINITY CIRCUIT STYLE (overlapping covers). It is so durably and so flexibly BOUND IN GENUINE FRENCH
SEAL LEATHER that it can be rolled without injury to binding or sewing. The Bible has red under gold edges, headband and purple marker. Each Bible is carefully packed in a neat and substantial box.

SPECIAL OFFER

PRICE ONLY $2.95

PREPAID

USE THIS COUPON

THE INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LEAGUE

1010 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Please send, All Charges Prepaid, THE SPE-CIAL GIFT BIBLE which you are offering at a SPECIAL PRICE OF $2.95. I enclose Money Order for the amount.

(This Bible furnished with Patent Thumb Index, 45c extra. Name in gold on cover, 30c extra.)

NAME
ADDRESS

Satisfaction Guaranteed

Money Back for the Asking

B-120

SUPPLIES FOR CHRISTMAS

OFFERING ENVELOPE

An entirely new design, lithographed in Christmas colors, on strong, white paper. Size, $2\frac{1}{2} \times 3\frac{1}{2}$ inches. 40 cents a hundred; \$3.50 a thousand.

Christmas Candy Boxes

Order by Number

No. 36. Christmas Toys. A unique design that will please the children. Christmas toys printed in four colors. Has tape handle. Holds one-half pound. Shipped flat. $1.35 a hundred. Delivery extra.

No. 42. Christmas Helpers. A very beautiful box with orange and white striped background. The balance of the attractive design is printed in red, green, and black. Has tape handle. Holds one-half pound. Shipped flat. $1.35 a hundred. Delivery extra.

GREETING CARDS and FOLDERS

For Pastors, Superintendents and Christian Workers

Beautiful subjects with appropriate religious sentiments. Order by number

Christmas Cards with Envelopes

No. 1234. My Christmas Wish to You. A card showing the interior of a church, with joyful message for Christmas. Size, $3\frac{1}{2} \times 5$ inches. With envelopes. \$2.50 a hundred.

No. 1234

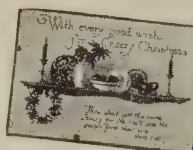

No. 1238

No. 1238. A new card with a most attractive design. The sentiment is appropriate to the season. With envelopes. Size, $3\frac{1}{2} \times 5$ inches. \$2.50 a hundred.

No. 1239. Another new card with appropriate message for Christmas. Size, $3\frac{1}{2} \times 5$ inches. With envelopes. \$2.50 a hundred.

No. 1239

Series 1205

Series 1205. A set of four cards, size $2\frac{1}{4} \times 4$ inches. Gold bordered edge containing Christmas Greetings together with a Bible text that is very appropriate. Packed ten cards assorted with envelopes at 30 cents.

Series 1208

Series 1208. A series of three outdoor winter scenes. Each card containing a beautiful Christmas verse together with Bible text. Size, 3×5 . Price, 40 cents set of ten assorted with envelopes.

Christmas Folders with Envelopes

Series 1218

Series 1218 contains a group of four small folders, size $2\frac{1}{4} \times 3\frac{1}{2}$, for the children. Each folder contains a verse from the Bible together with a very pretty little poem that will be pleasing to every child. Put up in set of ten assorted with envelopes at 30 cents.

Series 1272

Series 1272. A series of four designs of churches decorated with Christmas hollies and greens. This is a set that should appeal to all people connected with Christian work. Size, 3×4 closed. Price, 50 cents set of ten assorted.

CHRISTMAS POSTCARDS

Series 1227

Series 1227. This is composed of a series of four Christmas designs that will appeal to all. $1.25 per hundred.

Christmas Entertainment

Invitation Postcard, No. 1222. An attractive church interior, with Christmas decorations. A card of invitation to the Christmas service or entertainment. $1.25 a hundred.

No. 1222

SEND FOR A COPY OF THE HOLIDAY CATALOG LISTING OUR COMPLETE LINE OF HOLIDAY SUPPLIES AND GIFT BOOKS

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY

1701-1703 CHESTNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA

16 Ashburton Place, BOSTON

313 W. Third Street, LOS ANGELES

439 Burke Building, SEATTLE

125 N. Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO

1107 McGee Street, KANSAS CITY

Order from our nearest house

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the National Baptist Convention

"Pleath, thir, I want thom more!"

Children being cared for in the refugee camps of the Near East Relief.

Folks, Facts and Opinion

From Jan. 1-Nov. 10 the Baptist churches of the western provinces of Canada, as reported in the Western Baptist, gave for the regular benevolences of the denomination as follows: Manitoba, $9878.20; Saskatchewan, $7044; Alberta, $14,204.46; British Columbia, $12,967.20.

A catechism for the special use of inquirers and converts at rescue missions comes from the hand of Twiford E. Hughes, president of the Union City mission, Minneapolis. It is brief, simple, scriptural and serviceable. Something of its kind ought to be useful in the hands of pastors for instructing inquirers and converts. Mr. Hughes is a member of Calvary church, Minneapolis.

Prof. James R. Boise, one of the foremost Greek scholars of his time and author of Greek grammars, had three daughters who shared in their father's culture, traveled with him abroad and were conversant with several European languages. One of them, wife of Dr. Nathan Wood, died several years ago. Another, Mrs. Reuben Bush, is still living. The third, widow of Julius Arthur Johnson, died in Chicago, Nov. 2. Her life was spent in Christian work, first in Morgan Park Baptist church and in later years at Englewood. She belonged to a notable group of Baptist women conspicuous in national Christian leadership.

In pursuance of the recent congress on world friendship held in Pittsburgh, follow-up conferences will be held in seventy cities of the United States. Chicago took occasion of the movement to hold world friendship field days, Nov. 28-29, under the auspices of the commission on world friendship of the Chicago church federation. The team of visiting speakers included Dr. Frederick Lynch and Dr. Henry A. Atkinson; Miss Lucy Gardner, and Messrs. Linley V. Gordon, Harry N. Holmes, Carlton M. Sherwood and Fred B. Smith. Miss Gardner is visiting the United States as a special messenger of the British churches. The Chicago campaign was impressive in its intensity and its magnitude. Large audiences greeted the visitors in the several churches occupied by them on Sunday morning. Orchestra hall had 2000 people Sunday evening. On Monday, assembled Protestant ministers packed the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, scores of ministers standing by the walls. A Monday luncheon filled the red room of the La Salle hotel, and on Monday evening the big auditorium of the First Congregational church was filled with young people interested in the peace movement.

Reports from both the Southern Baptist Convention field and the M. E. church indicate that the financial slump in denominational treasuries has reached its lowest limit and that signs of recovery are apparent.

Brown university has put out a new leaflet packed with just the things one wishes to know about the school. One of its features is a map of the university section of the city of Providence, showing the location of the ground and buildings of the institution.

WILLIAM Axling, whose name graces the leading article this week, is a Nebraska boy who went to Japan as a missionary immediately after completing his college and seminary work. For nearly a quarter of a century he has been the outstanding leader of the Baptist forces in Tokyo, a Christian statesman respected and honored by the Japanese government, a man of penetrating mind and of cosmopolitan sympathy, a powerful preacher of the old gospel and a humble follower of Jesus. The travelogue from his descriptive pen is one of the best ever published in this paper.

Charles T. Holman, who will be recognized as the writer of the interesting Chicago letters which appear in "The Baptist" from time to time, is a Canadian-American, formerly a pastor in Chicago and now connected with the faculty of the divinity school of the University of Chicago. His discriminating message on "Is the Church Indispensable?" is timely in view of the present tendency on the part of many people to regard churches with skeptical indifference.

Philip W. Crannell in the quiet of his home under the shadow of the Rockies in Denver, Colo., and after years of strenuous labor in bringing Kansas Theological seminary to its present laudable development, writes suggestively about ideas and their origin.

The devotional program for the Week of Prayer for the churches, which will be circulated through all English-speaking lands and has been translated for use in more than fifty countries, will be of service to many of our churches.

The British communication from Mr. Spurr of Birmingham, England, is of more than ordinary value.

The leading editorial emphasizes a fact often lost sight of, namely, that the Baptist movement historically considered has come up through regrettable controversy and division bearing a unified testimony to the paramount importance of spiritual freedom, Christian experience and the inestimable worth of the individual.

Rev. F. W. Gracey, Irish Baptist known and loved in the United States writes that the Baptist cause is looking up in Ireland. The union received three new churches at its last meeting and expecting three more. Baptist propaganda in that country is awakening hostility from the Roman Catholic priests.

"It has been charged that business men generally have manifested neither a broad understanding of nor a substantial interest in the agricultural situation," says late "release." But a change is coming. The national industrial conference board and the chamber of commerce of the United States have created a joint business men's commission on agriculture "to make an intensive study" of the whole subject with a view to effecting cooperation in the common interest. Chas. Nagel, former United States secretary of commerce and labor, is chairman.

Legal disabilities imposed upon Baptists in Roumania are stated by I. George W. McDaniel in the Religious Herald as including the following restrictions: Preachers must be Roumanian citizens; their names must be furnished to the local administrative authorities; their services must be only in houses designated for that purpose and announced as such to the local administrative authority; conventions shall be held only with the consent of the minister of internal affairs; preachers shall function only in their local churches; religious services are not permitted after 6 p.m. and attendance of people from other towns is forbidden. And Doctor McDaniel states that Baptists fare better than some other religious minorities in that country.

Sarah E. Owen, one of the pioneers of Mather school, died, Nov. 5. Miss Owen's service dates back to 1898 when she was called to assist Mrs. Rachel Crane Mather at the school for negro girls at Beaufort, S. C. She assisted Mrs. Mather for five years and then became the principal of the school. Her previous experience in a school at Chattanooga, Tenn., where she gained an insight into the way barrels of clothing were turned into institutional buildings, made Mather famous as the "barrel school." One of the first buildings erected from the proceeds of barrel sales was Owen hall. In 1913, Miss Owen's health began to fail although she stayed on at the school until this fall when she came North. Miss Owen was in her eightieth year. She had lived a life of great usefulness and purpose and Christian service. Hundreds will mourn the loss of her inspiration and encouragement.

The Yellow Cab Co., of La Crosse, Wis., advertises free service to all churches for the aged, the sick, the poor, the infirm and for children. One may guess that the company will do a lot of good and lose no money by such a program.

W. C. Bitting, corresponding secretary of the Northern Baptist Convention, with Mrs. Bitting has spent the summer and autumn in Europe. The long stay was occasioned in part by the serious illness of Mrs. Bitting. She has so far improved however as to be able to return to their home in St. Louis, but is not yet able to take up the regular duties of her home.

John A. Ryan, the American leader of the Roman Catholic church in the field of industrial relations, calls attention to the fact that organized labor, having achieved satisfactory wages, hours and conditions of labor, has accepted for itself and for labor in general a condition of benevolent serfdom, has ceased to strive for the ideals of liberty, equality and fraternity, and is in danger of developing "the slave mind."

Rev. R. L. Van Deman of Yankton, S.D., raises a question that may be in the minds of many readers of THE BAPTIST. In the issue of Nov. 27, THE BAPTIST stated on page 1275 that the address of Kirby Page is 147 Madison Ave., New York. Mr. Van Deman wishes to know whether the address is correct. No document at hand supplies the personal address of Mr. Page, but the address of THE World Tomorrow of which he is editor is 52 Vanderbilt Ave., New York.

The Mexican federal government has sent a large force of men touring the United States for the past six months studying the living conditions of their citizens in the U. S. A., to find out what they have gained by their time spent in this country. Do they come back more prosperous? Are their homes equipped with more conveniences? Do they now feel anxious to have their children in school? Do they have a desire to save for the "rainy day"? And do they fall under the influence of the evangelical message?

A notable example of unselfish devotion to the missionary enterprise of the denomination on the part of a church is that of the First Baptist church of Richmond, Va., as narrated editorially in the Western Recorder. For many years the church has been hampered by an inadequate building. Finally it decided to move to a new location and build a house worth perhaps $800,000. But in consideration of the scanty receipts of the treasury, treasuries of the Southern Baptist Convention, the church revised its plans, reduced its building budget to $100,000 and appropriated an extra $350,000 to the benevolence budget of the denomination. This church has been giving twice as much money for denominational purposes as for its local budget. The pastor is George W. McDaniel, president of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Christmas in Your Church ought to be a Day of Great Joy

Make the Sunday before Christmas a time of acceptance by men and women, boys and girls, of Christ as Saviour and Lord.

Let the pastor preach, and let the Sunday School plan for a great decision day.

There is no joy like that of Christ in the heart.

Make Christmas a season of glad evangelism.

Cooperative Committee of Evangelism

Room 1006

23 East 26th Street

New York City

Members of the masonic order in Illinois are forbidden to patronize or encourage in any way lotteries and raffles.

W. P. Throgmorton, editor of the Illinois Baptist, takes pardonable pride in the fact that the paper under his management has attained the age of twenty-one years. To have served as a trusted interpreter, teacher and defender of the faith for so long a time would be an achievement worth grateful celebration. But Mr. Throgmorton's career as a Baptist editor began in 1877. Next year he will have completed fifty years of such service.

Why should not every able-bodied undergraduate student be required to earn a reasonable part of the expenses of an education? At Princeton alone, according to a late report, 335 students earned an average of $562.15 each.

What is fascism? John A. Ryan of the Catholic university of America defines it as the philosophy of the "omnipotent state." The individual exists for the state and not the state for the individual. Fascism proposes to intrust the normal control of the commonwealth to a selected and self-determined elite through the methods of the strong arm. All classes and class organizations must be controlled, disciplined and subordinated by the state. And the state is strictly the national state. Nationalism is a fascist religion. But this philosophy did not produce fascism. The strong arm came first. Now they are trying to find a theory to fit it.

The editor of Baptist Times, London says, "There is one man in our town who always makes me thoroughly uneasy and unhappy. He is a complete and thorough-going atheist. He neither believes in God nor devil, heaven nor hell. He has no use for churches or sacraments, and thinks the Christian religion is a pious myth. But he believes in men, and women, and little children and unwanted babies, and every hour of every day he is devoted to their service and the amelioration of their lot. It is too terrible to thing what his opinion is of the multitudes of professing Christians who seem to live for themselves alone." If this interesting atheist thinks about the matter at all, he knows the difference between Christians and mere partisans of the church, and he thinks of the latter just as Jesus did. There is only one way to think of them.

Index

	Page
FOLKS, FACTS AND OPINION.....	1334
EDITORIAL	1337
THE WORLD IN TRANSIT.....	1339
FROM TOKYO THROUGH LENIN'S LAND, BY WILLIAM AXLING.....	1340
RECOMPENSE, POEM, BY GEORGE KRINGEL	1342
THE OPEN DOOR, POEM, BY GERTRUDE B. WALKER.....	1342
IS THE CHURCH INDISPENSABLE? BY C. T. HOLMAN.....	1343
WHERE DO YOU GET YOUR IDEAS? BY PHILIP WENDELL CRANNELL.....	1344
WEEK OF PRAYER FOR THE CHURCHES	1345
THE AO NAGA JUBILEE, BY MRS. R. B. LONGWELL	1346
THE DEVOTIONAL LIFE—A PRAYER OF THANKSGIVING, BY RABBI LOUIS J. KOPALD.....	1347
CHIMNEY CORNER	1348
BOYS AND GIRLS	1349
YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE KINGDOM	1350
CHURCHES AT WORK	1351
AMONG OURSELVES	1352
NEW BOOKS	1360
NOTES ON THE LESSON.....	1362

AMAZING AIRSHIP FOR BAPTIST CRUISE

Northern Baptists are all astir over an aerial world tour scheduled for January. When the denomination was first invited to circle the globe in an airship and visit all Northern Baptist mission fields en route, the announcement was received by all church members with interest, not unmixed, in some cases, with alarming visions of the perils of navigating the air. However, since it has become known that imagination built and equipped the Baptist aircraft and will propel it around the world, the most cautious of travelers are booking passage.

The airship invented for the occasion has been christened the Evangel. It is of a design unknown to the science of aeronautics and will certainly stagger the engineering profession, for it is described as a dirigible of elastic frame, whose expansive cabins can be made "to reach out and enfold you and your family and friends and the house in which you dwell." In preparation for the cruise everything is done in due form, with booking agents in the churches, a passenger list and an official looking ticket.

That the imaginative appeal is strong with people of all ages is shown by an extraordinary manifestation of interest. It is doubtful if so many Baptists were ever before enrolled for a denominational affair—enrollment being the only condition necessary to be met in order to obtain first-class passage.

The world tour is in fact a novel plan to induce a wider study of Baptist tasks and to do this, not by offering dry facts and statistics, but by letting typical examples of work done under the denomination's co-operative program speak for themselves. This is to be accomplished by the daily reading of the Log of the Evangel, an illustrated publication in form and size like a travel guide. It is a complete departure from former methods of presenting missionary information, as the Log consists of a succession of brief word pictures, throwing into high light striking aspects of Baptist missionary activity, but making no attempt to cover the mission fields in detail.

As an experiment in fixing attention upon church problems in their broader aspect, the Baptist plan will be observed with attention by other denominations. It is not to be denied that there is an attraction to anyone with a spark of imagination, in the thought of planning a world cruise absolutely devoid of material obstacles, with a ship which in its details each passenger contrives for himself, a course that permits of unlimited side trips, company of one's own choosing and all the comforts of home thrown in!

Baptists in Great Britain and the United States are taking concerted steps to bring moral pressure upon the government of Roumania in the interest of religious liberty. Through the agency of the Baptist World Alliance they will seek to represent to the League of Nations that Roumania is violating its covenant with the League by engaging in religious persecution.

Episcopalian Catholicism, as interpreted by the Living Church, involves "absolute repudiation of the whole Protestant idea of the church as simply a voluntary association of believers who have united themselves together for mutual comfort, instruction, worship, and service to the world, but who possess no divinely given and inherent authority to speak for Christ more than any other society, or individual for that matter, may possess. This whole Protestant conception of the church with its priesthood of all believers, and with its ministers possessing no priesthood other than that conferred by the congregations themselves and differing in no wise from laymen except that they have been set apart, is utterly repugnant to the Catholic minded Episcopalian." When some Protestant denomination shall declare that a church of Christ has no more inherent and divinely given authority to speak for Christ than any other society or person has, or shall say that the only Christian priesthood is that conferred by a congregation, then the statement of the Living Church will become interesting. Until that time—"It is a fine day."

Col. John T. Axton, chief of chaplains of the United States army, reports total units of attendance at religious services in the last year as a little more than 1,800,000. The attendance at Sunday services was greater than during the preceding year, but at prayer meetings it was only half as great. During the year the number of services held was 19,864; marriages, 520; baptisms, 947; funerals, 1273.

On the subject of prohibition Canadian Baptist Convention declared itself in favor of "government control of the manufacture of liquor for scientific and medicinal purposes and the prohibition of the sale of liquor for beverage purposes."

Here is a language that despotic governments can understand. The Roumanian government sought in London a loan of thirty million pounds. Its representatives sought the support of Jewish financiers. According to Jewish Telegraph, "it is understood the reply given by these leaders was as long as the anti-Jewish persecutions in Roumania continue, they will be able to assist the Roumanian government in floating a loan in Great Britain. Furthermore, they will oppose such a move. As long as governments exist by the aid of financiers, it is gratifying to find holders of such power using it occasionally in the cause of freedom."

(Continued on page 1362)

The Baptist

EDITOR: JOHN A. EARL
FIELD EDITOR: G. CLIFFORD CRESS

ASSISTANT EDITOR: U. M. McGUIRE
OFFICE EDITOR: JANET T. VAN OSDEL

Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY BY THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION AT 2320 MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Single Subscription, $2.50 a year. Clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries, postage is $1.04; in Canada, 52 cents.

Unity through Struggle

PROF. A. H. NEWMAN, who for a generation has held a position of primacy among church historians, is unwittingly responsible for this editorial. A survey of Baptist history given by him before the Chicago Baptist Ministers' conference with a view to defining the position of the Baptists among religious groups, led to a review of standard books on church history. The address and the books, taken together, supply the inspiration and the material for the present sketch, our purpose being to indicate the lines of continuity by which throughout its history the Baptist movement may be identified. And perhaps no Baptist will object to going back to primitive Christianity for the germ if not for the full norm of the movement.

What then, are the character marks common to all these groups of people whenever and wherever found, through which, if at all, the rise and progress of the Baptist movement can be traced from the beginning of its existence to the present time?

They have no common creed, and most of them have been hostile to creeds. They have no uniform type of church organization, for their churches have varied all the way from the pure congregationalism of many English and American Baptists of the last century to a more or less close connectional system such as those of the Paulists, of the Mennonites and of the General Baptists. They have no uniform body of standard scripture because the movement itself began before the New Testament existed. Centuries before the scripture canon was settled, and the New Testament contains only a portion of the primitive writings produced and accepted as standard by different groups participating in the movement. They have differed greatly in fundamental theology. Many members of the earlier groups were adoptionists, holding that Jesus was the Son of God by adoption at his baptism. There have been keen controversies among them about millennial views. Some have been Socinian, some Antinomian, some Arminian, some Calvinistic and some have run into fanaticism like the Anabaptists of Munster. The practice of baptism has not been uniform. Balthasar Hubmaier and several of his associates, reckoned among the most representative and honored martyrs of Baptist history, practiced pouring for baptism. The Dunkards practice trine immersion. They have differed in regard to the relations of church and state, some of them, such as the Mennonites, refusing to take oaths, to hold public office or to perform military service. In fact, the catalogue of differences and even of internal controversies among Baptists, beginning with the trouble between Paul and James (Acts 15) runs on almost indefinitely. The movement never has attained a complete connectional or co-operative organization among its various groups. It is not properly speaking a denomination, for denominations have been merely phases of its development appearing from time to time. It is more correctly conceived as a movement, a distinct and strong current of religious faith and life flowing across the centuries and determined in its form and course to a large extent by the rough contour of the historical landscape. But if one looks for distinctive marks of identification that appear continuously in all times, forms and places, he will find them in unity of faith in the personal lordship of Jesus, in the universal priesthood of believers and in soul liberty. All Baptists have not understood the full implications of these principles, nor always consistently carried them into practice, but the principles themselves have been fairly continuous in Baptist thinking and the test of final reference in the controversies between Baptists and other Christian groups.

The personal lordship of Christ implies, of course, personal faith in Christ as a personal Saviour and loyalty to his teaching and will. Such faith and loyalty reject all forms of proxy or compulsory religion. As the New Testament writings came into existence and began to acquire a canonical significance, the acceptance of them as the authorized standard record of the life and teaching of Jesus came about naturally as a matter of course. Opposition to infant baptism, a demand for a church composed of real believers, and the recognition of baptism as an expression of personal faith in Jesus and as a pledge of loyalty to him are easy corollaries of the acceptance of the fundamental principle of his personal lordship.

Closely associated with the personal lordship of Christ in both logic and history is that of the priesthood of believers. The access to God into which the believer in Jesus is admitted and the effectual communion with God which he enjoys are of the most intimate and personal kind. No special privilege or official prerogative can bring anybody nearer to God than the simple believer in Jesus may come. God receives and hears nobody more readily or certainly. He answers nobody more richly. The whole range of worship, intercession, testimony and teaching, is open alike to every child of God.

The third item in this trinity of Baptist principles is hardly separable in thought, spirit or practice from the other two. When did any group of Baptists ever advocate the imposition by the state of restraints upon the faith, conscience or religious teaching or association of any person or group? When did Baptists ever fail to stand for the equal right of all of the people, within the limits of common decency and order, to create and maintain their own forms of religious expression? When and where did they ever fail to protest to the extent of their opportunity against religious persecution by the government? There have been occasions in the field of religious fellowship when Baptists were intolerant in the extreme toward what they conceived to be error, and intolerance with regard to heresy has sometimes passed beyond the degree of a courteous disclaimer, and has taken a form of harrying which is little less effective than actual persecution. But in such pursuit, except in the Munster fanaticism, the arm of the state has not been invoked, nor have Baptists ever granted the right of the state to intervene.

A movement so largely characterized by the freedom of the spirit and growing so spontaneously out of a personal faith could not achieve uniformity of either doctrine or organization. Its adherents could not all and at all times understand alike its fundamental principles and their natural implications. And the movement could not be static. Its very spontaneity insures perpetual variety. In different times and places its development will be influenced by its existing environment. But as long as there is the experience of personal faith in Jesus left among men, the Christian consciousness of multitudes will respond to the ideals of the personal lordship of Jesus, of the priesthood of believers and of the freedom of faith.

In fact, a peculiar development in these times is a tendency in all denominations toward the acceptance of these ideals. Once it was difficult to persuade others to accept them, but now others claim them as their own. This is a clear gain. Only because the dissemination of these ideals was prevented by ecclesiastical obstruction in other directions was there a reason for Baptist separatism. Nothing is more congenial to any intelligent Baptist group than to find that the historical and denominational emphasis on the ideals of spiritual religion as expressed in the personal lordship of Christ, the priesthood of all believers and liberty of conscience, has been taken up by other communions so that they are no longer exclusively Baptist. As a matter of fact, these ideals have so deeply and widely permeated the thinking and practice of other Christian bodies that Professor Newman, in answer to a question at the close of his address to the Chicago Baptist ministers' conference, replied characteristically with the keen regard for truth which marks the Christian scholar, that the distinguishing principle of the Baptist denomination today is insistence upon a regenerate church membership. Such a situation raises anew the whole question of denominationalism which may be taken up constructively in future editorials.

An Aerial Tour of the World

WE do not know who originated the idea of a world tour in thirty-one days by way of the Froebel method, but we have a lingering suspicion that it was some creative woman who, having seen the avidity of children absorbing education when the process is made enjoyable by playing the part, conceived the idea of having men and women return to the kindergarten and become children again in order that they might enter into the kingdom of knowledge with regard to the thrilling romance of missions. Airplanes are the latest and quickest means of transportation. Therefore everybody is eager to learn more and more about these miraculous machines which make the magic carpet of Arabian legend artificial and unreal. Playing upon this natural interest, those having charge of imparting missionary information and of creating missionary enthusiasm among the rank and file of the preoccupied thousands of Baptists in the North who know virtually nothing of what is going on in Christendom planned an aerial world tour to be taken by means of a kind of Baedeker, called a "Log."

In connection with the "Log," a ticket for the journey has been printed in regular ticket form with a coupon attached. When the family or the individual is booked for the tour the coupon is detached and filed by the committee in each local church having charge of the tour. The ticket and the coupon are a record of the number of people taking the tour. When the actual journey begins on the first day of January the "Log" is opened at the first page and the paragraph for the day is read aloud by one member of the family in the hearing of all the other members, or it is read in silence by each member of the family or by the individual without family connections. In this way, beginning with Europe and passing across the Mediterranean to Africa and thence to Asia and then across the Pacific to South America and North America, the whole world traversed in the allotted time without discomfort, weariness or accident. Side trips are provided for those who wish to take them, in the form of supplemental material to which reference is made in the "Log."

The "Log" is the official guide for the journey. The supplemental material furnished with the "Log" is equally valuable and interesting. Here is a sample: "1776 there were 10,000 Baptists in the United States, one to every 264 of the population. In 1926 there were 8,327,262, or one to every thirteen of our population. The growth of Baptists in connection with our foreign mission work is even more phenomenal. 'In 1812 we had but two missionaries in the foreign field (Adoniram and Ann Hasseltine Judson); today we have 800.' And converts on the foreign field have grown from none 100 years ago to 258,352 today. Last year alone the number of baptisms reached the high mark of 23,047 on all foreign mission fields. And all this in the face of a slump in giving to missions unprecedented in our history."

Here is an unusual opportunity for every Baptist church to rise out of its township provincialism and to take on world consciousness. If our missionary giving has suffered in the past few years from pernicious anemia due to malnutrition, the regular diet of spiritual vitamins prescribed each week by THE BAPTIST taken regularly, this vitalizing trip around the world taken as a special stimulant, will enrich the blood and lift the patient up to radiant health and happy vigor.

The World in Transit

An interpretation of significant events in the light of Christian ideals

Chicago to Calcutta, a

Twenty-Four Hour Schedule

Commander Richard E. Byrd, the first man to fly across the North Pole, is reported to have said that within forty years, Chicago will be the center of a world system of aviation, and that flights between the United States and India will be made regularly within forty hours. The statement does not even surprise the public. In fact, the public will be surprised if a world tour air service is not established within twenty years. When that time comes the national jealousies that now afflict the world will seem as archaic as the outworn feuds among the old Scottish clans.

Mexico Continues to Embarrass Our Empire

If Mexico would permit citizens of the United States to dictate her land laws, her oil regulations, her attitude toward the Roman Catholic church, her international loans, her army, her navy, and her foreign relations with Japan, China, Russia and Central America, she would be an admirable neighbor. She not only declines to do so, but she is further embarrassing in the fact that she refuses so to act as to give jingoes in the United States some provocative occasion to stir up a demand in this country for intervention. If only she would do some foolish thing the problem would be greatly simplified. Maybe she has done it. The papers say, in the cryptic style appropriate to cases where something is concealed in the woodpile, that Mexico is interfering in Nicaragua, and that her interference is a red menace. She is even said to be selling guns to Nicaraguans to be used by "liberals" against a good, "conservative" president of Nicaragua who is picked, backed and supplied with guns by American business men. Possibly she is doing so. Possibly she has less right than the United States to participate in Nicaragua politics. Possibly this incident can be twisted into an ultimatum. Possibly it will prove to be bunkum.

When Did the Church Become A National Institution?

The Most Rev. F. E. J. Lloyd, D.D., primate of the American Catholic church, Chicago, pleads for an American Catholic church. He proposes his own organization as a candidate for the position, because it has a valid ministry derived in regular succession from St. Peter, "Patriarch of Antioch," it holds the Nicene Creed in exact terms, "the dogmatic decrees of the seven ecumenical councils" as fundamental to unity, and "the seven sacraments." He asks pertinently, "If the Mozarabic church of Spain, the Gallican church of France, the English church of England and the Roman church of Rome, why not the American church?" The question is referred to those whose religion follows national boundaries and seeks political support.

Political Test for Exclusion Is Abandoned

Ever since the war the department of justice of the United States has been afflicted with the "jumps" about political opinions of aliens, especially communists. But recently the case of a young Englishman, excluded by the immigration officials for his communist opinions, was set for a rehearing, and it was decided in his favor. This decision is such a remarkable evidence of a return to sanity in the government that it is worth quoting just as it appeared in the United States Daily. It is this: "Briefly the alien's political belief may be stated as follows: If the right of suffrage be denied a citizen, it is justifiable to overthrow the existing form of government even if violence be necessary. On the other hand, if a citizen has the right to vote, use of violence is not warranted. According to the alien, the purpose of good government is granting an opportunity to every citizen or subject to earn a living. Only when this right is denied does the alien believe in violence and only then if the right of suffrage is also withheld. Alien does not believe in the abolition of all forms of government. As a matter of fact, the communist party disapproves of all forms of government except its own, but nevertheless does believe in organized government. Neither is the alien affiliated with an organization entertaining or teaching disbelief in organized government. Even were he now a member of the communist party he would not be inadmissible on this ground."

Confer, Prohibitionists, Controversy Is Suicide

Whether fortunately or not, the question of purity in elections has been superimposed upon the question of prohibition, and it is embarrassing the cause of prohibition. The difficulty became especially acute in the last senatorial election in Illinois, leading to the withdrawal of support from the candidate of the Anti-Saloon League on the part of nearly 150,000 prohibition voters, and to an irritating controversy between two influential groups of prohibitionists. This controversy has continued with increasing bitterness since the election. It ought to stop. Such a course means defeat for prohibition. Friends of both prohibition and honest elections must unite. And they can do so. At this juncture no man is fit for leadership who is not ready to strive for good understanding, for good-will and for united endeavor among prohibition voters who were divided by issues of the last election. Only the most grievous blundering can permanently divide them on the issue of political honesty. Nothing but division among its friends can overthrow prohibition. But unless prohibition stands for clean politics its friends are bound to divide. Get together, ladies and gentlemen, and talk it over. Bury the past, build for the future.

Is No Man Able to Bridge
This Wide International Gap?

Atheism is the religion of communism in Russia. But according to Kirby Page, speaking at the Chicago forum, Russian communism has a system of ethics, the Golden Rule which is service for the common good. Where did communists get the idea that there is antagonism between devotion to God and devotion to the common good? That question holds a vast quantity of meat, and its exploration requires Christian courage and self-examination. Consider this: American Christianity stands presumably for a God of good-will, of love, of the Golden Rule, of devotion to human welfare, of brotherhood, of a cooperative community life, of the Jesus spirit; but it seems not to be able to understand, nor to be understood by, a people who are trying to build a nation on those virtues without God. Why? Is it conceivable that a people whose principle of ethics is devotion to the common good would reject a religion that breeds that very principle—if they knew it? Has Christianity no living interpreter who can make it intelligible to Russia?

From Tokyo through Lenin's Land

By WILLIAM AXLING

BISHOP UZAKI, chairman of the Japan National Christian Council, having been drafted by the Japanese government for service in connection with the re-drafting of the law governing religious bodies, the writer was called upon to represent that organization at an enlarged meeting of the executive committee of the International Missionary Council which convened at Rattvik, Sweden, July 17-26. Fifteen swift days in a railway coach across the Trans-Siberian Route and one day cruising among the islands of the Baltic completed the journey from Tokyo to Stockholm.

Korea

Korea presents a thought provoking picture. The squatting houses huddled against the hillsides look like turtles seeking shelter from the summer sun and the winter winds. The white robed people working on the hillsides or knee-deep in the mud of the paddy patches appear like priests ministering to the God of the fields. The bleak, bare mountains tell a tale of continuous despoliation without any thought for the future, or any attempt to conserve nature's accumulated work of centuries. A treeless land, in mourning, like its people who have lost their heritage and come under an alien rule. A thirsty land where the rain often falls short of the actual needs, resulting in suffering to the soil and to the sower.

Here are primitive folk who still use the wooden plow and the hand sickle and irrigate their fields by lifting water from lower to higher levels by man power. Here are people in the early morn of their consciousness of the tides of new life that are sweeping across both the eastern and western world, but a people with a genius for religion. The path of pain which they have been compelled to travel has heightened the powers of their soul. In the numbers it has won to the Christian faith and in its simple whole-hearted devotion, the Christian church of Korea has set a pace which has left other mission fields far in the rear; 300,000 Christians and thousands of self-supporting churches in a little less than half a century of work is a record unique in the annals of Christian missions.

Manchuria

Manchuria is a land of far flung fertile plains skirted by rugged mountains. These plains are covered with fields that stretch out as far as the eye can see. Endless acres of waving corn give color and life to the landscape. Is it a dream? Over night has the scene shifted from Asia to America, and is the train rushing through the Middle West of one's childhood or is this really Manchuria? However, the thatched roofed clay houses gathered in clusters here and there tell of a civilization far removed from the place of one's birth.

The steel plow and the cultivator have pioneered across this ancient land and are introducing a new epoch. The oxen, the donkey and the pony have taken the place of man power in the fields. Often an ox and a donkey are yoke fellows at the plow. This does not mean speed but it does mean an epoch-making advance over the man-shoved wooden plow. Herds of cattle are peacefully grazing on the hillsides and pigs are much in evidence.

Was man made to conform? Are our friends of the one-standard-for-all persuasion unconsciously voicing a universal law? Are we flying in the face of fixed inborn traits when we yearn for individual freedom and expression? Or is dead level conformity the sign of a mind that is asleep, the evidence of an individuality that blindly follows the crowd?

THE RESTORED TOKYO TABERNACLE REDECORATED FOR ITS DEDICATION

In Korea it is the turtle shaped houses that prevail. From this there is no departure except in the cities. Across Manchuria it is the thatched roofed, clay walled houses on the farms and the brick structures in the cities but in each case there is a fixed type of architecture. In Korea the picturesque white robe is omnipresent. In Manchuria the conventional Chinese gown has the right of way, the only variation being the coolie's garb which is also of uniform cut and color.

Harbin

Far out on the edge of the world lies Harbin, a city of 500,000 people. Here are White Russians, Red Russians, Chinese, Mongolians, Tartars, Japanese, Koreans, Indians and Europeans, a veritable cross section of the world's population. Poverty and wealth jostle each other at every turn. Beggars leap out at you from every corner and wealth parades the streets day and night. Motor busses, the Russian one horse shay, rikishas, Fords by the thousand and high priced cars crowd the streets with their rush and roar.

Sunday morning at the Russian Greek cathedral was benediction. What reverence, what an atmosphere of worship, what pouring out of the soul in song! Shall I ever forget it? We Protestants know not even the abc of reverence or worship or soul singing. Our service is crude and noisy and lacking in soul.

Two evenings out under the Oriental stars listening to symphony music by Russian artists will never be forgotten. The Russian takes with him the soul of music wherever he roams. What harmonies, what passionate storming to the heights, what tender pathos, what revelations of the soul in all its changing moods!

Mongolia

For long hours after leaving Harbin we swept across the silent stretches of the never ending Mongolian plain. These great level reaches are still untouched by the hand of man. On and on we sped without seeing a sign of the existence of man or beast, wild or tame. These millions of acres of virgin land are said to be held by Mongolian chiefs and lie as they have lain for centuries. A great ernment to give protection from bandits and the brain and the brawn of the pioneer will some day turn this vast area into one of the world's garden spots. A wood burning engine—the tender piled high with firewood—one of the left-overs of a civilization of an older order, pulled our train across these plains.

Siberia

Siberia in July is a dreamland. Great fertile valleys, wooded rolling hills, tree covered mountains, rushing rivers, acres and acres of wild flowers—yellow daisies, towering purple phlox, pink primroses—present a scenic panorama of beauty. Except for a herd of cattle here and there at long intervals, there is little indication of human life. This region also is waiting for the coming of the pioneer. When he comes this will become one of the granaries of the world and furnish food for many millions.

Fabulous mineral wealth is said to be hidden in the mountains of this region. In these millions of undeveloped acres and in these mineral deposits Russia has the possibility of becoming one of the most powerful and wealthy nations of the world. For twelve hours we skirted the shore of Lake Baikal, reputed to be the largest lake in the world. With the exception of a lone fisherman here and there, we saw no sign that man had arrived on the scene. Some day great cities will arise along the shores of this vast expanse of water.

That an express train with diner and sleeping cars should be speeding across these 6000 miles from Manchuria to Moscow on scheduled time is a modern miracle. Especially so when one remembers that during the past ten years this whole area has been the scene of contending forces and constant turmoil. This achievement speaks well for the efficiency of the Soviet regime.

Eight Americans, four Englishmen, four Germans, a group of Japanese students on their way to Europe for sidy, another group of Chinese students enroute to the International Y. M. C. A. Convention in Finland, many Russians and Chinese made the train true to its name—the Trans-Siberian international train. The spirit of friendliness and comradeship was contagious, and the passengers were in truth comrades of the road.

RUSSIAN PEASANTS

Siberia itself has an area almost equal to that of the whole of the United States. Yet its population numbers only 4,500,000 people and these are scattered so thinly over its far flung stretches that you can scarcely find them. For days we traveled through a territory with cultivated fields of rich black soil occasionally darting into view but widely scattered and far apart. This is a truly wonderful country with a wonderful future. What potentiality is stored away in these plains, mountains and valleys! The conviction grew on me that Russia has a future beyond the power of prophetic words to express. If she can develop the vast resources hidden away in these plains and mountains, no nation on earth will be able to match her wealth and material power. We received nothing but courtesy and good-will from the Russian people. The train crew was rough in appearance but kind at heart. Democracy was the big word. The secretary of the Soviet department of railways was on board but he rode in a compartment like the rest of us and received no preferential treatment from the crew. The people who gathered at the stations were a simple and good-hearted folk.

The pioneers of these Siberian plains seem to be having a fierce fight with poverty. They bear on their faces the scars of many a battle, evidently battles in which they lost and hope died. But some day these plains will resound with the song and laughter of a happy and prosperous people. The only new things visible on the landscape are rail fences evidently indicating the redistribution of the land by the Soviet government giving the peasants a right to the soil.

I was told that the Russian people are still a God-fearing folk. In every city, town and village the church and the cathedral of the Greek Russian faith is the most beautiful, the largest and the most conspicuously located building. Now that Russia again has religious liberty the peasants flock to these churches and render a simple heartfelt worship. Superstition, however, is rife and the priests are said to be ignorant.

Poverty is written in glaring letters across every sign of life. One's heart aches at the hopelessness and listlessness written in the faces of the people who flock to the stations. They look at you out of eyes that tell a sad story of generations of fighting a losing fight with poverty and want. The faces of the children reflect the forlorn faces of their fathers. This hopelessness is clearly rooted far back in the past and is not a new development since the revolution.

Russia

When you cross the Ural mountains into Russia proper you are conscious of having passed out of one period of history into another, from the period of the pioneer into one where man has been on the ground for centuries. But little progress has marked these centuries. The far stretching plains have been transformed into fields. Yet it is a civilization of the most primitive kind. The hand sickle, the scythe and the hand rake still hold sway in the fields. The towns are of the most primitive type. The women are bare-footed and brawny. The men are whiskered and work-worn. The young people are unschooled and uncouth. Hut homes, mush mud streets and the coal oil lamp mark the towns.

Soon after entering Russia we reached the city of Yekaterinbourg. On a hill overlooking the city towered the palace where the line of the royal rulers of Russia came to its abrupt and tragic end. One cannot get away from the feeling that something had to happen in Russia. Something deep-going and upheaving enough to introduce a new order. Something that would give the people a new chance and the nation a new start. Things could not go on in the old centuries-long, dead-level, get-no-where way.

Moscow

The change came. It came like a battering ram shattering not only the structure but tearing up the foundations and plowing great gaping furrows through every phase of Russia's national life. Over night Moscow became the paradise of the proletariat. They live in her palaces, ride in her high priced autos and parade her streets with the air and attitude of victors in the first flush of victory.

The cap has ousted the hat, the shirt has shed its collar and the faded suit sets the style. The white collar has been banished from the land. Men and women seem to vie with each other in eschewing everything that smacks of style and in presenting an undressed appearance. Never have I seen such masses of roughly dressed people. A hat, a collar, a tailored suit are so rare that their appearance causes a sensation on the streets of Moscow.

Moscow seems to have four classes of people: Soviet office holders, working folk, street venders, and beggars. It is difficult for a stranger to tell which of these four classes predominates. The streets are packed with people of these types.

There is a restless, turbulent feeling in the atmosphere. The spirit of adventure is in the air. Yet the people are like people anywhere, good, bad and indifferent. During my brief stay I experienced many a courtesy that touched my heart.

The Kremlin, at the center of which is the czar's palace with its 3000 rooms, flies the red flag and is the headquarters of the Soviet regime. It is worth a trip to Moscow just to see this marvelous mass of architecture. Its gilded towers and turrets, its sky-sweeping spires and its fortress-like walls make a picture on the mind which never fades. Into the palace and all these stately structures have moved Russia's proletariat.

Lenin is the great, green god of Moscow. Pictures, busts and statues of him look out at you wherever you go. In a modest wood-built mausoleum he lies embalmed, realistically lifelike and encased in a glass case. Every night from eight to nine o'clock thousands of people march past his mortal remains and pay him homage. I took my place in this long line of people and made the pilgrimage with these worshippers of a dead hero.

Leningrad

Leningrad's glory is in the past. Before the war it had three million people. During the war its population dropped to 600,000. It now stands at about one million. On every hand are signs of decay and decline. Splendid buildings stand empty and dilapidated. The Duma buildings and all government buildings lost their glory when the Soviet moved the capital to Moscow. The thousands of Leningrad's citizens who were connected with the old regime have fled the city and the land.

It is a city of fine streets and magnificent structures. The winter palace, the Issac cathedral, the admiralty and a host of other buildings are without their equal anywhere. I walked up the street on which the people marched in 1905 intent on presenting a petition to the czar. Before they reached the winter palace or had a chance to speak they were answered with the stinging steel of the machine guns. Then came the Cossacks galloping down the beautiful Nevskaya Prospect slaying men, women and children until this magnificent avenue ran with blood. Then and there the revolution was born in the hearts of masses of the Russian people. No ruler could long survive so tragic and colossal a blunder.

Recompense

WE are quite sure
That he will give them back—bright, pure and beautiful.

We know he will but keep
Our own and his until we fall asleep.
We know he does not mean
To break the strands reaching between
The here and there.

He does not mean—though heaven be fair—
To change the spirits entering there, that they forget

The eyes upraised and wet,
The lips too still for prayer,
The mute despair.

He will not take
The spirits which he gave, and make
The glorified so new
That they are lost to me and you.

I do believe
They will receive
Us—you and me—and be so glad
To meet us that when most I would grow sad, I just begin to think about that gladness and the day

When they shall tell us all about the way
That they have learned to go—
Heaven's pathways show,
My lost, my own, and I Shall have so much to see together by and by.

I do believe that just the same sweet face,
But glorified, is waiting in the place
Where we shall meet, if only I

*Am counted worthy in that by and by.
I do believe that God will give a sweet surprise*

To tear-stained saddened eyes
And that his heaven will be
Most glad, most tided with joy for you and me,
As we have suffered most. God never made Spirit for spirit, answering shade for shade.
And placed them side by side—
So wrought in one, though separate, mystified—
And meant to break
The quivering threads between. When we shall wake

I am quite sure, we shall be very glad,
Though for a little while we may be sad.

—GEORGE KRINGEL.

The Open Door

Behold I have set before thee an open door.—Rev. 3:7

WHEN we come to the end of our pilgrimage,
And waiting, we stand at the door;
When the Father bids us lay down the load
We have carried—forevermore—

We shall come sustained by a steadfast faith
Where fear has no power nor place,
If daily we live in his presence here
Walking humbly before his face;

And what men call death we shall find to be
A glad home-coming at night;
In our ears the sound of a welcoming voice,
A door opening up to the Light.
—GERTRUDE B. WALKER in Boston Transcript.

Is the Church Indispensable?

Can a man consistently say, "I revere Abraham Lincoln, but I detest America"?

By C. T. HOLMAN

DR. E. STANLEY JONES, in that striking book, "The Christ of the Indian Road," makes this challenging statement: "The Indian is making an amazing and remarkable discovery, namely, that Christianity and Jesus are not the same—that he may have Jesus without the system that has been built up around him in the West." He tells of a friend who was talking to a Brahman gentleman when the Brahman turned to him and said, "I don't like the Christ of your creeds and the Christ of your churches." Doctor Jones' friend quietly replied, "Then how would you like the Christ of the Indian road?" The Brahman, Doctor Jones tells us, thought for a moment, mentally picturing the Christ of the Indian road—dressed in Sadhu garments, seated by the wayside with the crowd about him, healing blind men who felt their way to him, putting his hands upon the heads of poor, unclean lepers who fell at his feet, announcing the good tidings of the kingdom to sickened folk, staggering with a broken heart up a long hill and dying upon a wayside cross for men, but rising triumphantly and walking on that road again. He suddenly turned to his friend and said, "I could love and follow the Christ of the Indian road!"

Since his return from India where he delivered the famous lectures Dr. C. W. Gilkey has said on more than one occasion that the discovery on the part of India of the difference between Jesus and organized Christianity is nothing less than a discovery of the first magnitude. This distinction between Christ and the church is being made not only in India. It came out clearly at the International Student Conference last winter in Evansville, the report of which has been published under the significant title, "Youth Looks at the Church." It is being made in numerous articles in the religious and secular press—indeed, the current religious press is full of it. Many prominent labor leaders and workers in social enterprises have been quoted as making this distinction. Multitudes of people have lost all faith in the church while their belief in and love for the Master have been deepened and strengthened.

What I want to suggest is, that if we consent to this distinction, if we accept this distinction, acquiesce in it, desire it perhaps, but feel that nothing can be done about it, perhaps give up the church on account of it, the result will be nothing short of disastrous. And I get the impression that that is about the feeling that many people have about it. Such a course would be disastrous because the only way in which we possibly can make progress is to hold fast our gains in suitable institutions. It is a sort of sentimentality to talk about loving and revering Jesus while at the same time we hold aloof from the one institution which tries to discover and do his will, because, in the end, that institution comes short of fully achieving its end. That is the inevitable lot of institutions made up of fallible humans; yet the building of our ideals into institutions is essential to their preservation.

It is as if a man should say, "I revere Abraham Lincoln for the ideals and motives of his life, but I detest America." In fact, a good many people do say something like that. The most patriotic man must recognize that the political state, America, comes far short of expressing the best ideals of its noblest sons. There are many menacings and tendencies. But the good citizen does not say, "It is a failure; I'll leave it alone." He recognizes that the political state is inevitable; certain of our interests must be expressed through such organization. And his task as a loyal American, as one who believes in the ideals of Abraham Lincoln, let us say, is to bring the political state as nearly as possible to embody and express the finest ideals and noblest attitudes of Abraham Lincoln and all others who represent the best in American life.

It is so with the church. The fact is, that if we really care about Christian ideals, we dare not ignore or depart from the church. The organization of our religious interest in an institution, the church, is inevitable and essential—inevitable simply because human life works that way, essential because only in that way can our gains be conserved. It is essential, further, because it is through the institutions, in interaction with which personal life develops, that one gets his attitudes, ideals, and moral standards. If the church, therefore, loses its finest minds and choicest spirits—themselves largely the product of the church—progress toward achieving the ideals of Jesus in social life is disastrously hindered.

What we need in our day is a new emphasis upon the necessity of the church. There is a too general feeling among Protestants that the church does not matter. It matters tremendously. Religion inevitably finds institutional expression. Our task is to keep this inevitable institutionalization of the religious interest—which is the church—expressive of the finest idealism of the religion of Jesus. It will involve a constant appeal for the recognition of new values and loftier ideals; it will require a constant revolt against the rigidities which swiftly develop and tend to hinder progress. Simply to acquiesce in the statement that Jesus and organized Christianity are different, and consequently to turn from the church is futile and will prove disastrous. For, after all, the church has organized and made that Christian idealism which it has found practicable a very part of our social structure; but it has not gone far enough; it has always dragged behind its prophetic spirits. It does so today. No doubt it always will. But our task is to institutionalize in the church the insights of our most prophetic spirits, to say, even as Jesus did, "It hath been said by men of old times . . . But I say unto you!" And such insistence on the part of those who see, if they are willing to pay the price which is involved in standing against the established order in the interest of progressive idealism, will inevitably modify and transform the church itself. The church, in days to come, will not only erect monuments, to the prophets which it may stone today, but it will become more like them in spirit. And unless the ideals and values which these prophetic souls represent are so institutionalized, little permanent good will be accomplished.

After all, the insistence of the Apostle Paul that the church is "the body of Christ" is good social psychology. It recognizes the organic nature of human life and institutions. Without such a body the purposes of the Master never can be accomplished in the world. It is true that that body, like our bodies, is full of wayward, discordant impulses which must be brought into unity and harmony by organization about some great, dominant, worth-while purpose. Our responsibility, then, is not simply to recognize that the church—the body of Christ—fails adequately to express the thoughts, motives, attitudes and purposes of Jesus, but, by our words and deeds, our sacrificial living and service, to bring it nearer to obedience to the mind of the Master so that he may have a real body through which to accomplish his purposes in the world.

Where Do You Get Your Ideas?

Have you ideas or "notions"? Do they come from real sources, or from just anywhere?

BY PHILIP WENDELL CRANNELL

PROBABLY you think that you just had them, they were spontaneously "evolved," as a friend of mine used to say, "out of your own inner consciousness;" or, like Topsy, whether from inner consciousness or not, they "just growed," about which statement there is "more truth than poetry;" or, you may imagine, you yourself really discovered them or originated them. And you say of them, with one of Shakespeare's characters, "A poor thing, but mine own." But that is camouflage; you no more feel that they are poor than the Chinese does when he answers your inquiry about his family: "Your servant's miserable wife and wretched children are enjoying better health than they deserve." But you call them wretched and contemptible, and see how he takes it! You really think these ideas of yours are "the finest ever"; they are so because they are yours; and, being yours, they are so.

Very likely they are not ideas at all. An idea is clear-cut, definite, standing for some fact, principle, truth, which it exactly, "humanly speaking," expresses. These of yours (of course mine are not like that) are just notions, vague conceptions that have no real shape and still less foundation. You could not possibly make a drawing of them, or put them into a real, intelligible sentence. Some of them are still less than that; they are streaks of mist floating over the hills and lowlands of your mind, mere "impressions" without form or substance. But the ideas you have, real ideas, though imperfect and often incorrect—where did you get them, your ideas of right and wrong, of political truth, of social meanings, of history, of religion?

You will be astonished when you trace them to their sources. And yet their source in many cases indicates their real value. To be sure, a statement or "principle" is true or not true in itself, regardless of where it came from. But, on the other hand, if it came from some cloudy source, some incompetent source, some source that clearly had not all the facts before it, or did not have the will and the ability to get their actual meaning, your so-called "idea," like a badly born child, is "queered in the get-away;" you will have to subject it to the acid test before you accept it. Perhaps it is right, for all that, but it must "show cause."

First Contacts

A great many of our ideas were imbibed in the family circle, from father, mother, brothers, sisters, relatives. That is the first, natural, normal source. That is principally why the family was instituted, to pass on the heritage of fact, knowledge, thought, attitude. This is where a friend of mine showed his wisdom. He said: "It was my good pleasure to be born in a Christian family", like the hero of "Pinafore": "For he himself has said it, and 'tis greatly to his credit, that he is an Englishman. For he might have been a Rooshian, or French or Turk or Proosh-an, or perhaps Eye-tal-eye-an. But in spite of all temptation to belong to another nation, he is an Englishman!" Timothy had a fine start: "Knowing of whom thou hast learned them." But even the ideas you got in that best family should be studied, examined, verified by obedience and real experience, till they are yours and you can say, "Now I believe, not because of your word, but because I have seen and do know." Pending that more personal knowledge, the word of a wise, good, loving Christian father or mother makes a "mighty good" "working hypothesis" to proceed on till proved different or proved correct. Fine sources, of course, are the church and the Sunday school, which are really only a larger family. But these, good as they are or ought to be, "get in their work" only a fraction of the time. Their influence must be indefinitely enlarged.

You will find that a still larger part of your alleged ideas come from associates, in store, school, "parlor," street. You are, for the most part, a looking-glass or echoing gallery. I do not need to look around to know who surrounds me. I look at you, listen to you. You are a hash of what is going on. That also is natural; you would not be a human being if it were not. The world could not move forward together were it not for this associative influence. But these sources are usually superficial, ignorant, inept, mostly of your own age, standing and view-point. It is a pity when "flaming youth" with ideas caught from these sources opposes the loving, experienced, matured ideas of the divinely appointed guides, father and mother.

Jumble Results from Some Reading

Many of your ideas come from the books you read. That is by no means a bad thing if the books are right, really authoritative, truly acquainted with their subjects candidly dealing with them. But the majority of people do not read that kind of books, even if they "know them when they see them." The average book reader's ideas of morals, political principles, social ideals and of religion come from the latest novel or story. I must not be understood as specifically condemning or disapproving all the hereinafter mentioned authors; some of them are irreproachable. But nobody should go for first-hand thought on morals, history, politics, economics or religion, say, to Scott, Thackeray, Dickens, George Eliot, Marie Corell, Balzac, Booth Tarkington, Arnold Bennett, H. G. Wells, Mrs. Humphrey Ward, or Joseph Hergesheimer. That is a purposely "curious jumble," but not more curious than the jumble which furnishes the ideas floating through most book readers' minds. The mind, like the diver's hand, is inevitably "subdued to what it works in." Feed a cow on madder and it will have red bones.

In almost none of these cases has the author made a serious study of the subjects he touches, or if so, he has often done it from a biased view-point. Some of them are warped by inveterate prejudice, or wrong early training, or an unfortunate life experience. No man or woman, to be plain, who is divorced for any of the frivolous modern reasons, can give a fair judgment upon Christ's law of divorce, or can possibly understand the sanctity of marriage. Opinions of such people on marriage and divorce are worth precisely as much as those of the prisoner at the bar upon the heinousness of the crime he has committed. But the fascinating style, the ingenious argument, the clever innuendo, the general attractiveness of the novel or story writer insinuate these things into the popular mind and there is a widespread lowering of ideals.

The average modern individual does not read many books. He gets most of his ideas from the stage, the "silver screen" and the magazine or newspaper. The latest heavyweight fistic champion was described in the paper as a "bookworm" immersed in the "best" modern fiction. If that constitutes "bookworminess", how little guilty "the real thing" is the usual reader today! Those who urnish material for the stage and the screen are largely the writers of our fiction, and where they are not, they are assuredly no better equipped to impart authoritative ideas than any of the great subjects of human thought and action. And the newspapers? Indiscriminate condemnation would be as unjust as indiscreet, but it is no secret that reporters are not sociological, political, ethical, or religious experts." As a rule, too, they are looking not for ideas, but for "stories." And as never before in the world's history, especially beginning with the world war, our newspapers have become the instruments of widespread, systematic, ingenious, in some cases, especially in regard to prohibition, utterly conscienceless propaganda. And their editors, mostly "off their beat" in the deeper regions of morals, economics, politics, and religion, are not always the best judges of what is really authoritative in these fields. They seek for what is new and up-to-date, and often introduce into their columns, under the guise of broadmindedness and tolerance, subtle and dangerous attacks at the very foundations.

Where should we get our ideas? From the real sources, from the men who know—ideas of science from real scientists, not from newspaper squibs, or from some high school or even college teachers, ideas of morality from a godly home, ideas of economics from real teachers, ideas of religion from those who know religion best, the men whose life and work have been most effective in the salvation and upbuilding of men. But beyond all human sources of religion, the Bible, interpreted by the Spirit of Truth to the soul that has surrendered to Jesus as Saviour and Lord, is the one unfailing source.

But where do you get your ideas?

Week of Prayer for the Churches

Sunday, January 2, to Saturday, January 8, 1927

TO the Churches of Christ in America:

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America joins with the world's Evangelical Alliance in inviting all churches and followers of Christ to unite in a "Universal Week of Prayer" at the opening of the new year. The devotional program here presented will not only be circulated through all English-speaking lands, but will be translated for use in over fifty countries. He whose right it is to rule desires us to be one in prayer "that the world may know." All things are possible when Christians agree and not before. Never was the need more urgent.

Our age is full of unrest. In spite of all efforts toward peace and good-will the spirit of lawlessness, of international suspicion and of actual warfare seems to be increasing. We need not linger over the details that are only too familiar. Rather would we remember with unspeakable gratitude that the Lord who orders the ages (Heb. 1:2) is on the throne. All glory in heaven and on earth is in his hands. He is aware of all the present events. Through the changing years he himself remains unchanged; and he is able to do exceeding abundantly above all we can think in meeting the needs of his people and the heart-hunger of all mankind. "Jesus Christ is the same . . . today," (Heb. 13:8). As we gather in his name let us remember, concerning prayer, three outstanding facts for our encouragement: I. It is God's will; II. Christ has set us the example; III. Christ promises his presence.

During the week of prayer from Sunday, January 2, to Saturday, Jan. 8, let us all unite our brethren in many lands to demonstrate afresh the release of God's power as we pray with one accord in the name and of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Faithfully and fraternally yours,
WILLIAM HORACE DAY, chairman,
CHARLES L. GOODELL, executive secretary
Mission on evangelism and life service.

Sunday, January 2, 1927
SUGGESTED FOR SERMONS AND ADDRESSES

have considered the days of old the years of ancient times . . . I will remember the years of the right hand of the most High" (Psalm 77:5, 10).

"A glorious throne, set on high from the beginning, is the place of our sanctuary" (Jer. 17:12).

"The fear of the Lord is thy treasure" (Isa. 33:6).

"Be of good cheer" (Matt. 9:2, 14:27, Acts 23:11).

"Behold I have set before Thee an open door, and no man can shut it" (Rev. 3:8).

Monday, January 3, 1927

THANKSGIVING AND HUMILIATION

"Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving. Let us kneel before the Lord our Maker." (Psalm 95:2, 6.)

Thanksgiving:

For the goodness and mercy of the past year, for the long suffering of God toward us; that now is our salvation nearer than when we first believed; that despite our past failures and unfaithfulness God still sets before us an open door for service.

Confession:

Our unbelief, our half-hearted service, our secret sins, our sins remembered and forgotten, our love of ease, our neglect of prayer and of the Word of God.

Prayer and Rededication:

"Wilt thou not revive us again that thy people may rejoice in thee?" (Psalm 85:6.)

Scripture Readings:

Psalm 95. Psalm 103. Acts 1:1-8. Gal. 5:16-26.

Tuesday, January 4, 1927

THE UNIVERSAL CHURCH—"THE CHURCH OF GOD, WHICH HE HATH PURCHASED WITH HIS OWN BLOOD" (Acts 20:28)

Thanksgiving:

For Christ's love to his church and for the gracious purposes for which he called it into being, for the quickened desire after unity among the members of his body, for the increase of brotherhood and for an awakened social conscience among believers.

Confession:

Our need of greater personal holiness that Christ may be magnified in our bodies, our lack of love for souls, our unreadiness to serve and to bear witness, our unworthy timidity and pride.

Prayer:

For all ministers, preachers, church workers and members, for all who are discouraged and joyless in their work, for lapsed members that they may be restored, for a fresh renewal by the Holy Ghost. "Restore unto us the joy of thy salvation."

Scripture Readings:

Psalm 133. John 3:25-36. 2 Cor. 5:14-21. Eph. 2:13-22. Rev. 1:10-20.

Wednesday, January 5, 1927

NATIONS AND GOVERNMENTS—"HE MADE OF ONE EVERY NATION . . . THAT THEY SHOULD SEEK GOD" (Acts 17:26-27)

Let us in a few moments of silence seek definitely to realize the presence of the Lord Jesus who makes us one in him with our brethren of every nation.

Let us give Thanks:

For all efforts to promote better understanding and more kindly relationships between nations, for a quickened sense of international brotherhood, for that measure of success which the League of Nations has met with in promoting peace and good-will.

Let us Pray:

For peace in our time, national, international and industrial; that the nations may be delivered from materialism and defective moral standards by their recognition of Christ and his teaching; that rulers and governments may submit themselves to the guidance of God as they seek to discharge their great tasks and responsibilities; that the present spirit of lawlessness may be restrained and replaced by the heavenly wisdom which is pure and peaceable; that the evils of impurity, intemperance and gambling may be overcome through the preaching of the gospel; that especially in lands long privileged with the knowledge of Christ the Lord's day may be rightly regarded and observed.

Scripture Readings:

Deut. 6:1-15. Psalm 87. 1 Tim. 2:1-6. Rev. 7:9-17.

Thursday, January 6, 1927

MISSIONS—"ALL THE WORLD . . . EVERY CREATURE" (Mark. 16:15)

Thanksgiving:

That there are no frontiers in the Redeemer's kingdom, no "home" and "foreign" fields, for "the field is the world"; that God so loved the world that he gave his only Son to save it, and calls upon his church to bear witness to Jesus and his great salvation; for the response to that call made by the church during the past year, for all devoted missionary service, and for the blessing with which God has sealed it.

Prayer:

That the gospel may be fully preached to the ends of the earth; that the Lord of the harvest will send forth more laborers into the ripened fields; that the church may ever keep in mind that its first duty is to evangelize the world; that native converts may be faithful witnesses to their unevangelized neighbors; for the work of all Bible societies, for missionaries in special difficulty at this time of unrest in China and elsewhere.

Scripture Readings:

Psalm 145. Isaiah 60. Matt. 8:5-13. Acts 10:34-48. Rev. 21:1-4 and Rev. 21:22-22:5.

Friday, January 7, 1927

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE—"THE PROMISE IS UNTO YOU AND TO YOUR CHILDREN" (Acts 2:39)

Thanksgiving:

For the faithful work of Sunday-school teachers, Bible class leaders and Christian workers in all young people's organizations, for all young lives which have been yielded to the Saviour during the past year, for the work of all agencies that promote the habit of daily Bible reading among the young.

Prayer:

For parents, that they may realize their opportunities and responsibilities in training their children for God, for all who influence the young people of our land, teachers, professors, writers, for a blessing upon our homes, and for an increase in the habit of family worship, for all Christian work and witness in schools, colleges and universities.

Scripture Readings:

Psalm 119:1-16. Matt. 19:13-22. John 14:46-54. 2 Tim. 3:10-17.

Saturday, January 8, 1927

THE HOME BASE

Let us give Thanks:

For the ever-growing realization that Jesus Christ is the moral judge of the world, and that nothing is right which he would disapprove, for the response of men and the leadership of the church in all appeals for help for human need, for the work of the church in all its agencies to establish Christianity as the supreme power in the life of the nations.

Let us Confess:

Our want of brotherly love and of inter-racial and industrial good-will, our prejudice against other races and our negligence in seeking to win them to Christ.

Let us Pray:

That the church at home may be so pure in faith, so rich in benevolence, so faithful in duty that none of its enterprises at home or abroad may suffer for want of men or support; that all races may realize that the solution of the race problem is in Christ; that Christians may be delivered from the love of rapidly growing wealth into a love like that of Jesus; that the Bible, the Lord's day and the sacraments, the gracious wealth of Christian worship, may be loved and preserved.

Scripture Readings:

Rom. 10; Psalm 94; 1 Cor. 16:1-9; 2 Cor. 9.

The Ao Naga Jubilee

BY MRS. R. B. LONGWELL

THE completion of fifty years since W. W. Clark came into the Naga hills of Assam was celebrated by the Christian Nagas at the mission station of Impur, Apr. 1-4, 1926. The open space in front of the school building was used to erect a tabernacle which accommodated 3000. The fifty-three village churches sent 2073 representatives.

The jubilee chapter in Leviticus had been translated for the occasion and was read at the first meeting by Rongsennuken of the second generation of Christians and a high school graduate from the village of Molung, the first Christian Naga village, fifty years old next October. Rev. R. B. Longwell gave an explanation of the Israelite jubilee. A special jubilee hymn was the contribution of the entire Impur school.

On the next day the morning program was largely reminiscent. Five years before Doctor Clark went into the hills he found an Assamese Christian, named Godula, who was willing to go ahead and make friends with these wild, head-hunting men. The first Naga convert, Subungmeren, was baptized with three others in Sibsagor fifty-three years ago. A short time later there were eight more baptisms. Mar. 2, 1876, Doctor Clark and his "one Assamese servant boy" arrived in the village where Subungmeren and his Christian brethren lived. Fourteen years were spent in the Naga hills that first term. Besides much touring among the villages, the language was mastered and written, a dictionary made, and a primer, a catechism, a "Life of Joseph," a hymn book and the Gospels of Matthew and John carried through the press. At the close of these reminiscences Samar, one of Doctor Clark's best preachers and a pastor for over thirty years, in a prayer said, "We have risen from the state of wild beasts to that of human beings who worship and praise their Maker." Mr. Subungwati gave the record of the number of churches and baptized believers since the first convert to Christianity. There have been 8973 baptisms recorded and there are at present churches in fifty-three villages.

Saturday morning's program had three talks: "The Impur Boarding School," "In What Way the Ao Christians Can Increase the Kingdom of God" and "How the Christian Aos and the Government Work Together." The woman's meeting in the afternoon was led by Aiti, a teacher in Impur. She and Hattie, another teacher in the girls' school, were the first Ao Naga girls to study in Nowgong. Hattie is the granddaughter of the "Assamese servant boy" who accompanied Doctor Clark. Miss Vickland of Nowgong gave in Assamese an interesting report of their jubilee and Mrs. Longwell spoke on future plans for work for Ao women and girls. Saturday evening the Impur school boys gave a pageant which vividly portrayed times of war and some experiences Doctor Clark had when he first came into the Naga hills. Then came a candle and song drill by the Impur school girls, beautifully illustrating what Christianity brings.

Easter Sunday in Assam

Easter Sunday the flowers and ferns were a reminder of the resurrection morning. The early devotions were led by the head master of the Jorhat Bible school. The Sunday-school lesson was taught to one large class of over 2000. The lesson was followed by the offering, which was taken by procession, an innovation which had been explained the evening before. The congregation passed to the front, singing "Bringing in the Sheaves," deposited their gifts on a table and returned to their places. After church there was a baptismal service. Sixteen Semas and six Aos made public profession of their faith in Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. The mid-day meal of rice and beef curry was partaken of by 3400 in the open on the school playground. After the feast all the girls were invited to the ladies' compound where Miss Vickland, through an interpreter, explained the World Wide Guild. The idea of a W. W. G. chapter among the Ao girls was favorably received. In the afternoon Rev. V. H. Sword addressed the audience. There were greetings from several former missionaries now in the United States, and also from a few Assamese Christians of the Assamese Christian pioneer families. The evening devotional meeting was led by Pastor Wai-kaba, of Songrachi church. Then followed group singing.

Samar of Molung "gathered up the fragments" in an inspiring way. He warned of the danger of falling into the trap of pride because of the achievements of the past and urged the people to be humble before God, and to earnestly endeavor to win for Christ the whole Ao tribe and the bordering tribes, that the centennial might be even more glorious. The benediction was pronounced by Rev. R. B. Longwell near midnight and the Ao jubilee closed.

The Devotional Life

A Prayer of Thanksgiving

BY RABBI LOUIS J. KOPALD OF THE DELAWARE AVENUE TEMPLE, BUFFALO

The following prayer is clipped from the "American Israelite" and republished here with a view to revealing the heart of Israel at its best. All it lacks to make it an orthodox Christian prayer is the acknowledgment of Jesus as the Name above every name. But though the name of Jesus is omitted the spirit of Jesus breathes through the immensities of its thought and the sweep of its brotherhood.

O GOD, on this day of thanksgiving we would chasten our thought of Thee. Through Thee chastened within us would we achieve, ere Thou be lost to us, our destiny. How can our struggling word, our eager thought reach and move Thy great heart? Oh! that somehow we might discover the substance and the manner of a thanksgiving acceptable to Thee!

LORD, give us to know the fringe of the mind of Thee as Thou knowest Thyself. Give us to know the seven-sealed secrets shut out to our dulled senses. Give us to know distances not of earth but of the universe so that seeing we shall more than see. Give us to fathom the mystery of the myriad moons that lift as bubbles in the noonday sun. Give us to know the road, royal yet closed to kings, which no philosopher or scientist or any man born of man yet has found. Give us to know life as Thou hast conceived it; to know the fabric of truth as Thou hast spun it; to know the unknowable of our hereafter, if hereafter there be for us, as it is hidden in Thy impenetrable heart. Yea, give us to know, as Moses never knew, how to look into Thy face and live! Then will man know how to give thanks unto Thee with all his mind.

the garment with which he girds his loins or the house his body habits is the open sesame to man's soul. Give us to see with courage, with patience, with sympathy, with hope. Yea, give us to see visions and hear Thy voice as Elijah never saw or Samuel heard, so that our souls mount with eagle's wings to Thee. Then will man see how to give thanks unto Thee with all his soul.

The Vision of Christ

BY WILLIAM OLNEY

*"It is to earnest devotion and strong desire Christ will manifest himself."
—The late Andrew Murray, D.D.*

NOT to these fleshly eyes
Be thou, dear Lord, revealed;
From their gaze is concealed
That which with glad surprise,
Comes to the soul intent to see Thy condescending Majesty.

Come then, dear Lord, possess
Our hungry hearts, which now
Low at thy footstool bow;
Waiting for thee to bless;
Through thy word and thy Spirit,
Lord!
The satisfying sight afford.

FATHER, give us to feel Thy understanding heart as Thou feelest Thyself. Give us to feel heroically—not pettily or selfishly, not hastily or blindly, but as though all men were gods and all women goddesses. Give us to feel on the heights—so that, at least for one hour, we be lifted above our meager and murky horizons, above the limitations of our perishable bodies. Give us to feel our kinship with Thee so overwhelmingly that the walls fall between rich and poor, brawn and brain, the far and the near, and all men and all things merge into one. Give us to feel for one another so sympathetically that our hearts go out to all men, not merely in calamity but perennially, because we are brothers. Give us to feel at our highest and sweetest and kindest, antithetic only to sin but never to sinners. Yea, give us to feel the strength and the weakness, the bigness and the smallness, the hope and the despair, the godhood and the manhood in all Thy children, more convincingly than even Amos and Hosea felt them, so that our hearts melt through love of Thee and our fellow men! Then will man feel how to give thanks unto Thee with all his heart.

O GOD, LORD, FATHER, Thou Mind of Mind, Soul of Soul, Heart of Heart, is there a name with which fittingly we may address Thee? What difference maketh it, what availeth it the word we use in seeking Thee? Reveal Thyself unto us, O Thou Unnameable, so that we cease to name Thee and begin to know Thee! Reveal Thyself unto us as never Thou hast revealed Thyself unto dervish or fakir, prophet or priest, bishop or rabbi! Reveal Thyself unto us so that man stands at last, revealed unto himself. Reveal Thyself unto us so that our thanksgiving be not for full fleshpots, but for a free spirit; not for ourselves, but for others; not for today, but for our achieved destiny. Amen.

LORD GOD, give us to see into the immensities, the depths of Thy endless soul as Thou seest Thyself. Give us to see the soul stirring in all that "is and breathes and takes its being" from Thee—yes, stirring in inanimate life too silently for the ear of man. Give us to see that no church or mosque or temple or synagogue was made by Thee or is Thy dwelling place. Give us to see that no praise or prayer or anthem or litany or cantillation, aloud or in the heart, means aught to Thee when man's soul is not there. Give us to see the soul of Thee in all men, white or black, brown or yellow, that not

The Chimney Corner

Sandoe's Pocket*

By ELSIE SINGMASTER
(Concluded)

SANDOE'S POCKET slept late. It was half past eight when the first person looked out and saw the track of Miss Tinley's car in the snow. This was Mrs. Wolf, who announced the fact in loud tones to her husband and son.

"The woman's back!"

In her voice there was a tone of joy, pathetic in its intensity. Young George rose at once from his miserable bed in the inner room and came and looked up at the hill. A thin wraith of smoke rose from Miss Tinley's chimney and another from the schoolhouse.

"I wonder if she'll have church." Mrs. Wolf determined to be the first to arrive and thus to hold the fort for the Wolfs and the Yeatts and the Saxes. She prepared breakfast quickly, indifferent to the weakness of the coffee.

At nine o'clock Alice and Bessie Wambaugh looked out. They were fourteen and fifteen years old, irresponsible and slovenly, the despair of Miss Tinley.

"Teacher's back," cried Alice. "I guess she'll have church. Hurry up!"

In his cabin old Yeatts stretched his arms and yawned.

"I wonder did she fetch the monument," he said, feeling old and tired. "I wish I had a monument."

Then suddenly old Yeatts became absolutely immobile as though he were paralyzed. He heard a strange, wonderful and beautiful sound, such as he had never heard in his life. Forgetting that his days, or most of them, had been evil, he believed that he was going to die and that angels were coming for him. He felt his arms; they were not numb. He stood up; he could still walk. He rose and opened the door. No Sandoe's Pocket window was ever opened in winter.

The wonderful sound continued; it was louder and more distinct. Then abruptly it ceased.

"Gettin' simple-minded," said he, despairingly. "Simple-minded."

Alice and Bessie Wambaugh heard the sound also and said, "What is that?" But by the time they reached the door there was only the gray Pocket and the gray sky and no beautiful sound. Mrs. Wolf heard and grew pale; she too thought of angels.

At ten o'clock the schoolhouse bell rang. Mrs. Wolf was already on the road; she looked back and there was some one emerging from most of the doors in the Pocket. When it was evident that she would reach the schoolhouse first, some of the figures withdrew from sight. Then Mrs. Wolf stopped short in the road, and so did every one else who was outside. Those who had stepped inside opened their doors again. The marvelous singing came without mistake from the schoolhouse. Miss Tinley was not singing. She stood in the doorway as though she were looking to see who was coming to church. The music was a stirring hymn, "Onward Christian Soldiers." Miss Tinley had taught it to those who came to church and some remembered it from long ago when an itinerant preacher visited the Pocket.

Miss Tinley saw the Wolfs and Yeatts and Saxes advancing, then she saw a more interesting sight. Behind them the Wambaughs and Stoughs and Starks were advancing also. Her eyes shone and her lips parted. They came in slowly and sat down. They filled the schoolroom to overflowing, their eyes fixed, not suspiciously on one another, but with profound curiosity on a black case at the front of the room from which the strange and beautiful sounds issued.

When the music ended, Miss Tinley turned a little wheel, and then stood facing them.

"Friends," said she, slowly, her hand on the black case, "this is Mrs. Gates' monument."

"Monument!" repeated old man Yeatts. "Is it to go in the cemetery?"

"No," smiled Miss Tinley. "It's to stay here. It's a radio machine."

"I know what that is!" cried young Wolf. He was pale and his dark eyes glowed. "Mrs. Gates told me. You can hear on it from anywhere in the world."

One of the Starks laughed.

"George is right," said Miss Tinley quickly. "You can hear all the way across the continent. 'Onward Christian Soldiers' was sung in New York and we shall hear a sermon from New York. This evening we'll experiment with other places and I'll try to explain how it's done."

"Did it cost three hundred dollars?" asked old Yeatts in awe.

"Three hundred dollars. Mrs. Gates used to sit up there and think of us all listening together." Suddenly to the amazement of everybody, Miss Tinley began to cry. She saw little Mrs. Gates, tiny, bright-eyed, almost always in pain, making plans for her monument. The residents of the Pocket saw her also, as through the medium of Miss Tinley's tears.

"And there ain't goin' to be no marble over her?" asked old Yeatts.

Miss Tinley dried her eyes.

"You don't think Mrs. Gates herself is down there under the ground, do you?" she asked, her bright gaze holding one after the other. Miss Tinley seemed to be amused that any one could hold such an absurd idea.

She turned the little wheel again and a voice began to preach a simple sermon. The choir sang "Rock of Ages."

"Let's sing," said Miss Tinley. "Let's all sing together."

But Miss Tinley did not sing; again Miss Tinley wept, and watching her and remembering Mrs. Gates, the residents of the Pocket felt strange emotions stirring in their breasts. Ignorant and dull of heart, they contemplated for the first time a miracle of science and the greater miracle of love. Their minds were overwhelmed and their hearts ached, and both sensations were good for them.

WHEN the hymn was ended, Miss Tinley lowered a map on the front wall.

"See, here's where we live, but even Hagerstown isn't big enough to have a tiny dot. The singing comes from here in New York. This evening we'll see whether we can hear from Chicago or Washington or Montreal. All the winter we can meet together and be happy."

Miss Tinley's voice had a pleading note as though it left a question in the air.

Old man Yeatts rose slowly and looked about, his face red.

"I think we ought to all come," said he. "On account of Madam."

Old man Wambaugh rose on his side a giant like Yeatts. His face also was red.

"I think the same."

"This evening, then, at seven o'clock," said Miss Tinley.

Mrs. Wolf came up to the desk, the tears streaming down her cheeks.

"I thought you was gone," she wailed. "Gone forever. I thought the light was gone out of the Pocket."

Bessie and Alice Wambaugh approached together giggling.

"We thought you'd help us make neat dress for each. Pappy bought the stuff."

Last of all came George Wolf. He was still pale and his beautiful eyes shone. He looked at Mrs. Gates' monument although it were a beckoning hand, or a lode-star of irresistible power.

"I'll go out and get learning," he promised. "I'm not afraid. I'll do whatever you say."

"Hi! Don't you know bathing is allowed in this pond?"

"I'm not b-bathing—I'm d-drowning!"
Epworth Herald.

*This story appeared in the October issue of the Woman's Home Companion, and is reprinted here by special permission of that publication and also of the author.

BOYS and Girls

You Are Sending Those Stamps!

Dear Boys and Girls,

Mail time is really the greatest fun now-a-days, with letters in so many unknown handwritings from so many places. I catch myself thinking: "But I know anybody in Kansas?" "Or in Missouri?" and then on through Detroit, Brooklyn, Washington, Boston, and so forth. Acknowledgment is made to the following donors:

Friend, St. Louis, Mo.....	.24
Ms. S. E. Johnson, Canton, Kan...	.26
Ms. Albert C. Hale, Brooklyn, N. Y.	1.00
Friend, Whittier, Calif.....	1.00
Friend, Stanley Tenny, Jr., Washington, D. C.	2.00
Ms. Class Intermediate Dep't., First church, Detroit, Mich.....	.75
Friend, Boston, Mass.....	.25

Received from Nov. 20-27: $5.50
You will be interested in the letters, I am sure.

Mr. Carey, who teaches the intermediate boys in Detroit who sent a regular show of stamps (brown and blue and red), writes: "The boys in 'our class' at the intermediate department were much interested in the red stamp shower in the story which appears in THE BAPTIST for Nov. 13. As all of the boys are not present today we have only a small amount to send, but we hope to have others interested in our department and we trust many will respond so that it will be possible for you to accomplish what you ask and send a story book to the red-skinned boys and girls in India." Another writes: "A belated reading of THE BAPTIST for Nov. 13 tells me of a delightful plan for a stamp shower. As a lover of children and of books, I am enclosing check to furnish a few stamps with best wishes for the complete success of your undertaking."

From Mrs. Amy Gunn Warn comes the following: "You surely have started something! I am glad you thought of reading what you wrote about stamps to my grandson, Lloyd Stanley Tenny, Jr., of seven. It was his own idea to raise the money. He spent the entire Saturday pasting pictures on an unwindow shade, then he tacked it to the door of a room. He placed chairs in front of it for mother, father, brother and his grandparents. At dinner he announced that there would be a 'show' of stamps in grandma's room and a charge of five cents or more would be made, the proceeds going into stamps for Miss Applegarth's fund to buy books for children in Japan and China. He was happy when he found he had one dollar! Grandma told him she would give him as much as he spent for stamps, so he was able to buy 100 of them which you will please find enclosed in this letter.

The Explorers' Club

CONDUCTED BY MARGARET T. APPEGARTH

"May God bless you to secure books that will be a great blessing to the children in other lands. It is more blessed to give than to receive. Our little boy is happy to send these stamps. With best wishes for wonderful success."

"I counted the books which had been my childhood favorites and had helped to make me. There were at least ten of them, so I am charging myself two cents apiece for the fun of the thing—one cent for my own past enjoyment, one cent for some other child's enjoyment some time and somewhere, when your lovely plan reaches fulfilment, as I know it will. Surely all the children of the world have reason to look to us."

The Bookworm

By "PEGGY"

WHEN Miss Applegarth told us what fun a little Washington boy had had in getting up a play to earn money for the bookless children of the Orient, Bill and Timmy and I decided we must get up a play too. So we asked Miss Applegarth what we had better call it. I guess she was in a big hurry or something, for she just mumbled at us, "The Bookworm. How's that?" At first it didn't seem much good to me, for I don't like worms a bit. But Timothy is the thinker of our family.

From "Mr. Possum Visits the Zoo," Abingdon Press.

("The Thinker," by Rodin," is Uncle-tim's remark whenever he sees Timmy with his chin propped on his hand and his arm propped on his knee.)

And when Timmy had put on his thinking-cap he looked at Bill and me saying: "What title could be more sensible, anyhow? What's the matter with you two? The bookworm needs something to eat; and what can he eat in the Orient where there aren't books? I'd like to be the bookworm in this play. In fact, if I can't be the bookworm, I won't be in it at all."

All of a sudden, of course, both Bill and I wanted to be bookworms too. I saw myself all rolled round and round in something, crawling on my stomach along the floor, wriggling and writhing and having a lovely time coiling! But, of course, one has to play fair in the family, and Timmy had thought of it first, so we let him be the worm. "Although," I said, hopefully, "I'd make a much longer worm than you!"

Timmy grinned: "I can stretch longer, easily enough. What's the matter with me and a tail? I could be as long as I wanted to."

Now, of course, this began to be so much fun for Timmy that Bill and I felt quite out of it.

"What shall we be?" we asked one another dismally.

Bill looked at me. I looked at Bill. We needed an idea.

Suddenly Bill had it. He smote his chest with a marvelous gesture: "I," said he, grandly, "will be Santa Claus!"

Did you ever hear of anything so sensible, with Christmas coming near? Almost, poor Timmy wavered! Was Santa Claus more fun than a bookworm? Had he made a mistake? But he decided sofa cushions stuffed in front for a tummy, with white whiskers, and a pack, weren't to be compared with a tail to slither this way and that.

But you can see how this left me high and dry, without any gay job.

"You might be an angel," said Bill, kindly.

"Yes, I might; but angels are invisible and I'd like to be seen. Oh, I know! I know! I'm going to be a rain-dear."

"A reindeer? But you'd need horns and bells and a sleigh!"

"Of course; only I shall spell it R-A-I-N-D-E-A-R, and I shall be in my slicker with an umbrella. Oh, I shall be the dearest thing you ever saw!"

And then Bill and Timmy each began to wish that he could be a rain-dear, too. So next week we will give you our play, for you will surely want to give it too. It's called: "The Christmas Bookworm." Watch for it!

Young People and the Kingdom

CONDUCTED BY EDWIN PHELPS, GENERAL SECRETARY, B. Y. P. U. OF A.

"Meeting Helps" on Devotional Topic for December 26

ASSOCIATIONS OF YOUTH

(Note: These "helps" are built around the material given in "Young People's Leader" the official magazine "for all Baptist young people." Subscriptions to the "Leader" may be made through the B. Y. P. U. of America at $1 per year.)

As Leader suggests, the meeting may be held around a campfire (made by crossing branches or sticks over red tissue paper under which has been placed an electric light bulb), since around the campfire many companionships are formed. The idea of the out-of-doors may be enhanced if a ukelele or other portable musical instrument were used as the accompaniment to songs. These songs may be suggested informally by those sitting around the campfire. For example, the leader may suggest that they sing "Day Is Dying in the West"; when this is finished some one else may start singing "What a Friend," with the rest joining in; some one may suggest another song, or the leader may ask some one to play.

The talk should be informal, even though some may ask questions or take part who are not counted on in the original program. The thoughts of the group should center, as Leader suggests, around the associations with ourselves, with books, with our surroundings, with those whom we need—our friends, with those who need us—our neighbors, with Christ, in the out-of-doors, in prayer and bible study, and in church worship. If any of those seated around the fire knows of some apt quotation on these, let him "pipe up" and give them without fear of censure.

After these talks, you may want the young people to write on a slip of paper provided for the purpose some of the associations which they have had in the past year that have not been beneficial to them. For example, some might write: "Reading ——— which had a bad effect on my thoughts and habits"; "Going with ——— whose companionship is not of the best"; "Not going to young people's meeting or church"; "Thinking mean things about those with whom I come in contact." When these things have been written, the young people may be asked to gather closely around the fire and cast in their slips, saying as they do so, "Let the dead past be burned and let my life become as new."

The symbolic ceremony suggested in Leader, "The purifying Flames of True Friendship," may follow this "burning of the past." However, if you do not use this, it would be well to have some other simple ceremony follow the "burning of the past." Other slips, 3 by 2½ inches (the 3 being used as the length and the 2½ as the width), should be passed out and on these the young people may write or print any resolutions honestly made for the new year. These slips should not be signed, for these resolutions are to be between the individual and God. The slips should be collected, placed in a colored cover and clipped together with a paper fastener, staple or brad. This little book may be labelled "The New Year's Book of the Members of the ——— Society for 1927." Perhaps in a month or two the president may read these all through and then call for a showing of hands for those who have kept their resolutions. The young people should be impressed with the fact that these resolutions are made, not to be broken, but to be kept.

Election Time

Election time is always exciting, isn't it—when we vote for our mayors, or senators, or judges, or congressmen, or aldermen, or sheriff, or governors, or president. Then the energetic citizen scans the papers, digs into the life of the candidate, attends political meetings—and almost holds his breath. But what about our young people's elections? Are they usually accompanied by that almost breath-taking suspense which characterizes civic elections, or do the young people feel that "here is another boring time"?

The Huntington, W. Va., B. Y. P. U. has solved the problem. Two parties are nominated for the positions of city officers—the progressive and home rule. Each society is divided into two parts, one of which is for one party and the other for the other party. Each party has a slogan and a platform. For example, the progressive's slogan is, "Hasn't Scratched Yet." Its platform is as follows:

1. Department of devotional life: A regular schedule by which a city officer will visit each local union at least once each month in the interest of better worship programs. A systematic effort to list all members in daily devotions.

2. Department of stewardship titling: A vigorous promotion of World Tour in January, as a means educating the young people in Baptist missions and mission fields. Promotion of "Three Months Adventure in Tithing" project, and following it up in the effort to secure and establish tithing on a permanent basis. Promotion of the stewardship essay contest with all our missionaries undertaking the Easter missionary offering in the interests of the denominational program.

3. Department of life service: Assisting the state chairman of the department of life service in every way, particularly in connection with the annual roll call of life service volunteers. Presentation of life service appeal, and pointing out recruits such opportunities for service training as may be available.

4. Department of evangelism: Promotion of evangelism on the "Lowell" plan, development of evangelistic teams; presentation of Christ as the center of religion.

5. Department of organization: Evolving affiliated organization enlisted in the Christian Life Program and scoring in at least twenty of the suggested goals; monthly meetings of the city board; promotion of city training school in B. Y. P. U. method new ideas passed around.

6. Intermediate department: An enlarged program seeking to reach the intermediate in every church; intermediates at rallies; unions organized and assisted.

7. Junior department: Spring rallies for juniors; junior methods in training school; junior unions organized and assisted.

8. Publicity department: The "Skyrock" published on a sound financial basis. Put out on time—current local news item specialty. Promotion of the Publicity Course. Publicity suggestions to locals.

9. Social and recreational department: Course in recreational leadership in training school; live social features at rallies.

10. City rallies every two months vital programs. Start on time, stop time.

11. Full and hearty cooperation B. Y. P. U. of West Virginia and B. Y. P. U. of America.

12. A delegation of 100 representing city union at the Philadelphia convention.

The "planks" of the platforms have been mimeographed and passed out to the voters, so that by Dec. 16—election day—they may have some idea about candidates and what they stand for. Interesting, isn't it?

How about your local society? If your members absent themselves on election day? Then try this stunt. Form one or two nominating committees select the candidates for two parties. Permit to carry out the idea further, badge handbills could be printed or mimeographed, boosting one or the other of these parties. The candidates of each party should outline their platform, publish it, so that the society members may know what is to be done in the following year. Thus a lively but friendly competition will spring up, resulting in a keener interest in all activities of society. Incidentally, the complete program for the year will be outlined in advance, a fact which indicates that society will begin working immediately after the election.

December 12 Topic
SEEING THE OTHER FELLOW'S SIDE

December 19 Topic
THE HEART OF CHRISTMAS

For a full treatment of these topics, see "Young People's Leader."

Churches at Work

If your church has developed interesting and effective methods of carrying on its work, we shall be glad to give an opportunity of telling other churches about them through the medium of this page. Material should be addressed to the Board of Missionary Cooperation, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

HAVE YOU ENROLLED?

It needs to be explained carefully in churches while enrolment for the World Tour is in progress that the Log to the airship Evangel is to be distributed on the basis of one copy to a family, or one to the individual living singly. Attention is directed to this because in view of the great enthusiasm caused by the World Tour plan, there is the danger of an overwhelming mass of orders for the Log. A large supply is provided, but it will not be possible to furnish a copy for every member of every denomination and it has been assumed that reading of the Log would, as far as possible, take place in family groups. With this idea given effect, there will be enough copies of the Log to go around.

All of which shows that it is desirable to enroll early for the World Tour and be certain that the Log is received in time. The distribution is planned for the last week of December, so do not be alarmed if you enroll and then do not receive your copy within the week. The main thing is to get your name on the list as early as possible and obtain the receipt that insures the delivery of the Log to you at the scheduled time.

WOMAN'S PART IN THE WORLD TOUR.

Women are serving on local, association and state committees, and in that capacity are assuming, with the men, responsibility for seeing that every Baptist church has full information on the tour and that each church tour committee is functioning. It is possible that some churches little is known about the tour and probably no participation can be made unless the women take the initiative and see that interest is created so that families and individuals are actually booked for the trip.

One of the greatest benefits to be derived from reading the Log each day in the family group is the establishment of a family altar for the one month. It can be that the family will be so attracted by the plan of reading and praying together (at the breakfast table or at other more convenient time), that they will desire to continue the same kind of communion with God and fellowship with each other throughout the year. The father of the family is the organized head and will in many instances lead his family in its devotions, but it will be necessary for the mother to assume this leadership. The world needs Christian women who are willing to follow their Lord in worship in the place where they live, the most blessed spot on earth to both parents and children—the home.

Women will also be helpful in thinking out and putting into effect the "welcome home" parties, the side trips and other interesting world missionary ideas which can be planned for this period.

WANTED—SUGGESTIONS AND IDEAS

We should be glad to hear from churches which can offer any interesting facts, ideas, methods or suggestions for making the World Tour as effective as possible. Details of novel and original plans, reports of large church enrolments or any news of interest to other churches which are also taking the tour, will be welcome. Write to the Publicity Department, Board of Missionary Cooperation, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

DESERVING OF MENTION.

Special mention should be made of the little church at Powell, Wyo., H. N. Johnson, pastor. The church members, who have worshiped for some years in the basement because they were unable to complete their church building, decided to increase their missionary quota from $200 to $300 and to pay monthly. Nov. 8 they were paid up to date, and had sent in their November check. The pastor finds his salary in his letter box the first day of every month and for the first time in the history of the church, there is a surplus in the bank and members are beginning to plan at last for the completion of their church.

The churches at Worland and Basin, Wyo., also have paid their quotas up to date because they voted at the beginning of the year to pay monthly.

Reports from the churches at the Fall Associations in Montana revealed that the church at Belgrade had increased in membership from nineteen members to sixty-five, with a Sunday-school enrolment of more than 100 members. The banner church in missionary giving was the one at Wyola, W. E. Shanum, pastor, which contributed last year to missions $6.72 per capita and raised $1300 toward a church building. This church also won both state and district prizes for the highest number of points per member in the reading contest.

READY FOR THE TOUR.

The Fifth Avenue church, Huntington, W. Va., which under Dr. M. L. Wood is always a pace setter in the state, has completed plans for the World Tour. A visitation in the entire parish in sixteen districts and for 2100 members will shortly be made as tickets are presented and signed. In the auditorium a gigantic map of the world will be featured and the airship will contain, as the journey starts, the number of Fifth Avenue church members who are taking the voyage. These numerals will be changed as new travelers sign up, even after Jan. 1.

NEW JERSEY REPORTS.

Fifty New Jersey pastors report that in September and October of this year the services of their churches have surpassed the records in attendance and spirit of the last few years. Sunday schools report splendid rallies and the missionary societies have started well. The receipts for denominational missions are ahead of last year.

INTERESTING CHURCH CALENDAR

A church calendar of unusual interest is published by the Immanuel church, Rangoon, India. All the work of Immanuel church is in English and its bulletin, "Good Cheer," is a worthy effort.

The Baptist

Chicago, December 11, 1926

Vol. VII

No. 45

THE BAPTIST is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 2320 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Rates: Single subscription $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries, postage $1.04 extra; in Canada 52 cents.

Change of address: Old and new addresses should be in our hand two weeks before a change goes into effect. Give key number as it appears on label.

Remittances: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment is through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, add exchange.

Renewal notice will be sent previous to date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should send in renewal promptly or, if paper is not desired send discontinuance order.

Advertising: Display: Per agate line, 30 cents; full page, $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituaries: 100 words free; 4 cents per word for additional; resolutions printed verbatim, 4 cents per word; cash to accompany order.

Correspondence should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, 2320 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

No manuscripts returned unless accompanied by full return postage.

Among Ourselves

An Announcement Regarding a Special Deputation to the Far East

CONDITIONS in the Far East where startling changes, well known to the American public, have been taking place in recent years, are creating both serious problems and unusual opportunities for Christian missions. While this is true in all lands of the non-Christian world, it is especially true in China where the present critical situation will have profound bearing on the missionary enterprise of Northern Baptists. Other denominations, notably the Disciples of Christ, the Congregationalists, and during the current year, the Presbyterians and the Methodists, have found it imperative to send special deputations to their mission fields to make careful study of conditions as they affect their respective missionary undertakings.

Accordingly, the board of managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society at a largely attended meeting, Nov. 9, after long consideration of information and advice received by letter and cable from the mission fields in the Far East, came to the unanimous conclusion that conditions required the sending of a special deputation. Two well known denominational leaders have been invited by the board to serve on this deputation. J. F. Watson, secretary of the West Washington State Convention, has been released by his convention, while the First church of Rochester, N. Y., has released its pastor, D. B. MacQueen, for similar service. The wide and successful experience of the former in home mission administration and in the development of Oriental churches on the Pacific coast, and the active and interested service rendered by the latter as a member of the foreign mission board qualify both men in a peculiar degree to serve on such an important deputation.

The executive and finance committees of the woman's foreign mission board, meeting during the following week, felt the same need for a deputation and voted to send their foreign secretary, Miss Mabelle R. McVeigh, and, if possible, another board member, as members of the deputation.

This special deputation, including Foreign Secretary J. H. Franklin, is expected to sail early in December. In South China the party will join George B. Huntington, treasurer of the society, returning from his visit to the British India fields. Dr. and Mrs. A. W. Beaven of Rochester, N. Y., are expected to join the deputation later and to serve as added representatives at the China Intermission Conference in Shanghai in March, Doctor Beaven from the general board and Mrs. Beaven from the woman's board. Doctor and Mrs. Beaven and Miss McVeigh will make the trip without expense to their respective societies.

Probably no deputation ever sent by the Foreign Mission Societies to their mission fields in the Far East has faced larger responsibility. The South China field with its spectacular movement toward independence on the part of the churches and the problems which this movement presents in itself would justify a special visit. In East China problems affecting the administration of the Shanghai Baptist college, in which Northern and Southern Baptists cooperate, have led the trustees to request both northern and southern boards to send representatives to Shanghai early in 1927 to consider the future policy of the institution. In China in general the situation calls so urgently for fresh study of problems and policies that a conference is being called by our three China missions to be held at Shanghai in March which Chinese and missionaries from these three missions are expected to attend. In Japan the seriously depleted stations and unsolved reconstruction problems left by the earthquake, and in China the proposed governmental registration of mission schools, the increasing demands for freedom from foreign control, and other important and difficult questions are to be studied by the depuutation in order to advise the board in their direction of the work. In the Philippine Islands also there are critical conditions affecting our work which call for prompt attention.

The members of the deputation anticipate their task with a solemn consciousness of the responsibility involved. They know that more than human wisdom must be given them or they shall miss the way. They unite with the boards in requesting the entire denomination to give them the support of its earnest prayers. It is their hope that the Spirit of Christ shall so dominate the deputation and the groups with whom they confer that all concerned shall be sure of the presence and blessing of God, that the Spirit may be poured out afresh upon our missionaries, our native churches and these lands, and that a new passion for winning men to Christ may be generated by divine power in the hearts of all the followers of our Lord in the Orient.

On behalf of the board of managers Frederick L. Anderson, chairman of the board of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society; Isabelle Warwick Wood, vice-chairman of the board of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

A British Causerie

BY FREDERIC C. SPURR
Sir Oliver Lodge.

ONE of the most significant signs of our time is the new role of prophet and apostle which is assumed by some of our leading men of science. No voice of consequence is raised today on behalf of that crass materialism which terrifies our fathers. The whole outlook of science is changing, and strong spiritual notes are creeping into the utterances of scientific men. The doyen of these is, of course, Sir Oliver Lodge whose public grows daily. He speaks once a week over the radio to millions of people who eagerly listen to him. Of late years he has become a popular Christian apologist setting forth fundamental truths in profound yet simple language. At the present time he is delivering weekly lectures on the Halley Stewart foundation which are producing a profound impression. In his last lecture he pleaded for a return to a childlike attitude toward the mystery of the universe. "I cannot envy a man his common sense," he said, "who believes that nothing higher than mankind exists in the universe. The universe is shoutingly full of design, plan, intention, purpose, reason." Then he went on to show that we must put our selves in rapport with that Whole, which desires to guide us and which will hear our prayer. The most striking part of the lecture was that which dealt with the ways in which we get at reality. In a brilliant series of illustrations he proved that we never reach reality by means of the senses or even the mind alone. "The reality lies in the unseen. The seen and the sensed are dim, imperfect representations of it. Interpretation is the function of the poet, the seer, the philosopher, the saint. We must not discard reason but we must transcend it. It is in the region of faith that we reach the real things." . . . This is high evangelical teaching set in a scientific framework. It compels thought and it must drive men into the arms of God. We cannot be too thankful for Sir Oliver Lodge and his compelling words. Surely he is one of the forerunners of the new day and of that religious revival for which our hearts ache.

B. T. LIVINGSTON, WHO SUCCEEDS H. F. STILWELL AS SUPERINTENDENT OF EVANGELISM.

A Challenging Book.

Speaking of scientific men who are de-out Christians, I have received a remarkable book by Morris Morris M.Sc., a research scholar in geology in the University of Melbourne. It bears the title "Man Created during Descent," and is a direct challenge in the name of geology to that doctrine of evolution which rules God out of the process and reduces man to a product of blind forces. Mr. Morris has nothing to say against descent, which he fully accepts, but he sternly refuses to accept the "ancestors" of man as in any sense human. He considers that the habit of labeling as "man" the savage creatures who for half a million years preceded him is bad science and entirely contrary to the findings of geology. Children ought not to be taught in the schools that the tools of the ice age were made and left by our own species, called "men" quite improperly. Mr. Morris accepts wholeheartedly the thesis of Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace (as great a man as Darwin) that man became man by the direct act of God and that the story of Genesis is the true account of the matter although it is cast in poetic form. He holds that the age of man proper is quite recent, not more than 8000 years. He calls upon scientific men to be more precise in their use of language and to cease to employ words in an equivocal way. The whole argument is finely woven and is supported by a wealth of scientific facts which cannot be gainsaid. There are one or two secondary matters upon which I should join issue with Mr. Morris, but with his main contention I am in full sympathy. He has a right to be heard respectfully, for he is a competent man in his own subject. He had a great career at the university where he is lecturer. He is out to break the juggernaut of atheism which supports itself on science, which it misinterprets. His book will change the thinking of many people and compel them to reconsider a matter which not a few assume to be finally settled. I may add that it is well written in a style that ordinary people can understand.

French Protestantism.

One of the brightest weekly papers entering our home is the organ of French Protestantism, Le Christianisme. It contains excellent articles by such men as Dean Doumergue, brother of the president of the republic, Benjamin Couve and other distinguished writers. But I like it chiefly for the information it gives about the state of the French churches. It will be interesting to many to know that the churches in the northeast of the department of the Aisne which were all destroyed by the enemy in the great war, have been rebuilt and the families which were exiled have returned. A touching ceremony was held recently when a deaconess evangelist was set apart for the work of evangelization. This marks the beginning of a new and more intense period of spiritual life, a real day of Christ, for our brethren in that part of France. It is remarkable how the distressed folk in that region, so devastated by the war, have held together and have now returned with renewed enthusiasm to continue their interrupted work. I have observed during recent months the great struggle in France to maintain home mission work in the midst of a Catholic and indifferent people. France is close to us, yet we know little of the noble work that is being done by our Protestant kinsmen to keep burning the holy torch of truth. Another movement also merits attention. A commission of evangelization has been sitting for some time, and a campaign has been prepared in which a number of pastors will take part.

Divine Favor

BY M. P. TREAT

(M. P. Treat is in his ninetieth year and lives in Freeport, Ill.)

WHY was I born in this good land, Where plenty rains such bounteous store,
Freedom assured on either hand,
"Old Glory" guarding shore to shore?

The gospel with effulgent ray
Floating its banner over all,
Leading unerringly the way
To life all those who heed the call?

Why blest as son of Christian sire?
Of mother trusting in the Lord?
My heart warmed by the altar fire,
Of prayer and reading of the Word?

Why early led by grace divine
To trust Christ's sacrifice and love,
And gain a hope which still is mine,
That I shall reign with him above?

The answer is but one. It is
The one that there can be—"God's wondrous love." The work was his,

The favor thus bestowed on me.

Why spared for four score years and nine,
While thousands fall each passing day,
Save that through me the light may shine,
To help some other in the way?

If aught of good thou mayest see,
Dear Lord, in this weak life of mine,
Oh bless it Lord, that there may be
Some fruit thereof. The praise be thine.

Permanent evangelists are rare, hence these pastors have been released by their churches for the special work of missions. More than this the agents of the central evangelical society are now required to pass an examination before receiving the diploma of evangelist. This strikes me as being a good thing to do.

I should like to see something similar elsewhere. We in this country have been harmed by the vagaries of unauthorized evangelists who afflict the churches, inviting them with weird doctrines and questionable methods. They leave behind them a trail of mischief which takes long to erase. A few men will back a man who has some mesmeric gift and recommend him to the churches with disastrous results in many cases. One particular scoundrel who was a born hypnotist had such backing despite the protests of many leading pastors. He had great success until his real character was revealed and then he suddenly disappeared. Cases like this do infinite harm, and it is little wonder that many churches are shy of all evangelists, believing them to be suspects in one way or another. As the ministry is being tightened to prevent undesirable and untrained men from making havoc of congregations, so the work of the evangelist should be protected by a demand for efficiency, tact and a real vocation. We need evangelists badly, but we need the right sort.

A Great Day.

On Armistice Sunday an experiment was made in Birmingham which may have important consequences for the religious life of this country. Thirty churches took part in a pulpit exchange between Anglican and Free church ministers in the interests of the World Alliance for the Promotion of International Friendship through the Churches. Despite typically unpleasant November weather all the churches were crowded. Of course there was no intrusion upon each other's doctrines; the sole objective was the promotion of the peace movement. An immense impression has been made by this effort which is worthy of imitation elsewhere. Non-churchgoers have been as keenly interested as others. Men have said, "So the churches can agree after all when it comes to a living issue!" Many who do not usually attend church were present at these memorable services. There was one fly in the ointment: the Anglo Catholics to a man refused to have anything to do with the exchange. The exclusiveness and bitterness of these people is most marked. They carry their aloofness to the extent of refusing all cooperative work with their brethren who do not think as they do. It can only harm them. One of our public men said openly, "They have now shown that they care less for the kingdom of God and the interests of humanity than for their own sect." This is an extreme criticism, but it is easy to understand it. The so-called "Catholic" movement is in reality anti-Catholic; it is a sectarian movement aiming only at the establishment of a party. How paltry it all seems in view of the clamant cry for a world peace! And to think that any in the name of Christ refrain from helping this peace movement.

Dr. William Ashmore and His Life Task

BY RANDALL T. CAPEN

ON the afternoon of Sept. 28 fifty Chinese men and women, teachers and workers, with missionaries met on Doctor Ashmore's hilltop veranda overlooking the busy harbor of Swatow. We met to celebrate the completion of a remarkably well rounded life task. On that day, his seventy-fifth birthday, Doctor Ashmore finished the revision of the last chapter of Malachi, which puts in final form the whole Swatow colloquial Bible. Thus he leaves a monumental endowment to the Ling Tong churches of South China.

Although the event was freighted with deep significance, every one who knows the consecrated humility of this heroic missionary will appreciate his characteristic remark on the occasion, that it was his wife who planned the commemoration service and not he. With all his greatness he will never let himself be called great. Like the translators, Luther and Wycliff, he, too, is a life trained scholar. He studied under the highest linguistic authorities of America and of Germany, and followed up their instruction with persistent personal study. Yet all his ripe knowledge of Hebrew and Greek fed the fire of one ambition, to put God's written word in such form for the Swatow people that the man who runs may read. Perfected in the knowledge of the language of the region, he has succeeded in making the glad message of old ring clear to the ears of the people of 1926. He held fast the missionary ideal of making it possible for the ordinary man to understand. He believes that the Bible speaks for itself and so has given his life that the printed word may bring God's gospel in simple language to the man of the street and to the woman of the obscure home as well as to the scholars and the great in the land. We have the classical Chinese versions, which perhaps one-tenth of one per cent of the people can read. We also have the Mandarin Chinese Bible for those who speak that official language. But the purpose of Doctor Ashmore's work is to bring soul food to the needy illiterate millions of far eastern Kwantung.

Feeling that his health might not permit him to remain in China much longer, he delved through the specially trying tropical heat of this last summer. For years he systematically shut out many pleasures and alluring congenial work from his daily program that he might give his undivided attention to this translation. Through heat and cold, typhoon and cloudburst, his faithful Chinese assistant, Rev. I. S. Chen, was expected to keep morning and afternoon appointments with Doctor Ashmore six days in every week. Doctor Ashmore put his own money into his labor of love. He told how his wife put her own health also on the altar for this translation of the Word of God. His hair is gray. Yet he stood before us erect as an arrow, and as if in the full vigor of youth. Holding high a copy of his vernacular version in triumphant grasp, from the depths of his heart he begged the assemblage to lay aside all scholastic conceit and to read God's Word in the language the people can understand. His task is done—a contribution most timely! For, as Principal Fu of the academy pointed out, newspapers and present-day books are discarding the ancient, so-called "Wen Li" style and are adopting a way of writing approaching modern Chinese speech.

So when, after Doctor Groesbeck's dedicatory prayer, the meeting was dismissed and we stood gazing over the whitecaps of the turbulent autumn bay into the glory of the evening's setting sun, as we watched that brightness sink over the hills to carry its life giving light to other waiting lands, we saw, in anticipative vision, Doctor Ashmore's life-work accomplishment carrying its glory colored blessing of divine light also on to the unborn millions down beyond the evening mountains of his full spent yet still undying day.

Swatow, China.
Sept. 28, 1926.

John R. Brown An Appreciation.

BY A BOYHOOD CHUM AND COLLEGE CLASSMATE

THROUGH all the years I knew him, his loyalty to God the Father and to Jesus Christ his Saviour and Friend was unquestioned. His faith was unfaltering, his research unbounded, his breadth of reading extensive, his mind most discriminating. Even in death a book was found by his bedside where it had dropped when his heart stopped. He arrived at the period in many of his experiences when some things reached finality, but there were times when a dash had to be written in to indicate a hiatus in his conclusions. But all through his life he was asking questions that demanded an answer based upon fact, and if ever given a brief respite from his own questions, the hours were filled with the attempt to answer the honest questions of others. This habit of questioning everything never fell into a settled mood of doubt, but rather became a stimulus to his own eagerness to know things by first-hand study and investigation. Nor did he permit himself to be a mere savant gathering knowledge for the sheer thrill of having it in encyclopedic measure. His knowledge was put to work in practical service, as the last three years of his life especially demonstrated in a marked degree. Into what he called practical Christianity John R. Brown poured the fullness of his mature experience and the wealth of his great mind and heart as general secretary of the United Charities of St. Paul. He was erudite but humble, aristocratic in mind but democratic in spirit, a lover of books but never bookish, old-fashioned in his ethical conservatism but thoroughly modern in his social and scientific outlook, never a back-slapper but always a true friend.

I cannot do better than quote the words of another with whom my friend and classmate was associated in St. Paul in the work with which he was officially connected.

"For the last three years the city of St. Paul had the good fortune to have among its citizens a man of practical idealism, and now that he has been taken away from us, the loss to the community is incalculably great. In John R. Brown the executive secretary of the United Charities, this city had much more than a skillful social worker. Mr. Brown had a mind that ranged freely over the large fields of human interest and welfare, and he had also that rare combination of vision and leadership which made him a 'pointer-out' of the path to fuller and happier community life. He not only saw much more than most of us can see, he also made us share his vision. The task of the idealist in a modern American city is not an easy one. Sometimes he must be tempted to withdraw from the conflict with sordid and mercenary forces, despairing of the possibility of persuading practical men that his ideas are more practical than any purely selfish schemes. The standards of success which prevail—or seem to prevail—in the actual world are slow to yield to the high standards which idealism sets up. But once in a long while there appears an idealist who not only refuses to surrender but has the power to win over his side the very forces which seem to be most in opposition. That is the kind of idealist Mr. Brown was. How much he could have accomplished for St. Paul if he had lived, we can only imagine. What he had already accomplished in the few years of his life among us is known to all who are acquainted with the civic and social aspects of our community life. He has left behind him a legacy of practical idealism which will mean more to this city as the years go by and generations not yet born will have reason to be profoundly grateful for such a man lived and worked and pointed out the way to better and happier living conditions in their city. To his personal friends, his life will remain an inspiration and incentive all their days."

Texas Baptists

BY J. M. DAWSON

THE RECENT convention of Texas Baptists in San Antonio was marked by unity, purpose and consecration. From the moment of the election of Governor Pat M. Neff as president until the concluding sermon by Dr. George W. Truett, the gathering gave evidence of a sense of responsibility and determination never excelled by these aggressive Baptists.

There were many high hours but the most significant was that in which convention voted to sustain the regular denominational budget for the current work and at the same time, through a special campaign, undertake to retire a debt of $6,000,000 against its ten colleges and six hospitals, which have total assets in excess of $12,000,000. Dr. George W. Truett was chosen general director of the campaign which will be waged for $2,000,000 from Jan. 15-Mar. 15, 1927, payable Mar. 15 and Sept. 1, 1927, and a similar campaign waged each year thereafter on a like basis until the entire amount is retired. H. L. Kokerot, cattle-king and leading layman, was chosen chairman of an executive committee of ten outstanding brethren and a special commission of 100 members. Dr. R. Scarborough was made state organizer and J. M. Dawson, director of publicity. Pres. Pat M. Neff, General secretary F. S. Groner, Editor E. C. South, of the Baptist Standard and the departmental state secretaries were made ex-officio members of the committee which will have charge of the special campaign.

The spirit of heroism in this endeavor may be judged by Doctor Truett's declaration that in addition to the tenth of his income to local and denominational current budgets he meant to give a fourth of his income toward the retirement of this debt. In this he has been joined already by hundreds of others. It is believed that some large gifts will be secured in the special campaign.

Finding that the interest item on the indebtedness was large and that the inclusion of the principal and interest included in the annual budget would absorb practically all the budget subscriptions, the Baptists of Texas in an unparalleled spirit have determined to clean up the slate and at the same time carry their full share in the current support of the missions and South-wide causes. They ask the prayers and sympathetic good-will of the brotherhood everywhere. There are now 450,000 white Baptists in Texas; they have assets exceeding $12,000,000 in institutions and with hearty cooperation in laying themselves and their vast resources on God's altar they may bring in a new era for a Baptist denomination within their borders.

Wisconsin News and Notes

By ROLLO SPEER

Evangelism in Focus of Attention

THE evangelistic conference held in the Tabernacle church, Milwaukee, Nov. 17, was attended by pastors and workers from all parts of the state. C. M. Moore of the Indiana State Convention was the inspirational speaker and starred at his best. His soul-stirring messages brought the conference repeatedly to high moments of inspiration. The Young of Kankakee, Ill., brought series of practical addresses on visitation, evangelism and personal work. About several echo conferences are being held at such strategic points as Green Bay, Neenah, Appleton and Albany. G. Mitchell as head of this department of work in Wisconsin gives his time and strength constantly to this work. He is ably assisted by members of the state force. C. C. Browne has given special help recently at Albany and Woodlawn, West Allis, with good results. Secy. A. LeGrand has been making evangelism the central emphasis of his work during the fall months.

Some Methods Used by Churches.

First church, Racine, E. R. Hyde, pastor, is in the fourth year of what is perhaps the best organized teacher training course found in any church in the state. Supper is followed by a devotional period and Bible study. The church school workers are getting a grounding in the scriptures which cannot be acquired by the occasional conference or school of methods. This is worthy of emulation in every church desirous of building up a strong church school.

W. S. Stewart, pastor, First church, LaCrosse, makes use of automobile phraseology to announce a series of Sunday evening sermons which is attracting wide interest. Among his subjects are "No Parking Here," "No Left Turn," and "Arterial Highway—Stop." These familiar slogans, the guide of motorists, are readily adapted to the rules of the road of life.

Strict use of the chart showing the white and black steps toward the missionary goal has been made by members of Tabernacle church, Milwaukee. The first month of the fiscal year it overstepped the schedule. For one or two summer months it stepped a little short but with October it was a slight margin over half-way up.

Waukesha Baptists are in the midst of a building project which will give them a $22,000 educational plant. Under the direction of A. L. Drake, pastor, who is a state leader in religious education, this church bids fair to take a leading place in that field.

Milwaukee churches had the pleasure of hearing at various services on Nov. 14 a message from Ingram E. Bill, pastor at Rochester, Minn., on the work he is doing there in the hospitals.

Blue Mound, Milwaukee.

At a recent meeting of the county committee of the Milwaukee Council of Churches Baptists were granted the allocation of territory in a rapidly growing section of the city on the Blue Mound road, a leading highway west from the city. The Milwaukee Baptist Union is taking up the challenge and the work is starting under the leadership of Tabernacle church. This community is growing rapidly and with a free hand ought to make a productive field for Baptist work. A civic club has offered temporary quarters for the work until a structure can be erected.

E. A. Spees who was ordained this fall at the Mauston church has accepted a call to the church at Berlin. He began his work, Dec. 1.

Wisconsin Baptists unite in prayer for the recovery of Mrs. A. LeGrand, wife of our superintendent, who is ill at Northwestern hospital, St. Paul. Mrs. W. S. Lincoln of our state force who has been confined to that hospital for some weeks is now convalescing at her home. The Northwestern hospital is filling an ever widening place in the life of Wisconsin people.

The "Pioneers" of Tabernacle church, Milwaukee, were recently hosts to 200 boys at a banquet. These boys came from churches of all kinds from all Milwaukee. This group, under the leadership of Mr. S. W. Bjorklund, holds a first place among such groups in the city. The members have been organized since they were small boys and they are now the age to shave, wear bell-bottomed trousers and occasionally escort the ladies home, but they are still pioneers and leaders in their field. Athletic banners adorn their walls. They are taking turns assisting the adult leader of a younger group of boys.

Official Report of Executive Committee

By W. C. BITTING

THE executive committee of the Northwestern Baptist Convention met in Chicago, Ill., Nov. 18. All the members of the executive committee were present, or regrets were received from those who were absent.

Mr. Ernest Ridgeway of Chicago was appointed to membership in the finance committee to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. J. D. Day. Rev. C. Wallace Petty, Pittsburgh, Pa., was appointed a delegate to the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches. Rev. K. C. MacArthur, Sterling, Mass., Rev. Clarence Bleakney, Newark, N. J., Rev. R. A. Ashworth, Yonkers, N. Y., were appointed messengers to the World Conference on Faith and Order to be held in Lausanne, Switzerland, in August, 1927. Pres. C. A. Barbour, Rochester, N. Y., and Rev. A. T. Fowler, Lawrence, Mass., are messengers ex officio.

Messrs. J. N. Lackey, George Earl, D. B. Purinton, Miss Ruth Richardson and Rev. C. H. Sears were appointed a special committee to consider the advisability of establishing a board of homes and hospitals in accordance with the resolution adopted at Washington.

Messrs. Ray L. Hudson, R. H. Ismon and Orrin R. Judd were appointed a committee on investments.

Messrs. H. N. Spear, M. F. Sanborn and Mrs. MacLeish were appointed to prepare the convention budget for the year 1927-1928.

Messrs. E. H. Rhoades, Jr., John F. Herget, M. P. Boynton, F. E. Taylor and Mrs. C. D. Eulette were appointed a committee on program for the Chicago convention.

The president was requested to preside at all sessions of the Chicago convention, unless he choose to yield the chair to one of the vice-presidents, except during the business sessions of convention boards and cooperating organizations.

The Stevens hotel was designated official headquarters for the Chicago convention.

Rev. J. C. Massee, Boston, Mass., was elected convention preacher and Rev. A. M. Bailey, Seattle, Wash., alternate.

Rev. C. M. Gallup, Providence, R. I., was appointed a member of the committee of nine on the report of the advisory committee to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Mr. A. M. Harris.

The president was authorized to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Mrs. W. A. Montgomery as a delegate to the Federal Council.

The president and Rev. J. C. Massee were appointed fraternal delegates to the Southern Baptist Convention to meet in Louisville, Ky., May 4, 1927.

Rev. W. S. Abernethy, W. W. Everett and R. L. Hudson were appointed a committee to confer with a like committee from the Southern Baptist Convention relative to the advisability of establishing national Baptist headquarters in Washington, D. C.

Secy. W. H. Bowler of the Board of Missionary Cooperation was present and addressed the executive committee upon denominational matters.

The executive committee recommended and urged the finance committee to set aside in the convention budget sufficient funds to provide for a bureau of denominational publicity, the selection of a director of publicity to be referred to the president and Doctor Bowler.

The next meeting of the executive committee will be held in Chicago, Thursday, Mar. 10, 1927, at ten a. m.

with the church, was assisted in the campaign by T. Knudson, state convention missionary, and O. Sivertsteen, La Crosse, Wis.

NOTICE HAS BEEN TAKEN occasionally of a remarkable piece of work being done by Rev. and Mrs. Guy Wimmer at Hutchinson, Kan. In May, 1925, the building was almost completely destroyed

MR. AND MRS. GUY A. WIMMER AND DAUGHTER

Here, There and Everywhere

SEVENTY PEOPLE attended the men's banquet and get-together held Nov. 9, at First church, Spokane, Wash. The women of the church prepared the dinner and the men washed the dishes.

CALVARY CHURCH, Syracuse, N. Y., William S. Terrell, pastor, observed November as missions month. At a special service during this time in commemoration of the ministers and missionaries, laymen presented the claims of the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board.

EVANGELIST E. S. STUCKER reports that in spite of the six months' campaign of evangelism among Northern Baptists the number of calls for special meetings has not exceeded those of any of the past three years.

REV. AND MRS. RALPH W. LEISHER of Lapeer, Mich., were ordained, Oct. 17, at the Lapeer church. J. F. Goodman of Imlay City presided. Parts were taken by O. D. Shay, Flushing; H. E. McGrath, Atlas; T. B. Frary, Lapeer; G. A. Peterson, Grand Blanc; Fred W. Smith, Flint; C. E. Scott, Oxford.

THIRD AVENUE CHURCH, Flint, Mich., has finished a month of intensive evangelistic work. Pastor A. A. Trembert was assisted by P. H. Cady, cartoonist-evangelist of Port Huron.

NORTH CHURCH, Flint, Mich., has concluded successful revival meetings with Miss Daisy Hudson as preacher.

THE EDITORIAL ON "The Kitchenette Apartment and the Family Altar" in the issue of Nov. 27, was in error in the statement that Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Gibbs, Mr. C. S. Keen and Miss Bertha C.

NEW HOME OF FIRST CHURCH, HUTCHINSON, KAN.

Smith are new missionaries. Dr. Geo. A. Huntley is authority for the correction that Mrs. Keen has been a missionary in China since 1902, Doctor and Mrs. Gibbs went to China in 1921 and Miss Smith in 1922. All are filling important positions in the work of Nanking university.

REVIVAL MEETINGS BEGAN at the Kendall (Wis.) church, Nov. 28. Pastor James Mac Owen Wilson, who is in his fifth year later. The building is located on one of the most prominent corners and is the center of population of this city of 27,000 people. Mr. Wimmer's father, and Mrs. Wimmer's father, Rev. I. Bailey, still is, active in the Baptist ministry in Kansas.

THE LAPEER (Mich.) church has completed a successful evangelistic meeting under the leadership of Evangelist R. Leisher.

Baby Chicks For Sale

Barron strain large type purebred White Leghorn baby chicks, $10.50 hundred. Chicks are very strong and stand cool weather better than hot weather.

Everlay strain Brown Leghorns, $11.50 hundred.

Sheppard strain single comb Anconas, $14 hundred.

Owens and Donaldson strain Rhode Island Reds, $14.85 hundred.

Thompsons strain Barred Rocks, $14.85 hundred.

White Rocks, $16 hundred.

All good, healthy, strong purebred guaranteed.

We pay postage charges and guarantee live arrival on all baby chicks. Pullets of any breed listed, $1.50 each.

Cockerels, good size, $3 each. Poultry book on feeding and raising chicks and pullets, $3 postpaid.

The Fulghum Hatchery
Freeburg, Ill.

SAY, DAD! CHUMMY TALKS BETWEEN FATHER AND SON
By Wallace Dunbar Vincent
Talks between father and son on games, sports, duties, habits, qualities and aims. Sixty chapters of meaty stuff—interesting, helpful, informing.
Introduction by Deputy Chief Scout Executive Fisher. $1.50
F. H. REVELL CO., 158 5th Ave., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Want Ads

Chaplain Frank M. Wells, "The Soldier's Evangelist," National Military Hospital, Leavenworth, Kan. Twenty-fifth session open for winter and spring meetings with pastor wanting Bible evangelists. Terms: Entertainment and $100 and up for a two weeks' meeting, according to financial strength of church.

THIRTY-ONE NEW members were enrolled in the Bible school at Central church, Bloomfield, N. J., Harry H. Upton, pastor, during September and October, bringing membership to 279. The school reports excellent financial condition. Six persons were received into the membership of the church during October.

MISS MARY JONES, eighty-five years old, has been a teacher in the Sunday school of First church, Paterson, N. J., for sixty-seven years. Miss Jones was a member of the first choir of the church and was a featured singer at the centennial anniversary held by the church two years ago.

FIRST CHURCH, Aberdeen, S. D., publishes its bulletin for Nov. 14 a resolution in recognition of the five years' service of its pastor, Ansley B. Claypoole, and pledges renewed cooperation in his future work with the church.

LEWIS S. BOWERMAN resigned his pastorate of First church, Casper, Wyo., Nov. 7. His resignation became effective Dec. 1. He has served in Seattle, Salt Lake City and Kansas City, Kan.

C. F. MOFFIT WAS ordained to the gospel ministry at the Addyston (Ohio) church, Oct. 31, on recommendation of a council from the Miami Association.

C. S. TREADWELL has returned as pastor to Kettle Falls, Wash., where he organized the present church eighteen years ago. His first pastorate there lasted two years, after which he served for four years in other fields, then became pastor of the Pleasant Valley church, twelve miles from Kettle Falls. The two churches have been united and Pastor Treadwell is the only Baptist minister within 100 miles.

J. VRADENBURG resigned as pastor of the East Pembroke (N. Y.) church, Nov. 14. He is eighty-two years of age and is in the fifty-eighth year of his ministry. During this time he has held six pastorates, although between pastorates he served as pastoral supply and evangelist. He served the East Pembroke church fifteen years.

WM. P. PEARCE of Bay City, Mich., conducted an impressive two weeks' Bible and prayer institute with First church, Conneaut, Ohio, pastor, P. M. MacKay.

LEON B. SHOREY, until recently director of religious education for the Publication Society's work in North Dakota, began work with the Baptist Temple, Charleston, W. Va., in October as minister of education.

DEAN FOWLER of the Denver Biblical institute and Jesse R. Jones, trombonist, closed a successful two weeks' meeting, Nov. 21, at Freeport, Ill. Pastor I. A. Fox, in addition to his regular work, is conducting community Bible classes in Freeport and in Rockford.

E. V. GOAD, pastor of Berwick (Ill.) church, reports a revival spirit there. Twenty-two members have been received into the church since the close of the Billy Sunday meetings at Monmouth, making a total of thirty-six, sixteen by baptism, during the present pastorate which began Mar. 1.

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES of Cook academy held a special meeting, Nov. 17, to greet Frank W. Padelford, executive secretary of the Board of Education of the Northern Convention, on his official visit to the

Our Schools and Colleges

Denison University
For Men and Women

Nearly a century ago far-sighted men of faith laid the foundations of Denison. The standing purpose then was to furnish a thorough college course under distinctively Christian auspices. That purpose marks the character of this Christian college today.

Leaders for Tomorrow

Re all the advantages of preparatory work in Doane Academy, complete musical training in the conservatory and a comprehensive college curriculum. Well regulated student activities. Moderate expenses. wholesome campus life.

For information address
Secretary Clarence M. Eddy
Granville, Ohio.

Carleton College

Donald John Cowling, D.D., President

OFFERS exceptional training in music, the sciences, forensics, pedagogy, physical education, and art.

Its faculty carries on the noble traditions of its founders.

Its student body lives the democracy of the Middle West.

Its alumni excel in the professions and in design service.

Address: Willard W. Bartlett, Assistant to the President, Carleton College, Northfield, Minnesota

THE PEDDIE SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Contribution of Baptists to the cause of Christian Education.

Sound equipment, strong faculty, democratic spirit, Christian atmosphere.

Emphasis on preparation for college and development of a well-rounded manhood.

Catalog and booklets on request. Address: W. Sweetland, Headmaster, Box B-E, Hightstown, N. J.

Pres. F. J. White of Shanghai Baptist college wrote as of Oct. 20, encouraging news of the school. It has not suffered as some institutions have from the agitation in China. The total enrolment this year is 745, which is actually in excess of the capacity of the school. The chief visible effect of the anti-foreign agitation is the deepening of the religious life among faculty and students.

Prof. Willis A. Chamberlin of the department of modern languages in Denison university, Granville, Ohio, calls attention to the fact that the college authorities of Ohio in those schools of that state which have R. O. T. C. units in military training, strongly express their belief that such training in colleges does not breed militarism, but on the contrary the training has great value as an educational feature. Only recently the Ohio state university and Ohio agricultural experiment station, members of the Ohio Association of Land Grant Colleges have gone on record with other members of the association in strenuous opposition to all efforts to strike down the courses in military instruction. They base their attitude on the reasonableness of the national defense act now in force, on the value of military training in the educational process, on the conviction that the safety of the country must be conserved, on the fact that experience proves the falsity of the claims that military training makes for Prussianism, and on the ground that without certain colleges and universities offering military training as a part of the requirements the republic would be helpless in the event of an unprovoked attack.

OTTAWA UNIVERSITY

(Founded 1865)
Ottawa, Kansas

Member of Association of American Colleges. Member of North Central Association.

Colleges:	Degrees
Arts	A.B.
Sciences	Sc.B.
Music	Mus.B.
Schools:
Home Economics	Sc.B.
Physical Education	Sc.B.

Next semester opens
January 20th, 1927

For catalogue, photo bulletin, and other information write

President Erdmann Smith,
A.M., LL.D.
Box BB, Ottawa, Kansas

BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY

Emory W. Hunt, D.D., LL.D., Pres.

THE COLLEGE

Awards the degrees of B. A., of B. S., in Biology, Education, Chemical, Civil, Electrical and Mechanical Engineering, after four years of work.

THE SCHOOL OF MUSIC

affords instruction in Piano, Pipe Organ, Violin, Voice Culture and Singing, Wind Instruments, History of Music, Harmony, Composition, Theory, Vergil Clavier.

Bucknell aims to develop men and women who will apply Christian ideals in every department of human endeavor.

For catalogue and information, address

H. Walter Holter, Registrar,
Lewisburg, Pa.

COLORADO WOMAN'S COLLEGE

Two years of Liberal Arts, Home Economics, Art, Expression, Piano, Organ, Violin, and Voice. For information write to

ROBERT H. LYNN,
Acting President
Capitol Hill Station Denver, Colorado

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Immanuel Bldg., Chicago.

"Tonight we are to have the field editor in a brief sketch entitled, 'A week in Northern California.' This is Mr. Cress:

"Good evening friends. Greetings from the Golden Gate through which tonight I saw the sun sink into the hazy depths of the Pacific—ocean of peace. I am a guest for the evening in the home of Dr. J. W. Johnson of Berkeley Baptist Divinity school. His residence is on the hills back of Berkeley overlooking San Francisco bay. The panorama of city, mountains and sea is one of the finest in America.

"At the invitation of Dr. C. W. Brinstad I am in Northern California for an intensive tour of sixteen days. Every detail has been carefully arranged in advance. Conferences and inspirational meetings in every association will bring together pastors and delegates from most of our churches. The direct objective is to add 1000 new subscriptions to THE BAPTIST and incidentally to stress the reading of Missions and the State Convention bulletin. Our team consists of Dr. Clarke Bancroft, convention superintendent of rural work, Rev. P. A. McDiarmid of Sona Bata, Congo Belge, Africa, and myself.

"We began on Monday, Nov. 1, at Sacramento. There was a supper conference in Calvary church of which Rev. A. W. Brown is pastor. Rev. Bryant Wilson of First church and two other pastors and their people were present. The initial meeting was one of happy enthusiasm and a whole-hearted approval of the campaign and its objectives in actual new subscriptions.

"Tuesday we were at Chico where our church has passed through deep waters but now moves forward under the inspiring leadership of Pastor Morony. There was an afternoon regional conference, dinner and inspirational evening meeting. The church adopted a worthy goal for all three periodicals, doubled its list the same evening and voted to canvass its entire membership at once.

"Wednesday we were at Willows. Here Pastor J. C. Garth is in his fourteenth year and going strong. He is greatly loved by his people. Three other churches with their pastors united in the afternoon and evening program. All heartily voted to cooperate in the suggested goals. The shifting population in this part of the state has made it hard for our churches to carry on. But a better day is at hand.

"Thursday we were at Napa. Several churches were represented, among them Santa Rosa of which Rev. J. F. Blodgett, for many years secretary of Wyoming, is pastor. Santa Rosa has one of the largest lists of readers of THE BAPTIST in all the churches north of San Francisco. Pastor Blodgett has added 100 new members to his church during the past year.

"Friday found us in Oakland with the honored president of the Northern Baptist Convention, Dr. J. W. Brougher. In the afternoon conference, supper fellowship and evening meeting, nearly all the pastors of the San Francisco bay region were present. The tide of enthusiasm rose to its highest level as these men and women voted unanimously to express their allegiance to THE BAPTIST and to enlist a reading constituency larger than has ever been realized. Dr. C. E. Tingley, Doctor Brougher, Dr. E. A. Hanley, Doctor West of First church, San Francisco, and many others added the weight of their endorsement to Doctor Brinstad's ideals and practical aims for the three denominational periodicals. The fellowship in this conference was inspiring. Doctor Brougher is a tower of strength in Oakland and loved by his fellows. He suggested the goal for THE BAPTIST in his own church far above the goal set for the convention. He is a generator of contagious faith.

"Our first week closed on Sunday, Nov. 7, with special services in four of the bay city churches. These were with Pastors Hanley in Berkeley, West in San Francisco, Gould in Oakland and Hansen in Alameda. Thus closed the first lap of the tour with results to which our faith had not carried us. One church set as its goal an objective equal to one-fourth our goal for the entire convention and this church and pastor have the reputation of getting their program across.

"Special mention should be made of the part taken by Rev. P. A. McDiarmid from the Congo. Coming as he does direct from Sona Bata where during the past five years over 10,000 have been baptized into that one church alone, he has fired the imagination of his hearers, brought them afresh into the presence of the wonder-working Christ and lifted the whole denominational program into the realm of spiritual triumph.

"Secretary Brinstad has set a new ideal for kingdom work. In this snappy campaign, covering sixteen days of intense missionary and spiritual power, he has planned to present the denominational periodicals, all of them together, not as a luxury to be enjoyed by a favored few but as a vitalizing source of information and inspiration which all require if the maximum is to be given to the Master."

"WCOY now signs off. Get the booster spirit of California. Good night."

school. It was voted at this meeting to formulate plans for the enlargement of the school plant, including the construction of a gymnasium and the rehabilitation of the entire plant. A committee of five was appointed to study the question and to report facts to a meeting, Dec. 14. At this time a definite drive will be planned for raising money.

LOYD P. BLOODWORTH closed a two weeks' revival meeting with East Park church, Decatur, Ill., Nov. 14, John B. Bell, pastor, which resulted in 102 conversions. Since Jan. 1 325 new members have been received into the church.

WILLIAM S. DIXON conducted a meeting at the London Heights church, Kansas City, Kan., which resulted, Nov. 14, in fifty-five persons coming forward for consecration and sixteen to confess Christ. Norwich, Kan., followed the Kansas City meeting.

FIRST CHURCH, Bridgewater, Mass., E. C. Prime, pastor, reports the largest prayer meetings in years, and record attendance at both Sunday services, Nov. 7. Pastor Prime preached at Warren, R. I., Oct. 31.

AFTER A SHORT pastorate at North church, Brockton, Mass., Neil MacLean left in November for Florenceville, N. B., Canada. The change was occasioned by the illness of Mr. MacLean's eldest son.

WARREN AVE. CHURCH, Brockton, Mass., dedicated, Nov. 7, a new beacon light in the tower of the church, carrying a 500 watt light. An alternating motor flashes the light on and off at regular intervals. Evangelist and Mrs. Mills assisted Pastor V. Broderick in a ten days' evangelistic campaign in November.

H. H. POWELL of Kingston, Mass., is the stated supply at Central church, Middleboro, Mass., while that church is pastorless.

F. T. LITTORIN, pastor at Whitman, Mass., has become editor of "Old Colony Folks" succeeding F. T. Bailey of North Scituate.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN IMRIE, evangelistic singers, report a successful revival in November with First church, Pierce City, Mo., resulting in fifty conversions.

OCT. 14 A COUNCIL was called jointly by the Rose Hill church (American) and the Rose Hill Mexican church of Los Angeles, Calif., for the purpose of ordaining the Mexican pastor, Jose Alamanza, a student in the Spanish-American Baptist seminary of Los Angeles, and of recognizing the Mexican church as a regular Baptist church. Dr. James A. Francis was moderator and Rev. Wm. E. Appleberry, clerk. Fifty-six delegates from twenty-six churches participated. The ordination sermon was preached by Rev. A. F. Cordova, pastor of First Mexican church, Los Angeles.

PASTOR AND MRS. JOHN G. BRIGGS, Woodland Park church, St. Paul, announce the marriage of their only daughter, Helen Willard, to Keith R. Fawcett. Both young people are graduates of the University of Minnesota and will make their home in St. Paul.

For Foreign Mission Service

There is urgent need for:

AN EDUCATIONALIST:

For superintendent of the Normal School, Rangoon, Burma. He should have special training in education and be familiar with normal school methods. It is desirable that he have the degree of Master of Arts.

A PRINTER:

For the Mission Press, Rangoon, Burma. He must be thoroughly experienced in all branches of the printing business including both technical and commercial aspects. College graduate preferred.

All candidates should be under 30, in vigorous health, married or unmarried, members of Baptist churches and of unimpeachable Christian character.

Correspondence with candidates is considered strictly confidential.

Write to P. H. J. Lerrigo, Candidate Secretary,

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

276 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Riley A. Vose

An Appreciation

By R. E. FARRIER, SECRETARY '85

UR college classmate and dear friend, Riley A. Vose, D.D., was called from earthly service, Friday, Nov. 11. For 9 years in Colgate academy, and four years in Colgate university we were together in studies, sports and fellowship. It was my privilege to know him as an earnest student, a loyal college fellow, a Christian gentleman.

He was graduated from Colgate in 1885 and Hamilton Theological seminary in 1888. He married Miss Florence Davis of Syracuse, N. Y., whom he leaves loved with their four children, three sons and a daughter. During commencement of 1910 Colgate conferred upon him an honorary degree of doctor of divinity.

Doctor Vose rendered a large service to the denomination. While in the ministry he supplied Emmanuel church, Syracuse, N. Y. He served faithfully Kingston Tabernacle, Utica, and the Owego churches in New York State; North Church, Cambridge, Mass., and Clinton Avenue church, Newark, N. J. In all of these churches he was recognized as a strong and virile preacher of the gospel, a wise counsellor and a devoted and loving pastor.

While in Newark his health began to fail. Like all of us, when sickness comes upon us, he yearned for the home where he enjoyed health and boyhood vigor. Therefore he turned to his birthplace, Spencer, N. Y., and there preached as permanent supply, making a long, patient and heroic struggle against weakening physical powers, while his mental and spiritual powers were unabated till the end came.

The members of the class of 1885, Colgate university, join in expressing their appreciation of his noble fellowship and devoted life.

The Saving Sense

The reason that women have cleaner minds than men, volunteers the New York Sun, is because they change them more often.

Mr. Stepalloverherfeet: "May I have the last dance with you?"

Miss Lightfoot: "You've just had it."

A young and nervous curate was announcing that the rector would return on the following Sunday. He did so in the following flowery but rather confusing words: "I am happy to announce that your 'shoving leopard' will be with you next Sunday and will occupy the pulpit at both services."—Churchman.

"Henry," said the teacher of the geography class, "you may tell us about the Caucasian race."

"I can't. I didn't see it. I went to the ball game," replied Henry.

Deacon Brown is not always fortunate in expressing himself—or is he? The other day as our pulpit supply for two weeks was about to leave, Deacon Brown, thanking him for his services, concluded with: "A worse preacher would have done all right for us, sir, if we'd known where to find him."

Clark's Famous Cruises

By CUNARD-ANCHOR LINES new oil burners at rates including hotels, guides, drives and fees.

62 days, $600 to $1700
MEDITERRANEAN

ss "Transylvania" sailing Jan. 29

23rd cruise, including Madeira, Lisbon, Spain (Madrid—Cordova—Granada), Algiers, Tunis, Carthage, Athens, Constantinople, 15 days Palestine and Egypt, Italy, the Riviera, Europe stop-overs.

7th Round the World Cruise
Jan. 19; 121 days, $1250 to $2900.

3d Norway—Mediterranean Cruise
July 2; 52 days, $600 to $1300.

FRANK C. CLARK, Times Bldg., N. Y.

PIPE ORGANS

of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.

Electric Organ blowing suits for organs of any make. Write, stating which catalog is desired.

Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO., HILLSBORO, OHIO

BLYMYER MEMORIAL CHURCH BELLS

A TRIBUTE TO YOUR LOVED ONE ELOQUENT - ENDURING - INEXPENSIVE
THE JOHN B. MORRIS FOUNDRY CO.
Dupl. 12 Est. 1832 Cincinnati Ohio

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

Bibles Testaments Portions

Of Every Kind
In Every Language
For Gift and Home Use
For Missionary Purposes
New York New York Colored Philadelphia
Washington Richmond Cincinnati Chicago
Dallas Denver San Francisco

CARRY IT ALWAYS WITH YOU!

DR. R. A. TORREY'S

Gist of the Lesson

ORIGINAL "GIST" FEATURES

International S. S. Lesson Text in Full; Full Exposition; Important Words and Phrases Emphasized; Condensation of Thought; Changes in Revised Version Noted; Accepted Dates and Places; Prayer Meeting Topics, etc. Flexible Binding, 35c postpaid.

F. H. REVELL CO., 158 Fifth Ave., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Communion Ware of Quality

Materials: ALUMINUM OF SILVER PLATE Individual Glasses

Best Prices. Send for Illustrated Catalog

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.

1701-1703 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Pews, altars and pulpits from the largest exclusive church furniture factory. Write for catalog and particulars. Manitowoc Church Furniture Company, Waukesha, Wisconsin."

New Books

There's a Land that Is Fairer than Day, Fred H. McCulloch. New York: Doran. $1.

Suitable for a gift to one passing through the shadows of a great bereavement. It is an appealing attempt to express the hope of personal immortality in story form. The story is brief, well told and so homelike in its conception that one feels after reading it that the whole universe is one and death is but a transition from a land of separations to a land of eternal reunion.

—JOHN EARL.

fiber either of body or spirit. Wisconsin soil where they didn't "have to sharpen sheep's noses so'st they can git at the grass between the stuns" won over the promise of gold.

Primitive Wisconsin as pictured by Mr. Garland shows up strong pioneer characters, charming in their simplicity and strength of character. Here Richard finds the girl of his heart and marries her.

The second section of the "Trail-trations and a panoramic jacket picture that depicts the waiting passengers at a railroad station, then, about 1850, still much of a novelty. These cuts are all in black and white and suggest the pleasing old-style woodcut.

—J. D. BRENTON.

The Holy Bible, Illustrated; The New Testament, Illustrated. New York: Oxford University Press.

The teacher's anxious thought of what to give as a Christmas present to the members of a Sunday-school class of boys or of girls or of young people is relieved by the publication of the Holy Bible illustrated and the New Testament, the Oxford University Press, New York, or may be purchased through the American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, Pa., or at any of its branch houses. If one orders by number, the Bible is 03311 and costs $1.65; the New Testament for young people's is 01200, $1.25, and the New Testament for boys and girls is 081, sixty-five cents. These books are handsomely bound in cloth, of a convenient size and enriched with pictures, some of which are in colors. The type is legible, the text is the authorized version and the illustrations are works of art.

—JOHN A. EARL.

The Achievement of the Master, by Herbert R. Purinton and Sadie Brackett Costello. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

Professor Purinton of Bates college is the author of two books on Biblical literature, designed for college classes and for personal study, and dealing with the Old and New Testaments from the standpoint of English literature.

In collaboration with a church school teacher of long experience, he now publishes this study of the life of Jesus, the product of years of work with high school and college students. "Having discovered the historical facts, the students have been led to realize their spiritual meaning by a study of the best pictures and books, and to apply the principles thus discovered to actual cases in modern social and individual life."

The sources used are chiefly Mark, the Sermon on the Mount, and the letters of Paul, "the three documents that present

HAMLIN GARLAND AT HIS SUMMER HOME.

Trail-makers of the Middle Border, by Hamlin Garland. New York: Macmillan. $2.50.

"Trail-Makers of the Middle Border," narrated in the clear simple style that has placed Hamlin Garland's work in the class of "real" literature, is, in Part One, the story of a family living in Oxford county, Me., ("An austere place for children in 1837. Laughter had small place in many of its homes") "close under the shoulders of the White mountains," who migrated to the new state of Wisconsin. The lure of this fertile, many-acred Middle West discounted for Richard Graham and his parents even the gold lure of California which was drawing many of their neighbors. Richard himself was of the type that might have encountered equally well the hardships of the gold quest or the wrestling of a farm from the fertile timbered lands of the Middle Border, for he was the driver of a span of oxen when he was but nine years of age. Being reared in a community where the chief diversions of the year are "General Training Day and protracted meetings in the church," does not tend to softness of makers" is given over to Richard's part in the Civil war, and presents General Grant realistically and lovably, as the author of "Ulysses Grant, His Life and Character" could not fail to do.

Perhaps the feature of this book that at first sight focuses the attention is the sympathy manifested between the author of the text and the illustrator, who is Constance Garland. Each chapter has its headpiece and its tailpiece, in each case suggestive of the contents of that chapter. There are also full-page illus-

From "Trail-makers of the Middle Border" by Hamlin Garland

SERMONS in ACTION Henry T. Sell's Five-Minute Series VOL. III "Dr. Sell is an expert in five-minute sermons for boys and girls. He knows how to hold up the mirror to every-day life. There is action, quick action in every talk."—Boston Transcript.

For Young Folks Vol. I. Sermons in Stories Vol. II. Sermons in Objects 3 Volumes. Each, Cloth, $1.25

F. H. REVELL CO., 158 5th Ave., N.Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Edgar A. Guest's New Book The Light of Faith

Joy comes to him who reads this book. The light of Edgar Guest's faith shines through this lovely, simple verse. It isn't solemn or preachy, but it is helpful and charged with high courage. A book for everyone to read and enjoy.

Other Books by Mr. Guest

- Heap o' Livin'
- Just Folks
- The Passing Throng
- Poems of Patriotism
- When Day Is Done
- The Path to Home
- Rhymes of Childhood
- Library Cloth$1.25
- Library Fabricoid 2.50
- Pocket Cloth 1.25
- Red Morocco 2.00
- Hand tooled Pocket Fabricoid 2.50

At All Bookstores
Or sent direct by Scribner & Lee, Publishers, Chicago

earliest information" concerning him. It is obvious that any study of Daviour's life which excludes Luke John has a limited value and presents a complete picture of the Lord of the Church. Nevertheless, "The Achievement of a Master" is a good piece of work and one deserving the attention of the student and college teachers of the New Testament.

—GEO. E. BURLINGAME.

Amusements, by Phipps, Roberts
Phipps. Nashville, Tenn.: Cokesbury Press. $1.50.

"Amusements" is a challenging book, especially so because it is conversative, comparatively few of its twenty chapters being devoted to de-votee amusements. The author drops into the midst of a familiar world—that is amusement mad, and pays his tribute in passing to such frivolities as modern dance, the race track, card playing, and the theater. In discussing the subject he uses a quotation from Bishop Doane to make his point: "But for the fashion, the fear of society and the lack of taste for intellectual and spiritual occupations no Christian would be patronizing or defending the theater." He minces no words in discussing the dance.

The author's contention is that the church should educate its people as to what are wholesome and helpful amusements, see that such amusements are supplied, and have a definite doctrine or opinion, taking a positive stand on the subject of amusements. The hours of relaxation are the times of great temptation. The church must face the problem of claiming and controlling one of the greatest of human interests—that of amusement.

The book takes up the matter of organizing and supervising athletic activities and recreational features for boys and girls, young people and adults. It stimulates thought on a pressing modern problem, but does not say the last word, by any means. Its brief chapter on "The Home as a Center of Recreation" is a good one.

—HERBERT W. HINES.

The Baptist Home Library No. 1. Nashville, Tenn.: Baptist Sunday-School Board. $2.95.

Something out of the ordinary is this "Home Library," published by the Sunday-school board of the Southern Convention, in that for about the price usually paid for a single volume may be had a complete library—or seven books in five attractive, cloth-bound volumes, printed in clear type on a good grade of paper. The library is planned to meet the needs of the various members of the home. It consists of "The Baptist Spirit," by I. J. Van Ness and "Fundamentals of Faith," by W. D. Nowlin, bound in one volume; "A Missionary Adventure," by S. L. Ginsburg; "Mabel Clement," a story, by J. M. Sallee; "Gospel Messages," which contains "The Tears of Jesus" and "Prepare to Meet God," by L. R. Scarborough; and "The Home Story Book," containing fifty-five stories for children. The library is an unusually interesting collection of the works of some of our best writers and it is being issued at an opportune time of the year. What could be better as a gift for a family than a library that all will use?

—J. D. BROWN.

AN INCOME THAT NEVER FAILS

Gifts by the Annuity plan support world evangelization and assure you an income as long as you live.

When remembering the national societies in your will please use exact corporate names as follows:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M. D., Home Secretary (re annuities); George B. Huntington, Treasurer, (re wills); 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society, Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th Street, New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society, George L. Estabrook, Treasurer, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention, E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, Frank W. Padel-ford, D.D., Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

Annuities

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these Single and Double Contracts will be sent to you on request.

"Where your heart is, there should your treasure go."

The New Way—

A SAFE, SOUND and SENSIBLE plan of financing enables you to Build, Remove Debts or Carry Out your Endowment Program.

Over $125,000,000 has been raised for religious enterprises by members of our Associated Organizations.

Now is the time to arrange for your 1927 Financial Program.

HEDRICK, MARTS & LUNDY, Inc.

Harriman National Bank Building,
527 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Members of the Joint Board of Campaign Counsel
and Planning.

Write for a copy of "Financing Philanthropy".

CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Why Not List

THE BAPTIST

as a

CHRISTMAS PRESENT?

No Greater Value
Is Offered

For the Money

Only $2.50

The Gift Will Repeat Itself
Fifty-Two Times

or

Once a Week for 52 Weeks

Subscribe for your young people just starting a home of their own.

Subscribe for your home town reading-room or for the Y. M. or Y. W. C. A.

Subscribe for your old pastor, who will prize your gift and the giver.

Subscribe for the prisoner in the penitentiary. Select names furnished.

Subscribe for worthy people on our lists unable to pay for the paper.

Subscribe for people in your own church who cannot afford to pay for it.

Subscribe for your pastor, if he does not take the paper.

Subscribe for your Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages.

THE BAPTIST

Is acknowledged by competent judges to be one of the very best religious weekly papers published. It covers each week all the salient and vital things in life in tabloid form. Its main object is to advance the kingdom of God in the world through Baptist organization and service and in loyalty to Baptist faith and practice. Cosmopolitan in its sweep and universal in its sympathy it takes in the whole world.

A SPECIAL SERVICE

During the month of January THE BAPTIST will publish special matter in connection with the aerial world tour described in our editorial columns this week. Bundles of the paper will be mailed to one address each week of the tour on receipt of money accompanying the order at the rate of five cents a copy.

Your Own Paper

THE BAPTIST

Your Own Paper

2320 S. Michigan Ave. Chicago, Illinois

Folks, Facts and Opinion

(Continued from page 1336)

For many years Mrs. Florence Christopher Thomas had been active in Christian work. She served fifteen years as state director of eastern Massachusetts, and then as president of New England district. 1914-1915 she devoted to missionary work among the Italians of East Boston. In 1924 she accepted service as Christian Americanization missionary. In carrying out the work of enlisting volunteers, Mrs. Thomas slipped and fractured her hip. Her death, Nov. 16, at Brockton, Mass., came as a shock to friends who believed she was making a slow recovery. Mrs. Thomas' death is a distinct loss to Christian work, particularly in New England district.

An item appearing recently in Folks, Facts and Opinion questioning the strictures on the abbreviated skirt now in fashion evidently stirred up a protest on the part of some of the good friends of THE BAPTIST. One of these "protestants" voices the real situation when he writes in a courteous letter his reaction to the aforesaid news item and says in closing: "In the matter of dress as well as habits, the editor of a religious paper is well within his rights," and then suggests that the length of the skirt should be governed not by extreme fashion but by due regard for that modesty which has always been the chief element in the charm of a true lady.

Disciples of Christ have been engaged in a keen controversy among themselves, somewhat similar to the fundamentalist-modernist controversy in other denominations. After years of maneuvering between parties, the matter seemed to come to a clear and decisive issue at the recent national convention of the Disciples at Memphis. Reports from two such extreme points of view as those of the Christian Century, liberal, and the Christian Standard, conservative, indicate that the party which has been criticising the alleged liberal policy of the boards, demanding official resignations and threatening revolt, was decisively defeated when the questions at issue came to a test vote.

(Continued on page 1363)

Notes on the Lesson for
Dec. 19CHRISTMAS LESSON: THE SAVIOUR'S
BIRTHLesson Text: Luke 2:8-20. Golden Text:
Luke 2:10

The lesson in course is "Samuel the Just Judge," but an alternate lesson suggested. We take the alternate. The birth of Jesus is the greatest natal event in the world's history. Bethlehem is mortal. Luke lingers over the story the nativity with genuine human interest, and it is not without significance that to a Christian physician we owe a large part the gospel of the infancy and boyhood of Jesus.

The Gray

On the gray background of the commonplace Luke paints the glory of a new dawn. Matthew, who had kings in mind when he wrote his gospel, steers away from the commonplace to an atmosphere laden with the fragrance of frankincense and radiant with the presence of princes. But Luke is the evangelist of the neglected poor, the enslaved woman and the defenseless child. It is therefore natural to read in the words of this literary physician: "There were shepherds in the same country abiding in the field and keeping watch by night over their flock." Little did they think as they gazed under the stars on that eventful night peering out into the semi-darkness, that heavenly messengers were close awaiting the signal to sing: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased." The shepherds were seeking nothing, expecting nothing out of the ordinary. They were types of the masses of people throughout the ages who, content to their duty without the thrills of romance and discovery, have been visited at times by the seeking God and have been given a heavenly vision of more than ordinary significance.

The Glory

It is the high value of the Bible that it brings the glory into the gray of human life. The Eternal walks along the common footpaths of time and turns them into royal highways. The supernatural rises above the natural, enriches the natural and reveals what is logically natural on a plane far above our present understanding or practice. In the sentence that we read of an angel of the Lord standing by the shepherds, are words, "And the glory of the Lord shone round about them." The angel of the Lord and the glory of the Lord are as the sun and the sunbeam. In the light of the glory the shepherds sought for the meaning of the heavenly vision and found it in the commonplace of a stable and a manger. Thus the gray followed the glory as the glory followed the gray. Only as we come to the nativity and walk with Jesus from his birth in Bethlehem to his birth from the tomb can we glorify the gray of human life with the radiance of the Eternal.

FOR THE INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS

TARBELL'S
Teachers' Guide for 1927

"Stands out infinitely superior to anything ever attempted. It redeems the International System."
—G. Campbell Morgan, D.D.

$1.90

(Postpaid, $2.00)

At all Booksellers, or

F. H. REVELL CO., 158 Fifth Ave., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

HERE ARE IMPORTANT SCRIBNER BOOKS FOR HOLIDAY GIFTS

The Silver Spoon

By John Galsworthy

"I had just finished three improbable but exciting detective stories, and I found 'The Silver Spoon' more difficult to lay down than any of them."—William Lyon Phelps. $2.00

Cynthia Asquith's
The Treasure Ship

This work of famous authors and illustrators is a superb book for boys and girls. Among the contributors of verse and prose are John Galsworthy, J. M. Barrie and A. A. Milne. $2.50

The Golden Key

By Henry van Dyke

"These are all stories of deliverance from some kind of peril or perplexity or bondage," says Dr. van Dyke. A superb gift book. Cloth, $2.00; leather, $3.00

Our Times: THE TURN OF THE CENTURY

By Mark Sullivan

This unusual history is a book for every home. It will be an indispensable book for your Christmas gift list. Readers of middle years find especial delight in it.

610 pages. 213 illustrations. $5.00

These Sayings of Mine

By Lloyd C. Douglas

This strikingly original interpretation of the teachings of Jesus is making its appeal to all kinds of readers. $1.50

The Children's Bible

Arranged by Henry A. Sherman and Charles Foster Kent

A perfect Bible for children—the result of years of study. Thirty full-page illustrations in full color and duotone. Sixth printing. $3.50

The Reconstruction of Belief

By the Right Reverend Charles Gore, D.D.

This single volume contains the three related works, "Belief in God," "Belief in Christ," and "The Holy Spirit and the Church." $2.75

Dr. Gore's New Book

Can We Then Believe?

Dr. Gore here supplements his series by a book in which he helps clear the mind confused by recent controversies. $2.00

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

ols, Facts and Opinion

(Continued from page 1362)

The great tulip trees of the original forests of the Ohio valley have disappeared, but one giant tree of the species is reported still in Illinois which measures twenty-three feet in girth and 100 feet in height.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate reports that with one exception every fall conference of the M. E. church reported unanimous and universal subsidence in service giving. "World service" at that church is something like "misery cooperation" among Baptists. The single exception was the Southwestern mission, scattered and weak, in every charge and the mission as a whole showed gains. Score a victory for the Spanish Methodists.

The League of Evangelical Students began the publication of a quarterly journal under the title, "The Evangelicalist." It is devoted largely to a review of "modernism." It states the minimum qualifications for membership in the league: "Faith in the Bible as the inspired word of God and acceptance of the fundamental truths of the Christian religion, such as the Trinity, the virgin birth of Christ, his divine and human nature, his substitutionary atonement, his resurrection from the dead and his coming again."

The Burma Missionary Convention, an annual indigenous Christian gathering, was held at Toungoo for five days beginning Oct. 20. The local Christians entertained sixty missionaries and more than 2500 native Christians and other guests.

A jolt under the ribs to awaken the Baptists of Tennessee comes from the fist of the Baptist and Reflector. It reminds them that on the basis of comparative ability they are not doing one-fifth as well toward supporting their Baptist state paper as their fathers did, and warns them that meanwhile "Russellites, holy rollers, seventh-day adventists, Campbellites, mormons, Christian scientists and Catholics are sowing our state down with their literature." The crop from that sowing will presently give Baptists plenty of food for reflection.

Ford hall forum still holds the place of priority and preeminence among the forums of the country. Ability has always been a sine qua non for a place on its platform. But this might be true while losing every trace of the spirit of the forum. What Ford hall has preserved inviolate is the principle of a fair, open and democratic consideration of all points of view upon any and all subjects that have vital interest. Think of welcoming to the platform such representatives of antagonistic and extreme views as Roger Baldwin, Noel Sargent, Morris Hilquitt and Dhan Gopal Mukerji.

Among the audible voices calling for real and practical disarmament is that of the Alabama Baptist. "Why may not civilized nations disarm themselves and arm a kind of international police force?" it inquires, and continues to express the hope that the world will "come to it after awhile, as there is no other course to pursue apart from destruction."

From Paris comes the news through the Jewish telegraphic agency that Messrs. Claude and Boucheret, French scientists, have discovered a process of producing from the sun's rays illimitable sources of energy at small cost. If now they will devise a process for producing enough common sense among men to enable human beings to utilize such energy without killing off a few millions, the new process may be an untold blessing to the world. But it is dangerous to commit power to devils and dolts.

Gordon Hurlbutt points out in the Baptist Advance a curious Baptist inconsistency. Baptism and the Lord's Supper he says have equally the sanction of positive injunctions of Jesus. Many Baptist churches require baptism in order to membership but leave the communion optional. Mr. Hurlbutt reasons that the church which requires its members to be baptized ought also for the sake of consistency to require their participation in the Lord's Supper. His logic is "respectfully submitted."

Recent Books of Outstanding Worth

Growing a Soul

By Matthew T. Andrews

Fourteen sermons that throb with the convictions and purposes that gave them birth. They are more than illustrations of method, they are types of effective address and appeal. Cloth, $1.25 net

The Brightening Cloud

By Russell H. Conwell

A remarkably interesting study in the Ninth Chapter of John. Charmingly written in Doctor Conwell's most pleasing style. Cloth, $1.00 net

Seams of Glory

By Philip Wendell Crannell

A series of thirty-four practical religious essays. Cloth, $1.50 net

Forest Friends

By H. R. Evans

Refreshing tales from the North Woods. Vivid, intimate nature stories of Animals, Birds, and Fish from the valleys of the Pacific Coast by one who has spent six years among the scenes of which he writes. Fifteen full-page illustrations from original photographs. A splendid Gift-book for young or old. Cloth, $1.50 net

Baptist City Planning

By Charles Hatch Sears

The outcome of a study undertaken by a committee of one hundred and fifty Baptists. Cloth, $1.00 net

Bible Dramas in the Pulpit

By Perry J. Stackhouse

Here are eleven drama sermons on familiar themes that have had the test of actual use. Cloth, $1.25 net

Bible Object Book

By C. Herbert Woolston

Illustrated. Approach to mind and heart through eye-gate is the idea Doctor Woolston emphasizes in these pages. Some well-known principles of magic and mechanics have been made preachers of morals and religion. Cloth, $1.75 net

Pillars of Gold

By Mitchell Bronk

A collection of charming sketches of Christian people, places and experiences. Here is variety—from the home of Francis of Assisi to Jacob Stainer and his violins; from an oxcart on the way to a New England Meeting-house to Rheims Cathedral. Cloth, $1.50 net

The Playtime Guide Book

By Frederic K. Brown

The author aims to present a practical graded course in play such as will help church workers to forestall the evils of wrong methods of recreation and capture the play spirit for God. Nearly one hundred games are described. Cloth, $1.50 net

Church Work with Intermediates (A JUDSON TRAINING MANUAL)

By Elizabeth M. Finn

First is presented a study of the intermediate, then is discussed the construction and presentation of a program of instruction, the pupils' own participation, organized play, worship plans and programs, adult leadership, and finally the organization of the intermediate department. Cloth, $1.25 net

FOR MISSION STUDY

All Missionary Books for Study or Reading Courses, whether published by the Society or not, can be supplied promptly by our nearest branch.

Send for Circular

The Second Century of Baptist Foreign Missions

By William B. Lippard

A careful, comprehensive survey of the development of Baptist foreign missions from 1914 to 1925. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents

Early Baptist Missionaries and Pioneers. (Volume I)

By W. S. Stewart

Adoniram Judson and Ann Hasseltine, Jonathan M. Peck and Isaac McCoy, and others who wrought abroad and on the American frontier, are shown in narratives of striking appeal. Cloth, $1.50

Early Baptist Missionaries and Pioneers. (Volume II)

By W. S. Stewart

Brief accounts of men and women who have been prominent in mission work at home and abroad, but whose stories must often be sought out with difficulty. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.50

The Baptist Family in Foreign Mission Fields

By Nellie G. Prescott

Through a series of letters the author sets forth the different phases of mission work, such as evangelism, medical missions, industrial missions. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 60 cents

With Christ in Assam

By E. Elizabeth Vickland

Miss Vickland's chapters will enable the reader to gain a more penetrating understanding of the spirit and the results of that which Christian missions are seeking to bring to pass among India's masses. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.50

God's Dynamite; or, Changing a World by Prayer

By P. H. J. Lerrigo

The story of one mission station in each of eight countries is told, showing the part of faith's prayer in leading to its occupation and development. Illustrated. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents

MISS APPLGARTH'S POPULAR BOOKS

Merry-Go-Round

A pilgrim's progress through mission fields around the world is contained in this book of stories, programs for special occasions, activity outlines, memory hymns and Bible verses, handwork, posters, games. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.50 net

A China Shepherdess

Twenty-two Missionary Stories,
Ready to Tell

The work and results of a missionary school in an inland Chinese town will be understood and appreciated by those who read or hear these chapters. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.75 net

Friday's Footprints

Missionary stories, told by a master of storytelling who has so coordinated her work that to read her chapters is to take a personally conducted tour around the world of missionary interest. Cloth, $1.50 net

The home office and six branches of your Publication Society are well equipped to supply all of your needs, not only for Books, Bibles, and Testaments, but for everything required in the Church and Sunday School. Send for Catalogs.

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY

1701-1703 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia

16 Ashburton Place, Boston
125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

313 W. Third St., Los Angeles
1107 McGee St., Kansas City, Mo.

ORDER FROM OUR NEAREST HOUSE

439 Burke Bldg., Seattle
223 Church St., Toronto

Volume VII

December 18, 1926

No. 46

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

Courtesy Mrs. Marie Grove

Folks, Facts and Opinion

Bloor Street Baptist church, Toronto, is no more. The old building has been sold and a new house will be erected on a new site, the whole to cost $600,000. The new church will bear the name of Yorkminster Baptist church. Rev. W. A. Cameron, well known in the United States, will continue to serve as pastor.

A telegram announcing the acceptance of the unanimous call extended to Dr. M. E. Dodd of Shreveport, La., by the Temple church of Los Angeles to succeed Dr. J. Whitcomb Brouger as pastor, was received by THE BAPTIST, Dec. 9. J. F. Elwell, a member of the pulpit committee which negotiated with Doctor Dodd to bring about this happy consummation, signed the telegram and added that a largely attended prayer meeting on Dec. 8 in the Temple received the announcement with great joy and satisfaction. The church feels that God is leading and all concerned are looking forward to a happy ministry.

Dedicating infants as a practice has several angles of interest. A. C. Hanna, pastor of Immanuel church, Insein, tells of going to a home to dedicate a child, and finding both parents absent. It leads him to inquire what the dedication does to or for a child. Who dedicates? He thinks that the act is performed not by the church or the minister, but by the parents, who thereby acknowledge their parental responsibility for the right training of the child and promise to fulfill it. And that is all, he thinks. It might be helpful to ascertain somewhat definitely what the dedication of infants in those Baptist churches that practice it actually means.

The organized effort of the local committee of arrangements for the Northern Convention to bring 25,000 delegates and visitors to Chicago to the convention from May 30-June 5, 1927, is meeting with such a universal response that all who plan to attend the convention are urged to make their reservations as early as possible. The new Stevens hotel has made a special rate for the period of the convention. It is the largest hotel in the world, having 3000 rooms, each with a bath. Two in a room is the rule at the reduced rates. Reservations are recorded by the hotel management as they are received, and already more than 1500 reservations have been registered. There are many other good hotels in Chicago and a full list will be published officially later. But all who plan to make the Stevens hotel their stopping place during the days of the convention are requested by Dr. Johnston Myers, executive secretary of the Greater Northern Convention, to make their reservations now.

The next convocation orator at the University of Chicago, Dec. 21, will be Hon. Katherine Hancock Goode, a member of the Illinois legislature from the city of Chicago, whose subject will be "Woman's Stake in Government."

Rev. J. Stuart Holden, D.D., vicar of St. Paul's church, London, will be one of the speakers at the annual founder's week conference, conducted by the Moody Bible institute of Chicago, Feb. 1-5.

Chicago church federation is actively promoting its different departments of work by organizing field days and special weeks. World friendship field days, Nov. 28-29, brought a team of speakers of international reputation and reached many thousands of people. The second annual industrial week conference will occur Jan. 16-23, 1927.

ON ACCOUNT of the mails being clogged with an excess of seasonal business thereby causing delay in delivery, the Christmas number is dated Dec. 18 instead of Dec. 25. Robert A. Ashworth, pastor of the Baptist church of the Redeemer, Yonkers, N. Y., has given a new turn to an appealing incident in the story of the birth of Jesus. "No room in the inn" has been the inspiration of art, poetry and sermons in abundance; but "The Housing Problem in Bethlehem" is unique. The preoccupations which shut Christ out of the lives of so many people are brought close home by the practical and timely words of the leading article. Thomas Jefferson Villers, pastor of the White Temple, Portland, Ore., is seen in every line of the descriptive and discriminating sermon which bears his name. The best type of evangelical and evangelistic preaching finds a model here. An angel and a preacher, both messengers of God, are never heard to better advantage than when proclaiming the good news. Linfield college and the town of McMinnville, Ore., are to be congratulated in having as pastor of the Baptist church the author of the trenchant article on "Shall We Kill Our Fighting Spirit?" Joe Taylor, shut off from the rest of the world in far-away West China, writes with the authority of personal experience and with the fighting sense of a British-American about the significance of the present revolution going on along the Yangste river. An editorial suitable to the season and describing the long quest of God for a response in the heart of man, makes Bethlehem the end of the trail. The different departments of the paper in this issue are filled with material of the usual current interest.

After a long search for a president to succeed Dr. Clark L. Chamberlain who resigned more than a year ago, the Board of Denison university, Granville, Ohio, has unanimously elected Dr. Avery A. Shaw. On Sunday, Dec. 5, Doctor Shaw announced his resignation as pastor of Emmanuel church, Brooklyn, N. Y., in order to accept the presidency of Denison university.

While Queen Marie was touring America, a small group of influential Baptists sought an interview with her concerning the treatment of Baptists in Roumania. She declined to meet them. Baptists and representatives of other minority groups suffering persecution in Roumania will probably carry the matter to the League of Nations.

Many people do not know that the prohibition law, when it was enacted, left 60,000,000 gallons of whiskey in the hands of private owners to be sold to druggists for medicinal purposes, and thus gave a tremendous opportunity and inducement for bootlegging. It is questionable whether prohibition can ever fully succeed while the right of private property in alcohol and its products is maintained.

Dr. John S. Stump has been appointed secretary of the department of church edifice work of the American Baptist Home Mission Society. He has faithfully served the society in many capacities and his experience in church edifice work in recent years made him the natural choice of the board at this time when new foundations are being laid in contemplation of a larger service to the denomination along church edifice lines.

In accepting the pastorate of First church, Boston, Mass., Harold Major, formerly of Dallas, Texas, presented to his people in his letter of acceptance a formal declaration of his conception of the evangelical faith, of the mission of a Baptist church, and of the value of co-operative Christianity. His statement of the evangelical faith covered the usual ground of belief in the Bible as the Word of God, in Jesus as the Son of God, in the cross as the sacrifice of God for the sins of the world, in the resurrection of Jesus as the seal of God upon the claims and character of Christ, and in the gospel as the power of God unto salvation. Baptists have a distinct mission in preserving and proclaiming a unique interpretation of Christianity which involves the things usually emphasized by Baptists. And as to Christian unity, Baptists ought always to manifest a spirit of sympathy and cooperation with all God's people in every good work for human uplift.

After a period of service of more than thirteen years, Mr. J. Spencer Dickerson has resigned his position as secretary of the board of trustees of the University of Chicago, to take editorial charge of the University Record.

By way of correction there are three Baptist mission schools in Toungoo, Burma: the Paku Karen, where Doctor Cross spent many years; the Bwe Karen, where Rev. J. Lee Lewis is superintendent; and Bixby Memorial, for Burmans and others, in charge of Rev. L. B. Rogers. The total enrolment of these schools is more than 1000. Baptist churches in Burma now number 903, with nearly 65,000 members and reporting last year 3835 baptisms.

Whatever THE BAPTIST may say, Gordon Poteat is not a plagiarist. He has no need of such arts. He has a head of his own and knows how to put on paper and in the most perfect English the results of his thinking. In the issue of Oct. 9, page 1047, THE BAPTIST quoted from an article by Mr. Poteat in the Baptist Courier. But THE BAPTIST failed to observe that Mr. Poteat was also quoting it from J. Paterson Smyth. We have become so accustomed to fine paragraphs from Gordon Poteat that his use of quotation marks in this instance escaped notice.

The Southern Baptists have been holding state conventions. Reports in the southern papers are highly encouraging and inspiring. Good attendance, harmony, enthusiasm were combined with a courageous facing of financial difficulties and a good prospect of overcoming them. Certain states which had accumulated threatening debts have undertaken debt-paying campaigns. Oklahoma flies the flag of victory and announces that she is free from debt. As either a coincidence or a consequence of the coming of Secretary Barton to take charge of the co-operative work of the Southern Baptist convention, the financial support of that work seems to be taking an upward turn.

The aerial world tour which all Baptist churches will be taking during January catching the enthusiasm and imagination of the people everywhere. In order to enrich the itinerary of the tourists and provide a few side trips in connection with the regular tour, THE BAPTIST, in conjunction with the Board of Missionary Cooperation, will publish in the four issues of January, supplemental material of real value. Both new and old subscribers will get the benefit of this extra service, and in order to reach those who are not subscribers, bundles of THE BAPTIST mailed to one address will be sent out each week of January from the office at 2320 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, for five cents a copy, money accompanying order. Here is an opportunity for every pastor to serve his people by means of a competent assistant at a small cost. A church wishing ten extra copies of the paper for the four issues of January will simply write THE BAPTIST at the above address and enclose a check or money order for $2.

FOR CHRISTMAS

Have You Thought of This?

At the last moment there will be someone—your father, your mother, a child, a dependent, or a friend—for whom you have not found the Christmas gift that is just right.

What could be more appropriate or more highly appreciated than a gift which will bring a regular income every year throughout the remainder of life? This you can give through an Annuity Agreement.

You can send us any amount and in return we will guarantee to pay a fixed permanent income to the beneficiary you name as long as he or she lives. The rate of income will be determined by the age of the beneficiary at the time the Agreement is issued.

Furthermore, on the death of the beneficiary the net remaining principal of your gift will be used for mission work in foreign lands.

Write immediately to Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, for additional information. All letters will be regarded as strictly confidential.

Even if you do not plan an Annuity Agreement as a gift, you will be interested in one as an investment for yourself.

AMERICAN BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSION SOCIETY

Have you made your will? Read it again and see that the full corporate name of the Society is written as above.

A new Baptist university is announced. It is to be located in Philadelphia and to be known as the Eastern university. The by-laws fix a definite doctrinal basis of ten articles, to which every person having to do with the control or teaching shall annually subscribe. The organization at present is simply a board of trustees of which the president is Chas. T. Ball, 864 North 22nd St., Philadelphia.

Here is modern journalism. Arturo Elias, consul general of Mexico, located in New York, calls attention to a picture printed in the magazine Liberty, showing a great crowd of "Catholics withdrawing deposits from the Bank of Mexico in protest against the seizure of church property." Mr. Elias sends a copy of the original picture which he says was taken eleven months before the Catholic boycott began, and says that it is actually a picture of a crowd of people waiting to put their deposits into the bank.

Missions for December is one of the best numbers of this peerless magazine. The new madonna on the cover page showing the little mother at Ellis Island is a masterpiece in keeping with the Christmas season which is signalized by "The Adoration of the Shepherds," a great work of art by Murillo, reproduced on one of the opening pages of the magazine. The contents are just as rich as the many illustrations which adorn the more than sixty pages of this issue. Dr. Howard B. Grose and William B. Lippard are giving the denomination in Missions a service of inestimable value.

The sixth annual International Conference of Vacation Bible and Church-School Workers under the joint auspices of the International Council of Religious Education, and the International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, will be held in the Sherman hotel, Chicago, Wednesday, Feb. 9, 1927, beginning at ten a. m. The program in detail will be issued by Jan. 1, and may be obtained upon application to 1516 Mallers Bldg., Chicago, or Room 1119, 381 Fourth Ave., New York City. This program will include discussions of standards, curricula and the permanent place of the vacation school in the program of the churches.

Index

	Page
FOLKS, FACTS AND OPINION.....	1366
EDITORIAL	1369
THE WORLD IN TRANSIT.....	1371
THE HOUSING PROBLEM IN BETH-LEHEM AND ELSEWHERE, BY ROBERT A. ASHWORTH.....	1372
WHERE ANGELS SANG, BY THOMAS JEFFERSON VILLERS.....	1373
A MODERN DECALOGUE FOR PAR-ISHIONERS, BY GROVE A. GRUMAN	1375
WHAT IF IT BE TRUE? POEM, BY ROBERT WHITAKER	1375
SHALL WE KILL OUR FIGHTING SPIRIT? BY W. EVERETT HENRY	1376
ALTAR OR PULPIT, BY H. L. STETSON	1377
THE DEVOTIONAL LIFE—THE HEARTS THAT CRADLED THE CHRIST, BY DANIEL G. STEVENS	1378
YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE KING- DOM	1379
THE CHIMNEY CORNER	1380
BOYS AND GIRLS	1381
CHURCHES AT WORK	1382
AMONG OURSELVES	1383
NOTES ON THE LESSON	1394
NEW BOOKS	1395

What is the educational function of the state? The next meeting of the Religious Educational Association, to be held in Chicago, April 26-29, will specialize on this and connate questions.

Among awakeners in the interest of prohibition, the Life-Line, published by the Burma W. C. T. U. and edited by Rev. and Mrs. Lee Lewis, Baptist missionaries, makes a whacking bid for first place. It lays on as vigorously as Mrs. Socrates Snooks, using largely material from the experience of the United States. Among other excellences it prints from THE BAPTIST recipes for summer drinks.

Churches wishing to build houses and seeking some novel way to raise money are invited to read this item of news credited to Mrs. Heptonstall, who with her husband labored nearly thirty years among the Bghai Karens at Toungoo. It is taken from the Burma Baptist Bulletin. "Several of the churches across the Dalo river are built with tiger claws," she says. "A firm in Providence, R. I., offered to buy well matched pairs of tigers' claws for Rs. 15, or $5 a pair. With this money we bought tiger traps for the villagers. The first skin paid for the trap. The proceeds enabled the villagers to buy cross-cut saws. This was the beginning of wooden chapels in this region."

Long Island and New York associations held a missionary education conference at the end of September under the oversight of the Metropolitan Board of Missionary Cooperation. Nearly 500 people were at supper and enrolled in the various study groups. Rev. I. A. Hotaling was dean of the conference and Dr. E. C. Kunkle is director of the Metropolitan Board. Miss Mary L. Noble, Mrs. H. N. Hatch, Mrs. Perry Allen Beck, Rev. Robert V. Russell, Rev. Evan J. Shearman, Miss Edna Umstot, Miss B. Almyra Whitaker, Rev. William A. Hill, Mrs. Edwin H. Kinney, Miss Ida M. Cheesbrough, Miss Alice E. Jones, Miss May Huston, Dr. Arthur E. Harriman and Dr. Herbert J. White were the active leaders of the work within the conference.

A great life insurance company of New York is planning to make the week of Dec. 13-18 of this year "bequest week," during which time their agents are to specialize in promoting gifts through life insurance trusts for educational, missionary, religious and philanthropic organizations connected with the church. This is to be in cooperation with the Association of American Colleges, the Council of Church Boards of Education and the Federal Council of the Churches through the committee on financial and fiduciary matters, of which Dr. Alfred Williams Anthony is chairman. Last year this company devoted one day to this purpose, calling it "bequest day." On that day 335 representatives of the company interviewed 1370 prospects in the interests of 545 charitable organizations and secured fifty-seven applications for policies totaling $169,500.

The University of Redlands rejoices that it has been placed on the approved list of the Association of American Universities, thus entitling its graduates to enter upon their Redlands credits any of the universities of the country for graduate work. The school has now twelve buildings and an enrolment of 550 students.

Waterbury, Conn., tried the experiment of a mission in which about 100 students and graduates of colleges and seminaries enlisted and served for two weeks without pay in a cooperative evangelistic campaign with the churches. Some of the prominent religious leaders of the country were brought in for special addresses. The purpose of the effort was to permeate the community with the spirit and message of the gospel rather than to secure additions to the churches. Fourteen pastors of evangelical churches in the city unite in a public letter of high and discriminating appreciation for the work of the campaign.

In a recent issue of THE BAPTIST occurs this sentence: "Arguments for tithing may be drawn from many sources, but the urge for it comes from the treasury of the church." A good reader challenges the statement as being in the nature of "a slur upon the practice." That it was not so intended may be understood from the fact that the writer of the sentence quoted is a habitual tither. But he has observed somewhat extensively that a church deficit, actual or threatened, is the stimulus to which appeal is often made for tithing. There is danger of being side-tracked from the fundamental principle to the temporary and utilitarian expedient. This danger confronts us in all kinds of Christian work. The sentence above quoted is apparently true in many cases, but of course not universally true.

Frank Watson Rogers, seventeen-year-old son of Rev. and Mrs. L. B. Rogers, Baptist missionaries of Toungoo, Burma, was accidentally killed in a game of football at Granville, Ohio, Nov. 19. He was a fine, positive and active Christian student in the Granville high school and a resident in the Fannie Doane Home for Missionaries' Children.

Greet the Yosemite Park church, perhaps the first of its kind. It is regularly incorporated with a board of directors composed of the following members: the executive secretary of the California State Church Federation, ex-officio; one Roman Catholic, who is appointed by the bishop of the diocese in which Yosemite is located; five Protestants from five different denominations represented in the California State Church Federation and approved by the federation. Any person may become a member of the church without affecting his membership in any other church. A plan is on foot to build and endow an edifice for the institution at a cost of $500,000. Baptists are co-operating.

In the meeting to welcome the Baptist World Alliance leaders held in Westminster Chapel, London, Mr. Lloyd George was in his old form. The London Chronicle, reporting the meeting, said, "He is never so happy, so intimate, so free in his oratory as when he speaks to his fellow Baptists." In the course of his address, as reported, is this significant passage: "He hoped to see America a member of the league soon. When she came in it would make a vast difference in the league's power. It would be quite irresistible. As Baptists they knew the blessing of freedom, and they ought to insure it for men of the same faith in other lands." The hint opens a whole volume which may be profitably studied by those Americans to whom it is intelligible.

The New Way—

A SAFE, SOUND and SENSIBLE plan of financing enables you to Build, Remove Debts or Carry Out your Endowment Program.

Over $125,000,000 has been raised for religious enterprises by members of our Associated Organizations.

Now is the time to arrange for your 1927 Financial Program.

HEDRICK, MARTS & LUNDY, Inc.

Harriman National Bank Building,
527 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

*Members of the Joint Board of Campaign Counsel
and Planning.*

Write for a copy of "Financing Philanthropy".

The Baptist

EDITOR: JOHN A. EARL
FIELD EDITOR: G. CLIFFORD CRESS

ASSISTANT EDITOR: U. M. McGUIRE
OFFICE EDITOR: JANET T. VAN OSDEL

Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY BY THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION AT 2320 MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Single Subscription, $2.50 a year. Clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries, postage is $1.04; in Canada, 52 cents.

Bethlehem the End of the Trail

THE human mind is incapable of compassing the eternity through which the love of God has yearned. But while the countless ages of Love's quest baffle human apprehension, the fact that God has been and is searching for communion with man captures the imagination and stirs the emotions. What is this quest of Love? What has God been seeking through all the processes of the eternal love? Is there something in man that answers the divine quest, like deep calling unto deep? What is the final purpose of the search of God? These and other questions of similar import force themselves to the front as we think and write of the seeking God who through interminable ages has been and still is expressing an eternal determination toward the human.

There is wonderful romance in the thought that the material universe is but the embodiment of the immanent God who conducts his quest for communion with man. This quest is to be the purpose to which the whole creation turns. The universe with its creative energy always at work in the world, with its indivisible atom broken up into organized electrons, and with all the bulkheads between particular points of development removed, gives a vision of God as he becomes immanent in his own universe which is at the same time inspires with its thrilling spiritual implications. Looking at the material world in this light the inspired words of Genesis, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," are enriched with a new significance.

But the quest of God is not only a movement of the Divine Will expressed through creation; it is also a movement of the Divine Grace coming down to the level of every human heart and conscience. This is the only philosophy of history which will justify the Christian view as set forth by Paul in his memorable speech on Mar's hill. "The God that made the world and all things therein, he, being Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is he served by men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he himself giveth to all life and breath and all things. And he made of one every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed seasons and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek God, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he is not far from each one of us; for in him we live and move and have our being." God in his grace comes to man in creation and in history and meets him face to face whenever and wherever man "feels after him and finds him." If one nation among all the nations was specifically inspired to "feel after God and find him," it was not that that nation should have a monopoly of privilege, but rather that it should be the particular channel through which the searching God might reveal his inmost character to the whole world as he moved among men towards that focal point of human history in Bethlehem of Judea.

Bethlehem, to which God came in the person of Jesus, is the terminus of the quest of the Eternal in his search for communion with man, and at the same time it is the starting-point of a new revelation which shines forth with growing radiance throughout the earthly life of Jesus and beyond the earthly life of Jesus. As terminus and starting-point Bethlehem is the junction between the old and the new. As a grand stage in the quest of Love we cannot make too much of the little town of Bethlehem. It was at this point that the great mystery—God manifest in the flesh—became a historical fact. The incarnation foreshadowed in so many ways in the Old Testament ultimately reached its full realization in Jesus of Nazareth. In him the Word became flesh, and God who had expressed himself in divers portions and in divers manners as he revealed himself to men in his search for that communion for which Eternal Love hungers, now spoke his message with fullness and finality. At last the Infinite Personality was incarnated in the sinless One who is the perfect flowering out of all creation and the ultimate coronation of all revelation. In Christ the self-revealing and world-redeeming Father found an incarnation complete, final and sufficient.

But Bethlehem is also a starting-point as well as an end. God's heart-hunger will never be satisfied and his quest will never cease until his eternal search for communion with man finds a universal response in the quest of men in search of communion with God. And communion with God is not a mystical experience only but also a social fellowship which expresses itself through the spiritual body of Christ, called the church. The church as described ideally in the New Testament is the model for all human society. It is through the church that the incarnation begun at Bethlehem must be extended until all the world shall feel the regenerating power of the Spirit, and the cross shall be acknowledged in life as well as in doctrine as the supreme symbol of the loving quest of God for communion with man.

Obtaining and Attaining

THE caption of this editorial is borrowed from a recent leading article in the British Weekly by the editor, John A. Hutton. He calls his message, "A Defence of Evangelical Psychology," and the heart of it is that the normal attitude of the soul according to evangelical standards is not the attitude of "intolerable strain," but rather the attitude of receptive calm. The purpose of the writer seems to be to place an exaggerated emphasis upon divine grace as contrasted with human effort in an attempt to account for the revival of interest in sacramentalism in England and the Christian science movement in America, and with a view to arousing a new enthusiasm for the traditional evangelical attitude of dependence upon God. The closing words of this unusual article summarize what the writer of it had in mind: "Attain—that suggests to me a man crossing the ocean with oars. Obtain—there you have a wind in your sails."

Doubtless it is necessary at times to call attention to the danger of losing the balance between faith and works. From the time that James in his epistle denounced faith without works to the hour when Hutton in his paper rebuked works without faith, the pendulum has oscillated between an emphasis on divine grace at one period and an emphasis on human effort at another. The happy medium seems to lie in a reasonable balancing of two forces which must be unified in action and experience if the highest results are to be secured. If the soul obtains the gifts of God by receptive attitudes in those hours of quietness and meditation which are so indispensable in vitalizing the devotional life, is it not that the soul may be energized to set the sails of the human craft to catch the favoring breezes of divine grace and to manage the tiller so wisely in the exercise of human effort that the hope of attaining the ends for which the voyage of life should be charted shall not fail of full realization? If we obtain it in order that we may attain, and if we attain to any worthy goal in any worthy way it will be because we have obtained the necessary wisdom, power and love from the infinite source of every good and perfect gift. Paul's agricultural figure is illustrative here. He claimed to have planted the seed of the gospel in Corinth, and he acknowledged that Apollos had opened the irrigating sluice gates and watered the seed; but he was careful to enrich the picture by introducing the unseen force as "God who giveth the increase." The standard evangelical psychology for this day is the psychology of balanced action between "obtaining and attaining."

That Right Hand of Fellowship

THE right hand of fellowship is a beautiful and significant gesture. Like other customs of ancient origin it was early adopted by the Christian religion and lifted to the level of a formal ceremony expressive of admission to the richest fellowship to which a man may aspire. It was never placed on a level with baptism or the Lord's supper which have the direct sanction of the Master. But it appears to have scriptural warrant, for we read that James, Peter and John extended to Paul and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship as a token of their confidence and goodwill when there were grave doubts in the church at Jerusalem about the action of Paul in receiving into the brotherhood of the faith the Gentiles apart from the rite of circumcision (Gal. 2:1-10). From the beginning American Baptist churches seem to have observed this significant custom of giving the right hand of fellowship to new members formally received into the church, being the practice on the scripture reference already referred to. The observance is simple and almost informal. The word "gesture" expresses it better than any other word. It does not carry with it many of the rich associations or symbolical values expressed in the two New Testament ordinances, baptism and the communion. Indeed, it is regarded not as an ordinance but rather as a custom which churches are free to follow or not to follow, according to their own discretion.

However, if the custom is worthy of being perpetuated, why should it not be enriched by making the language of the soul which it is designed to speak more expressive than the often hurried and always brief greeting of a pastor to new members just before the communion? Since the right hand of fellowship is a sacred symbol of a community friendship in local church service is it not worthy of a better technique than it usually reveals? We do not here attempt to outline a program for the observance of this religious custom but we would make bold to suggest that a committee of competent pastors should get together with a definite aim of working out a technique of extending the right hand of fellowship which would enrich the custom without destroying its simplicity and which would invest it with a uniformity of grace and dignity not now in evidence in most Baptist churches.

The World in Transit

An interpretation of significant events in the light of Christian ideals

When Shall We Celebrate a Revolution Such as This?

The World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches proposes a "Draft Treaty of Disarmament" by which governments shall reduce their armaments to the requirements of a national and an international police force, renounce the use of national armaments for any international purpose whatsoever, and substitute for the departments of war and navy a bureau of international cooperation. The draft is sufficiently elaborate to cover the practical points involved in such an arrangement. Its proposal is a thrillingly hopeful approach to a peace program. Something like this is coming fast. The sheer joy of such a prospect brings one's heart into his mouth.

The Brother Finds that the World in Transit Wobbles.

J. L. Snyder, an attentive and valued reader of THE CHRISTIAN, suggests two errors in the issue of Nov. 27. On page 1270 the statement is made that Rev. Ola Hanson has completed his translation of the Bible into Karen. His work has been done among the Kachins instead, and the translation is in their language. On page 1275 is a reference to a pamphlet indorsed by sixty-six American citizens dealing with the question of independence for the Philippines. Mr. Snyder has lived in the islands and he challenges the general sentiment of the paragraph. He thinks that American domination in the Philippines has conferred no benefits. The Filipinos would themselves probably prefer the same. The general question of the value of independence to the Philippines is referred to those who know the facts. But much more is involved. Why does the United States remain in the Philippines and what does our government propose to do there? The paragraph under review raised that question, and called attention to the reason upon American liberty involved in the answer. Is it government there to do the Filipinos good or to "do" them well? They may be able to survive the latter mission, but can we survive it? Mr. Snyder would oppose sending over the islands to exploitation for self and power. It is the danger and the whole point of our warning.

Christians Cannot Outlove Those They May as Well Quit

J. C. Hutchison suggests the idea. In the Atlantic Monthly he discusses the apparent failure of Christian missions to make headway among Mohammedans. And he tries to account for it. Such a phenomenon, he thinks, infers either that Christ has met his match in Mohammed or that the followers of Christ have done so. If Christ has failed, Christianity is already a passing mission. If Christians have failed, it is time for them to renew their message and their method. He reasons that in doctrine, ethics, religious experience and church life, Christianity has no such evident superiority over Islam as to convince and win the followers of Islam. The argument on these points has been tried out. There remains, in his opinion, one untried resource. It is Christly goodwill. The only hope of winning the Mohammedan lies in carrying into personal, community, industrial, national and international relations a real fellowship of brotherly love that Islam cannot match. The suggestion needs study. It may also have value for the determination of the whole missionary policy of Christianity. If the disciples of Jesus cannot outlove the disciples of Mohammed, Islam may be pardoned for giving Christianity the cold stare.

Ford's New Army of Five Thousand Boys

Once more Henry Ford is in the news. It is said that he will employ 5000 boys between the ages of sixteen and twenty, put them at men's work and pay them "independence" wages. The reason assigned is that he wishes to prevent them from drifting into vicious ways by giving them employment. The project looks beneficent and commendable. But questions arise. Will the plan deprive 5000 men of jobs? Will it lure away from school hundreds of boys who ought to remain there? Will it forever condemn each of those boys for life to the single mechanical operation of screwing a particular nut on a particular bolt? Will the payment of an "independence" wage to these boys obviate the necessity of paying a "living" wage to an equal number of men? Perhaps Mr. Ford has already considered these matters. His experiment will invite study. But contemplate a system of industry in which there are thousands of boys whose employment has not been provided for already without waiting for the generosity of Mr. Ford. Perhaps he is pioneering an order in which there shall be no jobless boys or men.

Putting Heart into Men Aids in Putting a Hole into the Ground

Scientific management shows a new face in the experience of the Great Northern railroad, as told in the Engineering News Record. The company is engaged in boring a tunnel seven miles long through the Cascade range. Such work at its best is hardly the equivalent of a June picnic. But some man who understands people is in charge of the enterprise. The crews are organized so as to compete with one another in the quality and amount of work done, and by bonuses and other incentives they are so inspired with the idea that they go to the job much in the spirit of a game of football. They are not merely grubbing for wages, they are creating a great work of human genius. And they discover the joy of it. Pioneers of Ohio who with a whoop organized competing teams of log-rollers would be able to understand such an arrangement. When competitive work takes the place of competitive graft, industrial society will rediscover itself.

Will the Green International Fight the Red One, or Join It?

R. H. Markham in the Christian Register sketches the rise of a formidable agrarian movement organizing throughout Europe to improve the condition of the peasants. This movement has been in progress for only a few years, but it now practically dominates eastern Europe from Finland to the Aegean sea. It is aggressive, purposeful and growing. Its aims in general are political powers for the villagers, redistribution of land, supplanting private merchants with cooperative village organizations, adapting education to village needs, wholesale village improvements, state ownership of public institutions, republicanism, international peace, no standing army, separation of church and state, the popularization of culture and the spread of literature among the peasants. The movement has a regular international organization. This "Green International" is growing up side by side with the "Red International." What of the future? Will they fight each other, or will they join forces to rule Europe?

The Housing Problem in Bethlehem and Elsewhere

We must discover a solution for that spiritual housing problem that afflicts us all.

BY ROBERT A. ASHWORTH

IT IS evident that when the census of Cyrenius summoned the citizens of the Roman province of Syria to their home towns there was a serious shortage of room in Bethlehem of Judea. Too many people wished to find lodging there, and the accommodations were insufficient. The village inn, built for the usual and normal needs of a quiet community, was not adequate to meet this new influx. So, for those for whom above all, at this distance of time, we could wish that shelter might have been provided, no room could be found, and they took refuge in the barn. Joseph and Mary, the most important people there, were crowded out. Thus Jesus Christ was born in a stable, and the innkeeper failed to entertain the guest whose presence would have conferred eternal honor upon his house.

This is an aspect of a problem which has since recurred in one form or another over and over again, and which has never been more critical than at the present time.

We have become most acutely aware of the housing problem since the world war. Our cities are overcrowded. There is not room for the people who want to live and labor there. It is said that we must stop building skyscrapers because the streets, devised for carriage traffic, are not wide enough to provide for the new vehicles of the crowds who now do business in them. Houses and tenements are rising on every side but do not keep pace with the population. Thus many people, among them excellent people and potential good citizens, are crowded out.

Over-Crowded

But it is not only in the inns and hostels, office buildings and streets that room is lacking for the needs of modern life, but the capacities of men are overstrained in our day. The bodies and minds of men having developed for the most part through quiet millenniums, simple and unhurried, during which little happened, it is not remarkable that, being adapted to such comparative calm and inaction, both body and mind are sorely put to it in these days when so much is happening, and so fast.

The bodies of men are not fitted to endure the speeding-up processes that characterize the commercial life of our time. We are told that heart disease and nervous prostrations are increasing. The activities of men are overstrained. There is neither time nor strength to do all the things that are demanded: so much business to be done, so much running to and fro!

The world is too much with us, soon and late,

Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers.

The strain is even greater upon the intellect. The minds of men are overcrowded. From every direction impressions are seeking entrance—from the public press, books without number, the popular magazines, the radio, as well as from public speech and personal intercourse, the main sources of information in the past—and the minds of men cannot contain them all. Many ideas merely impinge upon the mind and bound off. The mind, like the inn at Bethlehem, is filled to capacity, even to standing room, and among the ideas that fail to gain an entrance and entertainment are sometimes those that are most significant and essential. When any house is overcrowded some things are crowded out, and they may be the things to which it would be supremely worth while to give place.

The sense of mystery is being crowded out of life. There are those ready to explain everything to us in a few, short, simple formulae—the supernatural in terms of the natural, the spiritual in terms of the material, all that is unknown in terms of the known, even the mystery of human personality in terms of mechanics—so it is suspected that mystery is only another name for ignorance.

The sense of dependence is being crowded out. Our generation has become competent, to its own way of thinking; every physical need has been so fully met that the power of the human hand has been so multiplied by machinery that many think men are quite able to take care of themselves without outside aid from any source.

The danger is, therefore, that God, whom we find in Jesus Christ, and who answers to this sense of mystery and dependence, will be crowded out of modern life.

Thus only the simple shepherds saw the Christ on the first Christmas day. The result of too much serving of tables, too much engrossing business and money making and too little watching and contemplation of the stars, for which the shepherds found leisure, was that the innkeeper of Bethlehem spent Christmas without Christ. There are doubtless thousands today, with less excuse, who will do the same. Their lives are too crowded with secular thoughts and interests, too well content with the abundance of things to enjoy, either to find room or to feel a need for the Christ child!

Some months ago President Coolidge discoursed upon what he called the "new materialism." What is this new materialism as distinguished from the old? The old materialism declared that there was but one reality, matter, and that the universe was composed of it, and that matter was made of atoms, irreducible, indivisible, impenetrable, unchangeable. But modern science, as Lord Balfour has said, has lately "knocked that theory into a cocked hat." The old atom, the final stronghold of the old materialism, has irrevocably gone and in its place we have—no one seems to know exactly what—centers of energy, perhaps. "When Berkeley said there was no matter," ran the old materialist's sneer, "it was no matter what he said." But today matter seems to be dissolving into what we have always thought to be the attribute of spirit.

Unworthy Guests

What is the "new materialism"? It is not a theory but a mode of practical conduct. It is a new way of estimating values, an undue emphasis upon things, the products of human ingenuity. It is excessive regard for money and what it will bring, fine houses and fine clothes, good dinners, eight cylinder automobiles, servants and all the ease and luxuries that life can furnish. Mr. Coolidge remarked that the only cure for the new materialism is religion. The new materialism is crowding religion out. The way to enjoy the presence of God in the home of the soul is to get rid of some of the guests that now occupy it and make room for him.

In my own city certain elements strenuously protest against the singing of Christmas carols in the schools. They want no mention of "Christ the Redeemer." They want the good-will of the Christmas season, so they say, but not the Christ who inspires it, and from whom it flows. You cannot save the Christmas spirit if you exclude the Christ. There are multitudes who, throughout their lives, crowd the Lord Jesus out. They want peace in their own hearts and often lack it; they want good-will in the world about them and observe how scanty is the supply of it; but they will not make room for Jesus. But "peace and good-will" depend upon his presence.

We must not make this capital error. We are busy, or we think we are, which is much the same thing; our time and energy are fully occupied. Guests throng our doors and clamor for admittance. The space available is strictly limited, only a fixed number of "units of attention" for any man as Herbert Spencer long ago reminded us; but we must find room for the Christ. We must discover a solution for that spiritual housing problem that afflicts us all. The happiest solution will be to make the whole edifice over to him. Let him have it all; there still will be room for you? He will take you in with him. Paul found it so. "I live," he said, "yet not I, but Christ liveth in me!"

*There is room in my heart, Lord Jesus,
There is room in my heart for thee!*

Where Angels Sang

"There is born unto you this day a Saviour."

BY THOMAS JEFFERSON VILLERS

THE story of the shepherds and the angels and the Christ Child never grows old. One memorable day started for the scenes of the first Christmas. It was only five miles south from Jerusalem to Bethlehem. On the road I met a picturesque train of laden camels, such as may have conveyed the wise men in the days of Jesus. Passing a large white tomb, where it is supposed that Rachel died and was buried in the way, I saw straight ahead, perched on the crest of a long ridge, a small city built of limestone, with flat roofs, the slopes of the ridge dotted with olive trees and terraced with vineyards, while here and there patches of pulse and field lilies, tulips and poppies, lighted the landscape with a blaze of scarlet and yellow, purple and white.

To the east lay the fields where Ruth gleaned in the barley harvest, and where later the shepherds were keeping watch over their flocks by night. The skies that bent above me were those that once glowed with a supernatural splendor when the angel choir struck its harps of gold. Built over the cave, which held the manger, stood the Church of the Nativity, perhaps the oldest Christian church in the world. Between monolithic pillars of reddish limestone veined with white, I walked from the entrance to a stairway leading down into a rock cavern, forty feet long, twelve feet wide, and ten feet high. There at the cradle of the world's hope I felt by a silver star sunk in the stone floor, where I read a Latin inscription: "Here of the Virgin Mary Jesus Christ was born."

Then in memory the centuries came thronging back, and I recalled that in the fulness of time there was a strange convergence of two worlds toward that little city. Far away in the East, certain students of astronomy saw a new star, betokening the advent of a new king. Loading their camels with gold and frankincense and myrrh, these magi (whose names, according to tradition, were Melchior, Balthazar and Caspar) began to follow the stellar messenger. About the same time, a husband with his wife was leaving his humble home in Galilee for the same destination. The wise men were attracted by the star; Joseph and Mary driven by an imperial decree. Before starting from Nazareth, Mary had been visited by an angel, who assured her of a child that should save his people from their sins, and of whose kingdom there should be no end. At the close of a three days' journey the travel-worn man and woman climbed at nightfall into crowded Bethlehem. Finding no room in the inn, they sought shelter in a stable. In the upland pastures nearby lay some shepherds, "nursed in devout and lonely thought," keeping watch over the temple flocks. As the silence of the night deepened, another world was witnessing stranger sights than a stabled family, a group of shepherds and a gleaming star. Behind the curtain that veiled the spirit realm angels were preparing to sweep down the highway of stars and herald the birth of the long-expected Saviour. Suddenly the clock of the centuries struck the appointed hour. A dazzling effulgence such as never illumined the Bethlehem hills enswathed the shepherds. In their terror an angel, the one "mid bright ones doubly bright," appeared with a message which must have fallen like a sweet benediction on their quaking hearts: "Fear not; I bring you good tidings; there is born unto you this day a Saviour." And then a multitude of the heavenly host caught up the strain, singing that sublimest of all Christmas carols: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men."

The music ceased, the angels disappeared, and the unwonted radiance faded into the light of common day. But the anthem of glory and peace and good-will which the angels sang that night has never died from human hearts, and the gospel of great joy which the angelic evangelist brought is still charming and gladdening all peoples.

The angels brought more than tidings of joy. Theirs was good tidings of great joy. And this was the tidings, that Christ was born. That meant God and man united. That meant manhood redeemed. No wonder the heavenly multitude sang a new song. "Glory to God in the highest" was an old hymn. They had sung that at the creation. Now they beheld their Creator partaking of flesh and blood, that in all things he might be made like unto us; and they added this new strain, "on-earth peace, good-will toward men." No wonder the shepherds published the saying that was told them. This Child was a Saviour! No wonder they hastened from the fields to the manger, and thence returned, glorifying and praising God for all that they had heard and seen. They had heard angelic choirs. They had seen the incarnate Lord.

One day just before Christmas, Spurgeon was heavy in spirit. London's atmosphere had greatly depressed him. He felt that no lark could pipe to skies so dull and grey. But a thought struck him and filled him with gladness. It was this, that the joy of Christ's birth belongs to those who tell it, for the angels who spoke to men were exceedingly glad. He thought of this and whispered to his own heart: "As I shall repeat the story, I shall take the license to rejoice myself, rejoice if for nothing else than that I have such a message to tell." Next morning as he stood before a vast throng and discoursed on the great birthday, he exclaimed: "Oh, joy, joy! There was born into this world a man who was also God." Let us tell the story as gladly as did the angels. Having seen him in his glory and now in his humiliation, they could not express themselves in dull prose. Their speech all flowed to music. It is a message worthy of praiseful and perpetual repetition. Let us publish it as joyfully as did the shepherds. They first got their ears open—they listened to the angels' song. Then they got their eyes open—they saw the Babe in the manger. Then they got their mouths open—they trumpeted abroad the good news.

This evangel of great joy was first given to shepherds, a few simple-minded men, engaged in a humble calling. The annunciation to these lowly watchers was entirely consonant with our Lord's whole earthly career. He was born not in a palace, but in a barn. No crown bedecked his forehead. No wardrobe of purple or fine linen awaited his advent. And yet the swathing bands of peasants could not conceal his royalty. Hallowing childhood, he then ennobled honest toil. Socrates taught that the hand hardened by toil was marked by disgrace. Cicero declared that the workshop could contain nothing befitting a gentleman. The Son of Man wrought at the carpenter's bench, and yet is recognized as "the first true gentleman that ever breathed." He associated with fishermen and was heard gladly by the common people. He had no place to lay his head either in life or in death. The cross had no pillow, and he was buried in a borrowed grave. He was no aristocratic Christ. He came to preach good tidings to the poor and to set at liberty them that are bruised.

The Guiding Star

The shepherds were about their ordinary work. They were in the place of duty; and while there they heard the angels sing. Heaven is always near the dutiful. The peril of this age is that men will not leave the sheep long enough to investigate the Christmas message. They will not quit their business long enough to test by experience the truth of the incarnation. They are like Babouscka, a woman whom, the Russian legend tells us, the three wise men on their way from the East found in a humble dwelling in a little oasis engaged in her household duties. They tried to persuade her to accompany them in their quest of the King. She pleaded her work as an excuse for delay, promising to follow them later. But alas! when her work was finished, not only had the magi disappeared, but the guiding star had faded from her sight. Let not the cares of the world and the deceitfulness of riches and the lust of other things prevent a visit to the manger. Come near, kneel and worship him who was born unto you a Saviour. Open your treasures and offer to him your gifts. The star again appears for you and hangs trembling over his birthplace. The angels again descend and sing their cradle-hymn of peace and good-will to you. Like the shepherds say, "I will go now and see this thing that is come to pass," and tomorrow you will return to your work, glorifying and praising God.

The song of the angels dissipates fear. Its first command is, "Fear not." Its keynote is "great joy." The shepherds were sore afraid when the glory of the Lord shone round them. The mysterious sighing of the night winds, the blood-curdling cry of the jackals, the creeping shadows that made the pastures a valley of death-shade, had no terrors for these men. But the sky afire with God made them tremble. They did not love darkness, but they feared such light. From time to time memorial there seems to have been a conviction that any supernatural manifestation is to be dreaded, that it forebodes some ill. When, therefore, the herald angel, instead of unsheathing a sword bathed in heaven, let fall the comforting command, "Cease to be afraid," it sounded like the dropping of sweet-smelling myrror. "I bring you good tidings," he said, "the days of fear are over; the morning of joy has dawned; this the sign to you—a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes." They could not be afraid of a babe; and going with haste, they found the child, and their fear was changed to praise.

The first Christmas morning did more than dissipate fear. It brought salvation. "There is born to you this day," the angel declared, "a Saviour who is Christ the Lord." Russell Sage told us that thrift would save the world. Materialism rotted the Roman world. There is no salvation by character. The attempt to save man by culture ended in starless night. Philosophy and ethics sank back into despair, crying with Plato: "We shall wait for a divine man." That Divine Man came. It was not thrift or culture or philosophy or ethics that the shepherds found in the manger. It was God become flesh. It was Jesus, who saves his people from their sins. And there is no salvation in any other.

A Gospel of Great Joy

He is here called Christ, the anointed one. He was anointed as prophet, to interpret to us the mind and heart of God. He was anointed as priest, to offer on sacrifice for sins forever. He was anointed as king, that he might occupy the throne room of our life, and bring into blissful subjection our every thought and action. Being prophet, priest and king, he is the perfect Saviour who brings a perfect salvation. He is able to save unto the uttermost, unto every completeness, those who come to God through him. On his natal day when the angels sang, God came into humanity. Now humanity is in the Godhead—is there in the person of our Christ "who suffered our temptations, experienced the full pulse of our pain, sighed with the feeling of our sorrow, wept by a mortal grave, and at last felt upon his brow the night-dew of death." Is not this a gospel of great joy?

This perfect salvation is offered to all, the good tidings to all the people—to shepherds, engaged in the lowly toil; to the heavy-laden, with their restless hearts and their sweat-beaded brows; to the herd of narrow foreheads, who (the scribes declared) were accursed because they knew not the law; to Joseph, the rich counsellor; to Nicodemus, the learned Sanhedrist; Zacchaeus, the chief publican; to Matthew, sitting at his tollbooth; to Peter, mending his broken nets; Bartimaeus, his eyes rolling in irksome night; to the widow of Nain, looking through the blinding veil of her grief; to Jarius, when his only daughter lay dying; to Mary and Martha, listening to the voice of life calling their brother from the grave. He is the accessible Christ. He was so at his birth. No royal guards pushed back the shepherds and the magi from the stable door. He was so during his life. The hem of his garment was ever trailing where the needy might touch it. He was so in his death. On the cruel tree, his hands, extended wide as mercy's span, pointed his messengers to the uttermost part of the earth.

Mark well, however, that while the good tidings are offered unto all, the great joy becomes the possession of only those who believe. Christ's salvation is limited to believers. This natal day, which has transformed the life f the world, may pass and leave in you no increment of faith, no deposit of spiritual blessing. The shepherds saw and believed; but the Bethlehemites went unconcerned about their work next morning as if nothing unusual had occurred. The magi, seeing the star over his cradle, rejoiced with exceeding great joy; but Herod was troubled by the tidings of a new-born king. We have our hope, Paul says, set on the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, especially of them that believe. This, then, is the practical question today. Do you believe? Is Jesus born unto you? Can you say with the Virgin-mother, "My spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour?" If so, you may strike the loud cymbals of delight. If not, this joyous anniversary can mean little more to you than the hanging of a few holly wreaths, the trimming of a few evergreen trees, the eating of a few extra dishes, and the exchanging of a few perishable presents. Make the story true to yourself by experience. In your investigation of the nativity, go to the right place. The shepherds went to Bethlehem and were enlightened. Herod sent to Jerusalem and was mystified. You cannot find in the natural an explanation of the supernatural. Receive Christ with adoring faith, and sing with Tennyson:

"Thou and peace to earth were born,
Good-will to me as well as all."

A Modern Decalogue for Parishioners

By GROVE A. GRUMAN, A LAYMAN

THOU shalt not expect thy minister to be a perfect man. If he were perfect, he would not understand his parishioners well enough to minister to their needs.

Thou shalt not accuse thy minister of trying to run the church. If parishioners were capable of conducting a church, it would be foolish to employ an expert to do it.

Thou shalt not expect thy minister always to agree with thee. He is employed to teach thee and to correct any false ideas thou hast along spiritual lines.

Thou shalt not watch for mannerisms or errors of speech or style in the pulpit. Thy minister is not employed to teach Delsarte or rhetoric, but to preach the gospel to thee.

Thou shalt not fail to present to thy minister any bouquets thou hast in reserve for him. When he meets thy expectations, he deserves the comfort of knowing it.

Thou shalt go to all the church services prepared to be pleased and blessed. Thus shalt thou help the minister and the service, and thyself carry away a blessing.

Thou shalt not fret thyself when thy brethren are chosen before thee for official honors. Office carries labor and responsibility, and a right attitude may make thee more useful than thy official brother.

Thou shalt always speak well, or not at all, of thy minister, thy church, and thy brethren. It is not always easy to speak favorably, but not to speak unfavorably requires only silence.

Thou shalt contribute as cheerfully of thy time and means to thy religious as to thy secular life. Thy joy of thy religious life will be in exact proportion to thy contribution thereto.

Thou shalt not demand of thy minister or thy brethren more exemplary conduct than thine own. It is as a leader in righteousness, rather than a follower, that thou shalt most honor thy Lord, and be most honored of him.

What If It Be True?

By ROBERT WHITAKER

AND what if it be true, this yuletide season
We make so much of now,
This feast of love, and of all kindly reason
Beside the gift-filled bough
Is older far than all our glad, sweet story
Of Jesus' lowly birth?
What if it comes from ages dark and gory,
When man first knew the earth?

What of it, if indeed our pagan fathers,
Teuton and Viking wild,
Gave us the rootage of this lore that gathers
Today around the Child?
Gave us the yule log, fir tree, friendly token,
Even our Santa Claus,
Before one word had ever yet been spoken
Of Jesus and his cause?

It may be Christmas is but the survival
Of early man's delight,
When winter's solstice marked the sun's arrival
At the storm season's height,
And so gave promise of the new creation
The springtime would bring forth;
What wonder theirs was such far-flung elation
Who came from out the north?

Pagan they were, and what are we but pagan,
Judged by life's common way?
Although we own not Thor, or Jove, or Dagon
Gods of this later day?
Since still the wildness of the winter rules us,
Coldness and death and storm,
Except that now this Christmas solstice schools us
To nobler, finer form?

We also greet with joy the season's turning,
And hail the coming spring;
But now we look with more than nature's yearning
For leaf and bud and wing.
We seek a world of humankind made over,
A spring that will not fade,
Shaped to the likeness of that heaven-born lover,
Mothered by Bethlehem's maid.

Aye, it is old, this wondrous Christmas story,
Old as the age of man:
Old as that moment when the dream of glory
First in his heart began.
And it has cultured from those fables olden,
From seedlings of the storm,
The dream that yet shall be, the city golden,
With Bethlehem's babe the norm.

Shall We Kill Our Fighting Spirit?

The demand of the hour is that man's fighting spirit be turned from the destruction of man to the destruction of things that harm man.

BY W. EVERETT HENRY

AUGUST, 1914, shattered the dream of many that a war between civilized nations had become improbable, if not impossible. The years 1914-1918 shattered other dreams of conquest and of power and brought into greater prominence the dream of a warless world. The United States flung itself into the war to make "the world safe for democracy." The feeling was that we entered the war "to end war." But the war, instead of making the world safe for democracy, brought forth a new brood of dictators. Instead of a war to end war it seems to have been a war to beget war. And yet we are assured that another such world war, with the still more deadly gases and guns which are ready to be loosed for man's destruction, will wreck civilization. Must we, then, in order to save civilization, kill our fighting spirit?

If we are in a strait betwixt these two, if we must either lose our civilization or kill our fighting spirit, then the probabilities are that we had better begin right now to prepare ourselves for savagery. The fighting spirit is too deep-seated in man to be removed easily or quickly. There is not time enough left to carry the process through. We should have begun three generations ago. Man's fighting spirit, if it can be killed at all, will certainly die hard.

Even if there were time to carry through a process of teaching that would destroy our fighting spirit before another great war came upon us, would that save civilization? What would happen to this fabric man has so laboriously built up, and which we call civilization, if man were deprived of his fighting spirit? Would not the destruction of man's fighting spirit just as inevitably, if more slowly, destroy civilization as another world war? What sort of a spineless, good-for-nothing species of animal would man be if he had no disposition to fight?

Destroying to Build

Is there, then, no way to preserve civilization? Must man again be thrust by fell circumstances of his own creating into another Dark Ages? Surely not. There is a way out if we will but walk therein. The demand of the hour is not that man's fighting spirit be killed, but that it be utilized; that it be turned from the destruction of man to the destruction of things that are harmful to man. The factors in human life that are harmful are numerous and terrific in their baneful effects. In combatting these factors man's fighting spirit can find full activity for many a year to come and always to the betterment of human life.

Poverty is still with us, even in the United States. Investigations made in 1920 led to the conclusion that sixteen million people in the United States lived in unfit homes. Authorities tell us that 5 per cent of our population—more than five million people—lives in real poverty year after year. The annual economic cost of poverty to the people of this country, the wealthiest in the world and probably with the least poverty per 100,000 population, is estimated at $946,000,000. This is more than double the cost to this government of the Spanish-American war. But the economic cost of poverty is only a small part of its pernicious total. What shall be said of the physical suffering it entails annually —the gnawing of hunger, the cruel clutch of cold, the throbbing pain of disease? Or the mental suffering of parents who must watch children grow up into impoverished youth, and of the youth who must sacrifice ambitious ability to care for prematurely broken-down parents? There should be no poverty at all in the United States, but it will require a display of fighting spirit on the part of a large number of American citizens to eliminate this curse from our national life.

Then there is the fight against disease. Much progress has been made, but much remains to be done. The average life expectancy has been raised to fifty-six, a gain of fifteen years in the last fifty-five. This gain, however, has been brought about for the most part through the preservation of baby and child life and the lowering of the tuberculosis death rate. Some diseases have been largely mastered, but cancer and the degenerative diseases of the heart, blood vessels and kidneys are greatly on the increase. The inroads of disease on human life, happiness and efficiency are gigantic.

An Aggressive Foe

According to the well-known figures of the American Public Health Association, of the population of this country only 19,500,000 are in full vigor of life; 37,500,000 are fairly well, while 45,000,000 are physically deficient. Of these last 1,500,000 are tubercular, 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 have malaria and hook worm, 3,000,000 are sick in bed daily, and 1,500,000 die annually. It is estimated that disease costs the people of the United States every twelve months $4,105,954,930, a sum larger than the total cost of the civil war, and more than enough to meet all expenses of the government for the current fiscal year. Appalling as is this economic cost of disease, it becomes a minor consideration when we begin to value the human suffering caused by disease. The pain and the fever and the dull distress of those in the grip of disease, the constant anxiety in the minds of these and of those who love them, the dreadful penalties placed upon helpless children—who would venture to put a money value on these things?

Here indeed is a field for our fighting spirit. What has been accomplished makes us sure that further achievements are possible. And how urgent are some of the situations which confront us! Feeble-mindedness seems to be increasing in our midst. But why should not the 700,000 feeble-minded in this country be cared for so that in two generations feeble-mindedness would practically be eliminated from our national life? Again, venereal diseases kill 300,000 people in the United States every twelve months; that is, about one out of every five deaths in this country is due to these shameful diseases. Yet these diseases are not only entirely preventable but are unconscionably disgraceful—an unmitigated reproach not only upon our morality but also upon our intelligence. Kill our fighting spirit. Why not turn it into the fight against disease?

But the field for our fighting spirit is larger still. Vice is rampant. Like a mighty maelstrom it tugs at all classes of society and gathers at least a few victims from all quarters. It is like a great infection in the body politic from which all parts suffer. The economic drain from vice is almost unbelievable. According to Bower's careful estimates in "The Economic Waste of Sin," narcotic drugs cost us annually in round numbers $400,000,000, prostitution $530,000,000, alcohol $825,000,000, crime in general apart from these $3,330,000,000. These total $5,085,000,000. If to this total is added the annual cost of that greatest of national vices, war, the aggregate reaches the astounding total of $8,939,000,000. The total cost of all the wars in which the United States engaged prior to the great war and including the revolution was only a little more than $5,000,000,000. Vice, apart from expenditures on account of war, is costing us every year a sum larger than this by $85,000,000. If we could save the present yearly cost of vice including war, in less than three years our whole national debt could be paid from this saving alone. Or take a still more concrete illustration. Every three years vice, including war, is costing us enough to build 1,072,680 miles of good road at $25,000 per mile, more than enough to checker the whole land area of continental United States (including Alaska) with improved roads ten miles apart.

Here again we must think of the human suffering involved in this carnival of personal and collective vice. What words can adequately depict the living death of the inebriate and the drug addict, or the anguish of relatives and friends who must watch them thus die? And the horrors of war as they were unrolled before us in 1914-1918 and as they still exist in our midst to this day—what shall be said of these? Surely all this pain on human wealth and welfare is utterly without reason and thoroughly diabolical. Such a condition demands a fighting spirit of the first order and can be met by nothing short of it. For the sake of humanity, strong men must stand in the breach here and fight.

What, as a nation, might we not accomplish if we could save the $13,568,000,000 which we annually waste! This sum is equal to one-sixth of the total production of this country. It is 150 per cent of our total annual increase in wealth. If it were not for this waste, instead of accumulating wealth at the rate of $8,000,000,000 a year the rate would be over $20,000,000,000. This yearly cost of sin would build over two million houses at $6500 each, thus providing accommodations for ten million people. It would pay the entire national government budget for more than four years. It would carry all national, state, county and municipal expenditures for approximately one year and ten months. What educational institutions could be built, what public improvements effected, what alleviation of human suffering obtained, what uplift of humanity achieved, if we could stop this waste.

And if we do not stop it, what then? Can any nation endure such waste year after year and continue to exist? We stand with our backs to the wall. It is not a time to think of killing our fighting spirit but to find ways of utilizing it in the fight for righteousness and the possibility of continued existence as a civilized people.

Altar or Pulpit

By H. L. STETSON

BEFORE the Methodist ministers of Chicago Rev. George Craig Stewart, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal church, is reported to have said that "the Catholic movement, tending to one great united church, is sweeping Christianity like a veritable flood The intention of the Lord in history was that there should be one great, unifying church with one great teaching." Perhaps; but we have not noted any such flood toward Catholicism, or toward one universal ecclesiastical organization. And the teaching of Jesus in its very nature prevents any "one great teaching" for every person, for it is the very essence of the Christian religion as taught by Christ to start people to asking questions. They cannot do that without differing in the conclusions which they reach. Christianity ceases to be vital when there is uniformity of teaching. There was "one great teaching" in the Middle Ages; then the religion which Jesus taught almost died. It was smothered by uniformity through one all-dominant church.

We are told by a high authority that "Protestantism emphasizes, in the main, preaching. The Catholic church emphasizes the altar, the sacramental character of life." Very true; but by preaching Protestantism has won its way. Luther, Calvin, Zwinglius, Knox, Wesley, Whitefield, Edwards, Beecher, Spurgeon, Moody, Phillips Brooks, with hundreds of others, taught the people through the spoken word and brought Christianity into vital relation with the lives of tens of thousands. They were like Jesus in that they taught the people. The name given to him in the Gospels is that of Teacher. Protestantism put the pulpit over against the altar. Has the time come to substitute the altar for the pulpit? Do people still need to be taught, or do they need, more than teaching, ritualistic ceremonies, such as are found in Catholic and some Episcopal churches? Here is the fundamental question which faces all churches today. If teaching is the great need, then the preaching in our Protestant pulpits ought to be made the strongest feature of public religious services. Much is lacking in the power and fervor which ought to characterize it. Which shall we emphasize, the pulpit, or the altar?

Christmas Chimes

By MARY P. DENNY

SOFTLY chime
The bells of time,
Bells of gladness,
Peace and light,
Ringing, ringing
Through the air
Chimes of light and gladness.

*Softly chime
The bells of life,
Through the dark they vibrate,
Tuned with raptures of the skies,
Borne through realms supernal.
Hear them ring through the air
Out of darkness into light.*

*Chiming, chiming through the air
Borne by notes celestial,
Tones vibrating with God's love
Peace and happiness to men,
Echoes of the far unseen
On a waft of angel wings,
Notes of life eternal.*

*Softly chime
The bells of life,
Out of darkness into light,
Radiance of eternal day,
Hope eternal, faith supernal.
Christ incarnate unto man,
Faith and love victorious.*

The Devotional Life

The Hearts that Cradled the Christ

BY DANIEL G. STEVENS

JESUS was cradled in a manger. Some recent writers seek to prove themselves realistic in description at this point in the narrative—not only prose writers such as the Italian Papini, who comes from the manger-side with the reek of the stable on the breath of his description, but even a poet, John Peale Bishop, in his verses on "Twelfth Night" (Scribner's December, 1923, p. 672), has these lines:

*I . . . came at last
On a low hutch propped in an alleyway;
And stretched aside as one by one they passed—
Those stilted mages mitred in stiff blue—
Under the sagging beams, between the stalls.
Stifled with stable smells and fug I saw (Nothing were clearer in the scrupulous day)
The rigid drooping of their painted palls
Over the crib, where on a toss of straw,
Swaddled in rags, to their abasement,
lay,
Not the pedantic god whose name
they knew,*

*But a small child petulant with cries.
Doubtless one might find muck and unpleasant odors about a stable if one sought for such things.*

Sniffing for Taints.

But why turn aside to sniff for such taints in the air and to look for unpleasantness underfoot when our real guides, the Gospel writers, are pointing to surroundings much more significant? It is wholly unlike the Gospels to dwell much on the physical side, the material aspect, of things. It is the style of modern writers to use much of their strength on such descriptions as significant.

Jesus was cradled, it may be on straw or hay, in a manger. But the greater fact is that he was cradled in love; about him were tenderness and reverence. Those who touched him were gentle, considerate, hopeful of great good he might do and be. When evil threatened him harm, love stood between to do its wisest and utmost. Not only Joseph and Mary, but visitors to the cradle from the neighborhood and from afar placed around him arms of reverential protection and of hopeful love.

Simple-hearted See Christ

The evangelists are at pains to describe those who came close to the Child—the simple-hearted shepherds who lived under the stars of God, and had ears for heaven's choirs, devout Simeon and Anna who waited for the consolation of Israel, and the wise men who came seeking the new-born King of the Jews.

What of those wise men? How much their coming seems to promise! How quickly they vanish into the obscurity out of which they appear! Of what consequence was their visit after all? Tradition avers knowledge of their very names and their homelands. This that hangs by so tenuous a thread helps not at all here. Much more substantial is the affirmation implied in the Gospel story that in the heathen world were men of learning and culture whose observations of the courses of things in the heavens above and on the earth beneath led them to look for the Star of humanity's hope arising out of Israel. Their science had its limitations, as they confessed. It needed to be supplemented by the word of a religion higher than they had known. Even so, they were not equipped for the fullest service. They came, bowed before the Child, gave royal gifts as to a king, and departed to their own places, out of the story, for they needed something none could yet obtain.

The Enlarged Knowledge.

But their science was not prostituted to evil. Their enlarging knowledge could not be commanded or bought by what they recognized as evil. They saw through the mask of jealous Herod and would not play into his hands of murder. Herod was a Hellenist. He used, as far as he could, the art and science of the Graeco-Roman world for his pleasure and power. But there was something that dared to refuse him fraternity and obedience though he offered reward or threatened penalty. And that something in men outside of Judaism was an element of protective good-will and nourishing hope in the surroundings of the Child Jesus.

—From the Crozer Quarterly.

Young People and the Kingdom

CONDUCTED BY EDWIN PHELPS, GENERAL SECRETARY, B. Y. P. U. OF A.

"Meeting Helps" on Devotional Topic for January 2

Churches on Wheels

(Note: These "helps" are built around the material given in "Young People's Leader," the official magazine "for all Baptist young people." Subscriptions to the "Leader" may be made through the B. Y. P. U. of A. at $1 per year.)

You will note that Leader suggests sending for several leaflets which will help you with this topic. The material presented gives excerpts from these leaflets. If you want more details, send to the literature department of the Board of Missionary Cooperation (New York, Boston, Chicago, or Los Angeles) for "On the Rails with the Chapel Cars" (three cents); "The Romance of Missions"; "Chapel Car Auto No. 2"; and "The Story of the Colporter Missionary."

Read also the article beginning on page 461 of the September, 1926, issue of Missions. If you will "dig out" your copy of the "Quiz Book" (if you do not have this, you may get one copy free from the literature department, addresses given above) and look on page 16, you will see several questions and answers about this work.

This material is so interesting in itself that no unusual presentation will be required. The mere statement of the work, told, of course, in as many "picture phrases" as possible, will suffice. Perhaps you may want to arrange the chairs in your meeting room in rows so that the idea of a train may be carried out.

You may bring in, too, our newest "church on wheels"—the airship Evangel—which is taking Northern Baptists around the world during January. Since this is Jan. 2, it would be well to emphasize this "World Tour" project and interest more young people if possible. The reading of the day's log should be included as part of your program.

The Young People Try Their Hand

By L. L. HUTCHINSON

First church, Terre Haute, Ind., is building its program around the children and young people. It appreciates the fact that the child can no longer be placed on the fringe but must hold the center of the circle. When the pastor of the church, Rev. R. B. Deer, returned from his vacation he suggested to the assistant-pastor and young people's worker, Rev. Lewis L. Hutchinson, that the young people take entire charge of the church organization and all activities. The week of Oct. 25-31 was set for the program.

The first step in the program was the calling of a mass meeting at which time an entire church organization was constructed. The election included the pastor, assistant, deacons, deaconesses, trustees, Bible-school superintendent, church clerk, ushers, bulletin editor and manager, musical director, pianist and orchestra director. Donald Swanagan, a junior at Rose Polytechnic institute, was elected as pastor.

There was a big time in the old church that week! On Monday evening at a mass meeting of all the elected officers every detail of the program for the week was carefully worked out. Wednesday evening, church night, the pastor-elect with a number of the other young people, led the devotional service. Thursday evening, another group of young people under the leadership of the assistant pastor-elect, Ralph Tucker, had charge of the service at Rosemont mission (a mission sponsored by First church). The week's activities included a banquet on Friday evening, with Rev. L. C. Trent, Indianapolis, as speaker. The program included publishing the "Bulletin," the weekly church paper. The issue included expressions from a number of the young people under the caption "What the Church Means to Me."

The climax of the week was Sunday, Oct. 31. The church auditorium was filled to capacity that Sunday morning. The youthful but well trained ushers gave a fine touch. It gave one in the pew a peculiar thrill to see five young people backed with a young people's chorus occupying the platform. The speakers presented such themes as: "The Challenge of the Youth to the Church," "The Attitude of the High-School Boy and Girl," "What the Young People Expect of the Church." The morning worship program was so well done that it won the comment from Prof. E. M.

Bruce, chairman of the official board, "One of the best things since I've been connected with the church. It reveals that there are folk better qualified to take up the work than we were." The week's activities closed with the presentation of a pageant, "The Two Masters," on Sunday evening.

Young people's week is no longer an experiment in First church, Terre Haute, but a corporate part of the annual church program. As far as we know this is the first time an experiment has been tried in which the entire program for the week has been turned over to the young people. It has proved a real success.

A Burmese Life Service League

From Miss Marian Reifsneider of Mandalay, Burma, comes the following: "There were two religious gatherings at Maymyo during this term. The assembly was a gathering of Burman, Karen, and Indian students of about high school age. It is much like our young people's assemblies at home. Here the lectures had to be given in three languages—Burmese, Karen, and English. These were lectures on the life of Christ, the prophets, the psalms, Sunday-school methods, Christian Endeavor and inspirational addresses. There were sports, too, and a day trip to the beautiful Gotiek gorge. This year a life service league was organized among the young people. More than sixty signed the declaration card to allow the Holy Spirit to guide them in the choice of their life work. Most of those who come to the assembly are Christians; a few are still undecided. The assembly fosters a spirit of companionship and healthy competition which needs to be encouraged. It is a fine thing for our young people."

Twickenham, England, seems to be educationally up with the times. The headmistress of one of the schools holds the scholastic degrees of B. S. and Ph.D. She has been married three years and has a child seven months old. The baby was the straw that broke the back of the school committee. She was dismissed on the ground that the possession of the baby was incompatible with the duties of a schoolmistress. G. B. Shaw fell afoul of the incident. He advises the citizens to throw the school commission into the river. He thinks that, other qualifications being equal, a mother is specially qualified for the work of teaching. Why not? Of all professions, why should that of education bar motherhood?

December 19 Topic
THE HEART OF CHRISTMAS

December 26 Topic
ASSOCIATIONS OF YOUTH

For a full treatment of these topics, see Young People's Leader.

The Chimney Corner

The Christmas Story

BY KATHLEEN W. HYDE

IT WAS cold, that bitter cold that is so familiar to the eastern states about Christmas time. A high wind was blowing from the lake and snowflakes filled the air. The atmosphere gave little indication of the good-will and brotherly love of the season. Ladies in rich furs drew their coats closer about them as they stepped into their heated cars, full of wrapped bundles.

On a corner stood a small newsboy. His only wrap was a thin, well patched coat, but his friendly smile was that of a king.

"Paper, lady? Paper, mister? Thank you! One more nickel nearer Carl's Christmas."

At last all the papers were gone, and Dan buttoned his coat higher and started home. Home? Only a tiny room away up in the top of the "widders' house," but home. Dan had lived there for two years by himself since his mother had died, but yesterday he had found a small wisp of a boy covered with rags and crying with cold and hunger. Some one who was worse off than he was immediately appealed to Dan, so he took him home, warmed and fed him. Carl was a child small in body with large brown eyes that looked up with the wistful, fearful and hungry look which comes to such waifs in a large city. Around his pale face were clinging clusters of curls which made his face look smaller and thinner.

But the look in his eyes made you love him. This was what had captured Dan. Tonight on Christmas eve he was trying to get money enough to give Carl his first real Christmas. To make him better understand, he had promised to take him to the cathedral around the corner to see the candles and to hear the carols. Dan also felt nearer to his mother when he was there. So, tired as he was, he was as eager as Carl to be gone. When he reached home Carl had his ragged coat and cap down ready to put on and go at once.

"Are you ready? Kin we go now?"

"Yes. We'll eat when we git back."

The two boys caught their breath as they stepped inside of the warm candlelit church. It was like heaven to Dan, and Carl was bewildered. The children stood with glistening eyes and quick breath through the whole long service, for they had arrived late and the seats were filled.

The organ began to play, softly at first, like the quiet starlit valley, where the shepherds watched their flocks; then the tinkle of the sheep bells, the bleating of the lambs; then louder—the appearance of the star, the shepherds' amazement. At last the organ pealed forth the grand Hallelujah chorus; then children's voices took up the refrain like that company of angels long ago. The music swept through the cathedral like a mighty wind gaining a volume of voices as it went on. At last it trembled away to silence, giving room to the voice of the rector, who stood and read those words which mean everything to the Christian, "Fear not: for I bring you good tidings of great joy, for unto you this day is born in the City of David a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord." Again the organ sounded and the children sang. At last it was over, and the two boys stumbled out into the street and back to their room. After the first spell had worn off, Carl began to question Dan.

"Chrismus! I ain't never heard th' word before. Is it nice? Kin I see it an' really touch it an' hold it in my hands?"

"Why no, Carl, it ain't nothin' yu kin feel except inside yu."

"Do yu mean like wantin' to cry an' like thet?"

"Yes, Carl, let me tell yu. Like the lady with th' big smile told me one time. Maw used t' tell it t' me too, but I can't remember it much, 'cause it was a long time ago when I was a kid. Well a long time ago, when the world was awful bad, God looked down an' saw how bad they was, an' how they needed somethin' t' make 'em good."

"Who's God? What's he? C'n I see him?"

"Naw, of course not. He's God. He's in heaven, up in tha sky, yu know. He made everthing, everthing, even you en me an' yu know yu can't see 'im. I tried. Now don't ask me any more questshums 'till I tell yu about it. Well as I said, he was sorry tha people was so bad. He saw tha people needed somepin to make 'em better; so he decided to send 'em a gift, yu know, a presunt. Anything anybody gives to somebody else an' like that. Well he decided to send his own son, his boy y'know. But that was awful hard 'cause he loved him a lot, an awful lot even more'n my Maw did me. So one night he sent his own son, his boy, Jesus, down from heaven to a man named Joseph an' his wife. His mother was Mary, but I can't explain that tu yu, yu wouldn't understand. An' when he sent him it was to Be-the-l-hem of Ju-de-ah, that's way across the ocean in a country where men wear dresses an' they all act diffrent than us. Well, he, Jesus, was born in a manger, that is, in a barn yu know, where they keep cows an' horses and sheep, in th' country. He was born on the hay an' when he was born, there was a great, great big star come in th' sky, an' it shined brighter an' prettier than any star anybody ever saw, even brighter than tha big sign of the Rivoli, an' it moved along in tha sky, until it was right over tha barn where Jesus was, an' they was a lot of anguls comed an' sung."

"What's anguls, dead people?"

"No, good people that live in heaven an' have wings an' fly around. Well they sung, 'Glory, glory to God in th' highest an' peace on earth good-will t' men,' 'cause it made 'em so happy to know what a good presunt God sent th' people down here. Well, then the shepherds, the men who take care of the sheep, who was near by on th' hills was awful scared but th' anguls told 'em not to be, that God had sent 'em a good presunt. Then they wasn't afraid but they come and worshiped tha baby an' loved him 'cause God told 'em he was goin' to send 'em a presunt that would make people better. Then the wise men, teachers yu know, and preachers like Rabbi down the hall, come an' bowed an' brought gold an' perfumes an' lots of presunts to the baby. Then th' baby grew up an' did lots of things for people. He made the sick ones well an' made th' blind men see. Think of it Carl! Made 'em see. He taught 'em how to do good an' not be s' wicked an' how they cud be good an' go t' heaven and live with him when they died, an' that's what Chrismus is, his, Jesus', God's son's birthday."

Dan gave a sign as he finished his story and Carl's face was flushed, his eyes bright and his lips parted in breathlessness as the story came to an end.

"Oh ain't that wonderful! Does he love me and kin I live with 'im up there when I die if I'm good?"

"Yes of course, if you're good."

With that Carl fell asleep, happy with his first glimpse of the Christ child which had been given to him by a ragged newsboy not much bigger than himself

BOYS and Girls

The Christmas Bookworm A Christmas Play for Baptist Boys and Girls

Dear Boys and Girls,

Peggy thinks that if she and Bill and Timothy can get up this play in a quick last-minute way, then you can do it, too, in order to raise money for our fund to translate a book for the bookless children of the Orient, as a Christmas gift to them, for 1926. In case you want to know more about it all, read back numbers of THE BAPTIST for Nov. 13, 20, 27. Work out the play in your own way, using the following as suggestions. Send stamps, checks and money orders to Miss Margaret Applegarth, 14 Arnold Park, Rochester, N. Y. There is no room this week for acknowledging the many gifts which have come in, but watch for the list next week.

When the play opens have four or five boys and girls in costume. These can be simply made; in fact, you will have materials in your home. For instance:

1. The Japanese girl could wear a gay mono, with a wide sash tied in back.
2. The Chinese boy (or girl) could wear a pair of blue pajamas.
3. The Turkish girl could wear gay bloomers reaching all the way to her ankles and a sleeveless Eaton jacket of a different color. Use cheese-cloth.
4. The Hindu boy could wear short, white trousers, white shirt, and a colored turban on his head.
5. The Hindu girl could be draped in several yards of bright cheese-cloth, or any colored material.

When the curtain rises, these children are all seen with diplomas in their hands—sheets of white paper rolled into scrolls and tied with colored ribbons. It may make it easier for the children if their "parts" are written in the diplomas. They at once begin bowing to one another in proper style: the Hindus touching their foreheads with their hands and saying, "Salaam," the Chinese holding his hands and shaking them as he bows. Then one of them says: "We all have diplomas, isn't that wonderful?"

They all agree, and the Hindu girl tells how she is the only girl in her village who can read; how she rode miles and sat in a bullock cart to school. The Chinese boy tells how he was trundled in a wheelbarrow, up hill and down hill to his school. Each one tells a story of how rare thing an education seems to them, when so few of his neighbors are educated. Each opens his diploma and examines the other child's with interest. Then one of them says: "But now I know how to read and write, the better thing is there's nothing for me to learn—except a geography and an arithmetic and my other schoolbooks. Of course there's the Bible and the hymn book, too. But I would love to have a story book!"

Another child: "That's just how it is with me, not a thing to read! Not a book!"

The others all say: "We haven't any, either! It doesn't seem right, does it?" They all can make up their own regrets about this enormous need of theirs, and while they are discussing it, in wriggles the bookworm.

(A bookworm, of course, must have a long brown body, made from some kind of brown material, sewed into a regular sheath, tapering toward a long, thin tail. Into the front end a boy can be squeezed, his legs helping to fill the tail, the brown material brought over his face. Cut big eyes in front and a hole for a mouth. Use white chalk to make markings. His brown "body" should also previously be stuffed with books—children's books, the well-known ones, such as "Little Women," "Little Men," "Hans Brinker and the Silver Skates," etc.)

The minute the children see the bookworm they are much startled, and back away as he wriggles toward them.

"Did I hear somebody mentioning books? I'm simply starved for them! I can't digest anything but children's books, unfortunately, but although I've wriggled through India and through China, through Turkey and Japan, I simply can't find a book. And I ask you, what can a bookworm eat but books? Oh, I'm in a sad way, but what can I do about it, anyway?"

"What indeed?" ask all the children of one another, wagging their heads as if here were a new problem.

Then the Hindu boy asks:—"What are you going to do about it?"

"Do?" says the worm. "There's only one thing to do, and that is to crawl straight through the earth to America. But it's a long trip and a hard trip. I don't suppose any of you feel like digging part of my way through for me, do you? I might bring something back for you, who knows?"

"Of course we'll help you!" all the little Orientals cry, and the boys scamper off for shovels.

At the back of the platform is a table with ironing boards or blackboards forming incline planes from the floor to the table top, covered with green material (perhaps crepe paper, although something heavier would be better). Numerous palms, ferns and pine boughs apparently are growing in this "Oriental" country. At the back, two old chairs hold buckets of earth. The two Oriental boys take their shovels, run up the inclined planes, and standing on the table, rapidly dig the earth from the buckets, piling it up on the table (to the amusement of the audience, of course!).

"Come on!" the boys say. "We've made a fine deep hole!" The worm crawls up the incline to inspect. "Fine!" he cries. Then: "Well, good-by! Good-by!" And (with the help of two unseen persons concealed under the table) he seems to crawl through the earth. The two boys will need to help his tail to disappear quietly. The children stand waving down at him: "Good-by bookworm, good-by! My, look how far through he's crawled already."

They stand watching wistfully, stooping over: "I can hardly see him now." "He's just a dot!" Then: "I must go home, it's so late." They all realize they must go home; they bow in their own especial fashions to one another and disappear.

Curtains are drawn on Scene I.

Place screens bearing a large calendar for December, 1926, with Christmas wreath hung above it in front of table.

Scene II shows Santa Claus asleep in a chair, his enormous pack on the floor beside him. Dolls and horns and sleds project from the top of the pack. Santa Claus wakes with a start, stretches, looks at his wrist-watch: "Time for forty more winks!" and promptly goes to sleep again.

The bookworm enters, crawls up to pack. He stretches one brown-draped arm from his sheath and begins unpacking sack. Everything after the first layer of toys is a book. He pretends to "devour" these, but really manages to conceal them after "devouring" in a big basket hidden behind Santa Claus' chair. When the pack is empty worm replaces toys at the top of the pack just as Santa Claus awakes, picks up pack and starts to leave the platform, reading his list aloud: "Books for Mary Smith, Tom Brown, Sally Black, Lucy Snow, Charlie Thompson, Eddie Jones—I must get to work if I'm ever to get through tonight." When he reaches the back of the room he begins calling his reindeer: "Rain-Deer! Rain-Deer! My pack has been robbed! My pack has been robbed!"

The "rain-deers" are two girls dressed in colored rain coats, carrying umbrellas with tiny bells hung on the rib-ends. They run to him. There is much explanation of his loss—no book now for Mary Smith, Tom Brown, Sally Black. The rain-deers promise to find the books.

The curtain is drawn on scene II. For scene III the screens in front of table used in scene I are withdrawn. Oriental children come back to find worm on the table, his tail still partly concealed.

Children: "Well, here you are! How do you feel? Did you get something to eat?"

(Continued on page 1391)

Churches at Work

If your church has developed interesting and effective methods of carrying on its work, we shall be glad to have an opportunity of telling other churches about them through the medium of this page. Material should be addressed to the Board of Missionary Cooperation, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

THE NEW HONOR ROLL

Only fifteen states have contributed more to the unified budget during the first six months of the present fiscal year than they did for the same period last year. When one considers that twenty-three states have contributed less than they did last year, it is evident that there is great room for improvement. Fifteen falls far short of our aim of every one of the thirty-eight states in the Northern Baptist Convention on the honor roll. West Washington heads the list of fifteen; Indiana, New York metropolitan board, Oregon, Rhode Island, Delaware, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, Connecticut, Kansas, Northern California, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin complete this group. The order of the states is based on the percentage relation of amounts paid up to Oct. 31 of this year to amounts paid to the same date last year.

In respect to the total sum donated by the churches, the statement to the end of October still shows a gain as compared with last year, but the margin is small. Every church that exerts itself from this time forward to bring missionary contributions up to date and keep them there will aid materially in bringing to a successful issue a year which promises wonderful results in every field where our missionaries labor.

HELP WANTED

We are grateful to the few pastors who keep us informed regarding the important activities of their churches. However, we find that this number is too small. If your church is doing something worthy we want to give it credit. Write to the publicity office of the Board of Missionary Cooperation, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

GOOD REPORTS FROM MICHIGAN

Secy. John E. Smith of Michigan reports that eighty churches in Michigan have paid one-half or more of their quota during the first six months of the year. Eight of these churches have paid their entire quota for the year and are still going strong. There is good response from churches asking for the Christmas offering envelopes. With one exception, all Michigan associations are now organized for the World Tour. Many churches have ordered already more tickets for the tour than were sent to them.

EVERY PASTOR

A PASSENGER

Rev. J. T. Crawford, general secretary of the Kansas State Convention, is urging all pastors of Kansas to be among the first to book passage for the World Tour. It is hoped that 100 per cent of the Kansas pastors will have made reservations on the good ship Evangel by Jan. 1.

PORTO RICAN CHURCH AT WORK

The church in Santurce, Porto Rico, is in the midst of an every-member campaign which will last for six weeks. This is something new for native churches but the people have taken hold of the idea well. We shall be interested in the results of this canvass.

MAKING THE MOST OF AN OPPORTUNITY

Many churches have availed themselves of the opportunity presented by the Board of Missionary Cooperation to use a variety of cuts in church calendars free of charge. Many attractive calendars have resulted from the use of these cuts. Cuts of suitable World Tour subjects are now available. Also, more than 900 stereopticon lectures picturing 100 different subjects that are referred to in the Log of the airship Evangel may be obtained from any of the twenty-eight depositories which the denomination has established. There is one in almost every state convention office.

ANOTHER FINE PLAN

Secy. Frank Anderson, Iowa, writes of the following interesting plan: An honor roll is to be printed in the Iowa Record of all churches booking at least 85 per cent of their families for the World Tour. This idea is "catching fire" among the pastors and a large enrolment is expected. Also, at Le Mars, Iowa, an active member of the Baptist church who is a station agent will dress in his uniform and take charge of the sale of tickets. The matter will be presented at the services of the first Sunday of the ticket canvass, and the people will be urged to get their tickets from the station agent at once.

"RALLY DAY PLANS"

We should be glad to hear from churches which can offer novel suggestions for rally day. The exchange of plans between the churches cannot but be helpful.

"BAPTIST WORK DAY"

First church, Kearney, Neb., has instituted an annual event, "Baptist work day," which has proved interesting and helpful. Some weeks before this anniversary affair takes place a committee is appointed to create a favorable atmosphere for the celebration. "Minute men" present the matter publicly; a letter of explanation, with offering envelopes enclosed, is sent to each family; the daily papers give the matter publicity and a conspicuous placard announces the coming event.

All who can, gather at the church building on the specified day to do certain work which has been laid out by the committee. Aside from this, each individual is asked to give, as a special offering, the value of a day's work, whatever line he may be engaged. A supper is served to all and the offering is presented as a climax to the festivities.

Encouraging results have been reported by this church. Aside from the generous offering and a fine spirit of social fellowship, a spirit of working together has been created. It is this cooperative spirit that so many churches lack and find hard to cultivate. The spirit of the day is carried over and often some who could not arrange to be free on the specified "work day," have volunteered to give some other time for special tasks. After three years, "Baptist work day" has been conceded a success.

GOOD WORK

First church, Marion, Iowa, Rev. W. Robinson, pastor, reports all financial obligations met in full including one-twelfth of the benevolence budget each month. An every-member canvass undertaken recently by Calvary church, Davenport, Iowa, resulted in greatly increased returns. The church had a budget of $1500 for missions and has subscribed $1800.

A GOOD INTRODUCTION

Rev. Roy D. Wood, pastor of First church, New Kensington, Pa., is promoting the use of the Book of Remembrance in his church by an interesting method. He plans to preach on the Book of Remembrance and then introduce the book into as many homes as possible. We heartily endorse this idea and hope that other pastors will make use of the suggestion.

Among Ourselves

West China Letter

By JOE TAYLOR

WHEN one realizes that he is practically bottled up in Szechuan and cut off from the outside world, he hesitates to attempt to give any news or to express any opinion as to what is going on in the rest of China, and really knows nothing of what is taking place in the eastern half of the world. This is a fairly accurate description of the lot of missionaries here in western Szechuan. Last week I received a Shanghai letter three weeks old that gave me some news of the outside world. Since that time I have had no word either through press or by letter of what you folk "out west" are doing.

This does not apply to rumor—for the lady is ever busy. She keeps us filled up with hopes and fears in about equal proportion. One hears that Great Britain has really "interfered" in China by cleaning up old scores that have been piling up for years. The "strike" against Hongkong is said to be settled. A belated newspaper hinted that the Northern army under the leadership of Feng Kai Shek had captured the Wun-chang center (Wuchang, Hankow and Yangtze) but that Sun Chuan-Fang had won in his lot with Wu Pei Fu and was attacking Jiang on his flank near to Changsha, the capital of Hunnan. Later reports say that the "Reds" have been driven back from the Yangtze and that they will have a rough trip back to Chungtung.

Strife Among Students.

Here in Chengtu we are kept awake by trouble among the students at the West China Union university. For nearly a year they held meetings to decide whether the university should "rise or fall" according to the circular calling the meeting. It is not clear that they decided that momentous question; but they managed to quarrel among themselves and finally some of their number left the institution. This is all proper, being the custom for the defeated party to retire, on the theory that he lost so much "face" that it is not in his manners for him to stay.

What does all this surface action mean? Is it mere opera bouffe? Or is there, underneath these actions, some meaning? It is certainly true that there has to be so much pretence before one can expect anything definite to result. But there are underlying causes. Perhaps the actors do not appreciate. If one can dig deep enough to find the causes, he may come to understand the present state of China, and he may build up his faith in her future. There is so much good in this people that the observer of current events should not lose his faith in China's ultimate redemption. There is much to redeem.

It is trite to say that China is changing, for that might have been said for the last 100 years, and could be said of any nation that is throbbing with life and action. Yet, one gets a better point of view if he will constantly keep in mind that this Oriental people is undergoing a most drastic change and is rushing the process. Politically, the country is changing from an autocracy, superimposed upon an essential democracy, by way of a military feudalism to a republic. It has had the name of republic for fifteen years; yet it is not overstating the matter to say that it never seemed farther away from that goal than at the present time. Friends can help their faith in the ultimate triumph of the democracy by remembering that even when ruled by an alien monarchy, China was, in some respects, a democratic people. Hold on to that fact, for it is fundamental.

Intellectually the country is changing from an antiquated process of thought to a modern critical spirit. And, because for real speed there is nothing to beat a converted conservative, China is outdistancing even its big neighbor to the north in adopting all manner of ideas before taking the time and the trouble to think them through and make them their own. This leads to repudiation of all religious values. In fact, religion, of any kind or quality, is to be dispensed with because it is outworn and never was anything better than superstition. Moral sanctions are brushed aside as being more or less of a hindrance to people who wish to follow their own wishes and passions. This leads to moral chaos and social confusion. That is where China is at present, but is not going to stay there.

From Credulity to Skepticism.

Religiously, China is moving rapidly from credulity to alert skepticism. This also can readily be understood, and should not be the ground of any undue alarm. When one remembers that gross superstition held sway over the greater part of the people for milleniums, and that their religious forms only served to deepen this superstition, he should not be surprised at some of the results that have grown out of the discarding of these old forms of faith. It used to be matter for suspicion on the part of the Chinese to be told that a thing or an idea was new; now it is cause for refusal if one tells them that anything is old. Old people used to be revered and well cared for; but this is the day of the young man in this country and his father and grandfather are kindly but firmly placed on the shelf.

Progress in the industrial world has been considerably accelerated by contact with western peoples. From the individual shop, where the whole family worked as soon as they could, they have gotten to the stage of mass production in the large cities near the coast. This calls for organization, not only of the manufacturers but also of the workmen; and this has brought the modern trades union to take the place of the old-time guilds. All this unsettles the workman and makes him look about him for means of bettering his condition. The farm laborer leaves the land for the factory. Women go out to a long twelve-hour day at the mill. Children who ought to be in the primary school are cooped up in stuffy, ill-ventilated buildings. Some of them get so weary that they fall asleep as they stand at the machine.

This is but the briefest sketch of what is taking place in China today. No wonder those interested in the welfare of this people are beginning to ask themselves: Can it be done? It is the biggest thing in national redemption left on the face of the earth. Even those most enthusiastic about its accomplishment hold their breath at times when they see this country making some stupendous

Madonna

WHEN Mary held her Baby close,
And bent her head above him,
Did she dream of the lonely years,
Swept with a thousand doubts and fears,
With bitterness and want and tears?
Or did she only love him?

Did she, whose agony was past,
Think of a cross against the sky,
That would loom blackly, at the last,
Or did an angel's lullaby
Fill all her soul with melody?

Her shadowed eyes, what did they see,
As she gazed out, beyond his head,
Toward hilltops where white flocks were fed?

Oh, did she see another hill
Of utter pain?
Or did she vision with delight,
A silver star that swept the night
With radiance as softly bright
As April rain?

The wise men came, the wise men knelt
Beside her baby's resting place;
Who knows what Mary's spirit felt
There was a smile upon her face!
—MARGARET SANGSTER in Children, the Magazine for Parents.

blunder. Cynics nod and say, "I told you so." Christians are driven afresh to prayer. And the whole Christian world, East and West, is challenged to throw the best it has into this movement in order to save it from failure. The tragedy of it all is that just when the force of Christianity is most needed as a steadying force, the Chinese are refusing its aid, and the church in the West is hanging back in half-hearted fashion. So the world's supreme tragedy is being worked out.

Boston Letter

By CHARLES H. WATSON

The Inauguration of President Herrick

NOV. 30 was a notable day at Newton. Although gloomy, rainy weather greeted us there were other skies too bright to be darkened. And there was the Newton atmosphere, made up of rich memory and confident expectation. It made all the voices accordant, because the memories were of men consecrated to the truth, and the predominant expectation was of a continuance of the same enrichment.

It was a day of marked agreement in hymn, scripture, prayer, solemn charge and ringing note of gospel faithfulness in the inaugural message of President Herrick. The full church attested this agreement. Remembering the dark day and the continuous rain, the surprise was evident at the fulness of the spacious meeting-house. The personality of Doctor Herrick was the attraction, and the pervasive influence that made us weather-proof for the time and dominated an uplifting program.

Mr. Albert L. Scott, beloved president of the trustees, was the presiding officer at the various functions, presenting the keys of the institution and showing intimate touch with all its affairs. In his charge to the new president, Dr. H. A. Heath, state convention secretary, was really the voice of the churches, uttering their expectations of the seminary for ministers who shall proclaim to them the "victorious life"—a most impressive message with a welcome hint of spiritual intimacy.

The Inaugural Address and Luncheon

The address of President Herrick was in his own manner, simple, sweet and plain, handling without gloves or affectation the conditions and materials of present-day ministry. Common sense was spiced with humor, and the serious intent of leading an expanding school for modern men of God in the ministry was unmistakable. His appreciative tribute to his own teachers was generous, and his affectionate reference to ex-President Horr as the man who lived "in the house of the interpreter" touched our hearts. The impressive inaugural prayer was given by ex-Pres. Nathan E. Wood, now a lecturer in Gordon college.

The varying beauty of scholars' and doctors' gowns was much in evidence, adding to the academic picture. It showed Newton's standing in the general scholastic fraternity.

The day before, the Boston ministers' conference had adjourned to Newton to hear, with the students, President Evans of Crozer on "The Minister as an Interpreter." It was an inspiration to hear some of the best thinking of a man so deservedly held in honor among Baptist people.

At the inaugural luncheon which followed the church program there were addresses by President Evans, Dean W. L. Sperry of Harvard and President Marsh of Boston university. After the luncheon the large company relaxed in a chapel reception at the church, given to Doctor and Mrs. Herrick, and heard happy congratulatory speeches from Dr. C. N. Arbuckle and Rev. Frank B. Fagerburg of Springfield. So closed a notable day that seemed to create a weather of its own and become luminous in spite of "old probabilities." It was good to greet President Cutten of Colgate among the scholastic chieftains.

Dr. George A. Gordon

Surprise, widespread regret and sense of approaching loss accompanies the resignation of Doctor Gordon. It betrays his strong hold upon the community beyond the immediate constituency that he serves. So fresh and vigorous has been his later ministry that, forget-

THE BOARD OF MISSIONARY COOPERATION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

CONTRIBUTIONS TO UNIFIED BUDGET

Rank	States	1	2	3	4
		Amount paid to Oct. 31 Last Year	Amount paid to Oct. 31 This Year	Quota for This Year	Amount of Quota due to Oct. 31
1.	Washington, W.	$ 15,743.68	$ 23,015.49	$ 55,000.00	$ 27,500.00
2.	Indiana	42,855.84	55,926.42	165,000.00	82,500.00
3.	N. Y. Metro.	61,308.19	77,495.60	290,744.00	145,372.00
4.	Oregon	9,804.61	11,835.04	60,000.00	30,000.00
5.	Rhode Island	32,749.18	37,651.40	115,000.00	67,500.00
6.	Delaware	2,936.02	3,324.76	9,500.00	4,750.00
7.	Michigan	61,375.76	67,526.89	200,000.00	100,000.00
8.	Missouri	9,628.74	10,582.01	35,136.00	17,568.00
9.	New Jersey	105,575.61	115,525.97	303,000.00	151,500.00
10.	Connecticut	45,147.25	48,379.61	161,000.00	80,500.00
11.	Kansas	33,969.53	36,281.25	175,000.00	87,500.00
12.	Calif., N.	35,358.99	37,539.66	121,000.00	60,500.00
13.	Nebraska	17,703.73	18,283.86	80,500.00	40,250.00
14.	Pennsylvania	161,968.73	163,852.76	527,000.00	263,500.00
15.	Wisconsin	20,834.39	20,927.70	72,000.00	36,000.00
16.	Ohio	95,772.90	94,782.85	355,500.00	177,750.00
17.	Colorado	21,067.10	20,833.54	95,000.00	47,500.00
18.	N. Y. State	191,931.90	189,692.33	609,000.00	304,500.00
19.	Massachusetts	114,825.01	110,482.89	480,500.00	240,250.00
20.	New Hampshire	16,139.47	15,435.13	45,000.00	22,500.00
21.	Minnesota	30,852.13	29,143.12	125,000.00	62,500.00
22.	West Virginia	35,904.04	33,671.19	140,000.00	70,000.00
23.	Illinois	97,590.97	90,971.49	320,500.00	160,250.00
24.	Calif., S.	127,334.02	117,396.23	330,756.00	165,378.00
25.	Maine	24,750.29	22,942.53	110,000.00	55,000.00
26.	Vermont	14,544.38	13,338.32	45,000.00	22,500.00
27.	Idaho	7,894.87	7,209.34	18,000.00	9,000.00
28.	Iowa	27,637.48	25,020.94	90,000.00	45,000.00
29.	North Dakota	5,027.02	4,400.96	21,500.00	10,750.00
30.	Montana	4,115.51	3,547.81	15,500.00	7,750.00
31.	Washington, E.	8,168.70	6,540.27	34,000.00	17,000.00
32.	Dist. of Col.	19,357.57	15,149.15	30,000.00	15,000.00
33.	Nevada	1,395.65	1,082.26	3,800.00	1,900.00
34.	Arizona	7,400.98	5,255.71	19,500.00	9,750.00
35.	Utah	2,230.42	937.78	5,000.00	2,500.00
	Not ranked on account of delayed reports.*
	South Dakota	6,298.42	7,569.39	31,500.00	15,750.00
	Wyoming	1,978.48	1,456.61	8,700.00	4,350.00
	Individual and Miscellaneous	45,265.27	201,619.77
Total		$1,564,540.83	$1,746,628.03	$5,303,636.00	$2,651,818.00

* Delayed reports either last year or this year make comparison with previous year impracticable. The order in which the states are listed is determined by the percentage relation of amounts paid this year (Column 2) to amounts paid last year (Column 1).

ing his age and protracted strain of service, we listened for his authoritative word upon any great concern of life or policy. He seemed to breathe the sanest and most intelligent religion and to give us confidence when we needed it. His forty-two years of ministry in a great historic church was so sustained and luminous that we assumed it could go on indefinitely. But it will close Oct. 1, 1927, when he will be seventy-five years old.

In a certain type of Christian preaching, to many, this resignation seems to ring us to the end of an era. Doctor Jordan was the product of conditions other than those now producing ministers, and preeminently represented the former scholarly and intellectual ministry that made a book-man, and maker of books, and poured rich accumulations of years of study into compelling pulpit utterance. Such a minister has no competition even in an age of brilliant and surprising wonders.

An Anniversary in Charlestown

Historically the old First church, Charlestown, is one of the richest in Greater Boston. It has been celebrating its 125th anniversary. It is really entitled to many more years than that, for it was entangled in the roots of the old first church, Boston, which goes back to 1665. However, a good historian on the program reached back capably into the times of persecution and romance which the first Charlestown Baptists shared with early heroes of the faith in Boston. Rev. W. J. Cloues, librarian of Newton seminary, and one of the church members, gave us a scholarly historical sketch that did the church justice and will be cherished. The inspiring celebration included Prof. Woodman Bradbury of Newton, Dr. E. C. Herrick president of Newton and former pastor, Doctors Heath, Forshee and Swaffield. During the last thirty years of the Charlestown pastorate the H's have had it. Horr, Herrick and Hanson. Two presidents of Newton served the church in succession. Now Rev. H. L. Hanson, one of the solidest of our ministers, strongly holds his leadership there in his twelfth year.

West Somerville

One of the largest and most interesting of our greater Boston churches is that at West Somerville, Rev. Frank M. Swaffield, pastor. It is charged with life and activity and, like a lusty youth, is always outgrowing its clothes. Long as this energetic people should have been housed in a great Somerville Temple, accommodating its throngs of worshippers and workers. The church is strategically planted at Davis square where all the lines of traffic converge. It is a place of congregating, just where a church should be. Singularly enough, it is but a quarter of a mile from the North Avenue church of Cambridge. The two cities are virtually one, and the two churches are on the same field and working together. Perhaps Baptists may come wise on that point. The West

Somerville church has the people, the expanded and up-to-date organization, a pastoral leader with a vision, and power and energy in planning and achieving. Nov. 7, there happened to be 272 in his men's class, but one feature in a great work that everywhere feels his firm grip in the seventh year of his leadership. The church has 1650 members and 2000 in the Bible school departments. There were fifty-nine baptisms last year. Mrs. Swaffield is president of the Woman's Baptist Social Union of Boston, an organization of 500 women from all of Eastern Massachusetts sisterhood.

Hotel Expansion in Boston

The new Parker House on the site of the old one, is practically finished. It stretches up with a slender giraffe-like beauty, and by comparison, makes the solid King's chapel on the opposite corner look like the largest tomb in the "old burial ground." Already the New Bellevue, standing on the site of the former Unitarian building on Beacon street, has its windows polished, the curtains hung, and the bloom tested on its big banqueting hall. Surely modern building construction has reached the acme of scientific energy and precision. With the mammoth New Statler, in Park Square, and the tower-like new Ritz-Carlton facing the public garden, there will come such a deluge of hotels to Boston as to start the query whether the supply has exceeded the demand. But the attractive hostelrys will beckon more and bigger conventions to Boston. Besides, the "Hub" is a great city where much history has been made and all sorts of ructions started and continued.

Rev. Clyde W. Robbins, nearly two years pastor at Roslindale, has resigned to accept the call of the Plymouth Congregational church of Brooklyn, N. Y., to be assistant pastor to Dr. J. Stanley Durkee, who formerly was also a Baptist minister.

District of Columbia

BY HENRY W. O. MILLINGTON

THE forty-ninth annual meeting of the Columbia Association of Baptist Churches was held, Nov. 15-18, with the National Baptist Memorial church of Washington, Gove G. Johnson, pastor. All the sessions were largely attended and an excellent spirit prevailed. In fact, it was announced by Dr. J. J. Muir, who has been a pastor here for thirty-seven years, that this was the greatest associational gathering he had attended. The new National Memorial church building was comfortable and convenient in every way. Aside from our own pastors, addresses were made by Harold C. Phillips, Mrs. George Caleb Moor, W. C. Newton of China, F. A. Agar, David Lawrence, editor of the United States Daily, J. W. O'Hara, P. H. J. Lerrigo, J. C. Masee and Floyd H. Adams. All brought timely and stirring messages, and all contributed toward our evangelistic campaign. The address of Doctor Masee made a profound impression upon all our people. The annual sermon was preached by Edward O. Clark, pastor of the Chevy Chase church, and the doctrinal sermon by Henry J. Smith, pastor of the Petworth church. Officers reelected for the ensuing year are James W. Many, moderator; Edward H. De Groot, Jr., vice-moderator; S. G. Nottingham, clerk; E. B. Shaver, assistant clerk, and George B. Bryan, treasurer. Reports for the year showed progress. There has been a net gain in the members of our churches of 273; Baptists in the District of Columbia now number 14,096. The changing conditions in Washington life will be appreciated when it is remembered that there have been 448 baptisms, and a total of 1140 additions, yet the net gain in membership is only 273. Our churches have contributed $120,121 for benevolent objects of all kinds. Baptist Sunday schools have a total membership of 14,347, which is the largest enrolment of any denomination in the District of Columbia.

New Churches.

In the last four years we have organized churches in four new fields. In this period these churches have produced the following results: Membership, 322; property values, $103,750; home expenditures for current year, $18,451.97; benevolences, $3,819.32. The only discount that can be made to these figures is in the value of properties, where the values are offset by certain debt obligations. However, the debts are not oppressively large and are being constantly liquidated by the churches with the aid of the association. The current gifts of these churches represent an average of $391 per member, a remarkable record, representing consecration and sacrifice of an unusual order. It is interesting to note that the total annual income represents about 5 per cent on the property investment. If we should go back a little farther and consider the development at Immanuel and Petworth and Takoma Park, we should have a still more startling illustration of the value and importance of our promotional activities. Our hope of denominational strength lies in just such outreaching endeavor. The strategic value of such projects is seen in the peculiar location of these fields, the quality of the membership, and the prospect of eventual independent development.

Grace church celebrated the twentieth anniversary of the pastorate of F. W. Johnson with a reception, Nov. 10, and appropriate Sunday services, Nov. 14. At the reception the church presented Mrs. Johnson with a bouquet of roses, and Mr. Johnson with a box containing twenty five-dollar gold pieces. During Mr. Johnson's pastorate Grace church property has increased in value from $26,000 to $125,000, and there is no debt; 1240 new members have been welcomed, 796 by baptism. The amount of money raised in this period is $197,500. These figures indicate the type of work which Mr. Johnson has done as pastor of Grace church. Fifth church, John E. Briggs, pastor, has sustained a loss in the death of Mr. E. I. Gessford. He was present at the session of the Sunday school, Nov. 14, apparently in his usual health, and died on his way home from the services of the church. He will be greatly missed, both in the church and in our denominational activities.

Montana News and Notes

BY ROBERT W. SHAW
Evangelistic Conference

THE joint evangelistic conference of Baptists of Montana and Wyoming was held Nov. 16-17. The attendance was good, especially in view of the fact that a number of ministers were engaged in evangelistic meetings and so could not come. The program was in charge of the secretaries of the two states, E. R. Curry and J. P. Jacobs. Dr. A. M. Petty as the outside speaker gave addresses of a high order and regeneration and redemption were stressed in such a way as to challenge the younger men to want to preach as he demonstrated it could be done. Many of the local ministers participated in the program, and taking the conference as a whole it was one of the best. First church, Billings, was gracious and considerate in hospitality extended.

Among the Churches

Last spring there was an avalanche of resignations, but now practically all the churches have pastors or have called men who will soon settle with them. Among the latest arrivals were Pastor and Mrs. Derbyshire from Marietta, Ohio, who are now located at Roundup, the center of much coal mining. G. Elton Harris has made his bow in Billings and the work is beginning to prosper. The church is completing its educational plant which was begun several years ago, but which was interfered with when a bank failure wiped out the funds.

The Assembly

It seems early to begin to think about the assembly, but already the commission has set the dates as Aug. 2-11, and has put the goal of attendance at 150. This is a modest number, but since the population in this state is small and some young people must drive two days to reach the grounds, though they are centrally located, it seems to be a worthwhile one. R. W. Shaw is president; E. Clutterbuck, dean; T. L. Huxley, business manager, and Miss Berna Brown, secretary-treasurer of the commission.

Other Notes

E. Lagerstrom, field secretary of the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association, has been spending a few weeks in the state making friends for the Baptist hospitals in St. Paul, Minn. Mr. Lagerstrom is a brother beloved. The pastors admire his work because he does not minimize the task of the convention and the churches. He has met a cordial reception and made friends for the hospital.

The church at Hamilton is engaged in an evangelistic service, with State Evangelist W. F. Frazier leading. This is one of the smaller churches located in a strategic field.

Pres. J. W. Brougher and Secy. W. H. Bowler visited First church, Butte, on the evening of Nov. 12. An encouraging audience greeted the two men. Their visit will prove beneficial to the church in days to come.

Dry forces of the state are endeavoring to explain how it was that all prohibition enforcement laws were wiped off the statutes in the recent election by over 10,000 majority. The consensus of opinion is that the dries were asleep at the switch, for one thing, and that the kind of enforcement which we have had and the type of enforcement officers has helped to some extent. But already the wets and the dries are beginning to plan for another contest two years hence.

Baptist South-Wide Student Conference

BY ERNEST O. SELLERS

LAST January one student representative from each of the seventeen southern states met at Memphis to plan a program for a South-wide Baptist student conference. Their suggestions, modified in no essential regard, were approved by the inter-board commission, which fosters the work among Baptist students of the South. There are 117 schools and colleges owned and operated by Baptists of the South with 45,000 students, and a total enrolment of between 90,000 and 100,000 Baptist students in all southern colleges, state, denominational and otherwise.

Nearly 2000 of these students, representing every southern state (Texas sent nearly 300), met in Birmingham, Oct. 29-31, to carry out this program.

Their gathering, viewed from any angle, was an unqualified success. The representative attendance of denominational leaders and of students, the frank discussions, the high spiritual tone, all combined to make it perhaps the superior of any young people's gathering in America in recent years. Youth brought its enthusiasm, ideals and spirit of service, while maturity presented counsel and sympathy based upon its years of experience.

The conferences led by student presentations gave ample opportunity for self-expression and the idealistic note was prominent, practicability predominated, revealing an honest and fearless facing of student problems, campus purity, world questions, missions, race relations, industry and war.

Prominent leaders, newspaper reporters and others combined in stating that the so-called "rebellion of youth" is unknown in the South and that, so far as Baptist students are concerned, all are local adherents and supporters of the local church as the only organization established by Christ and the one through which they will be able to work out effectively the great advancing kingdom program.

"Christ, the Master of My Generation" was more than a happy slogan. No point was more emphasized than that the student who wants to make his life count for God can find abundant opportunity both at home and abroad, but the place to begin is on the campus, in the local church and the home.

In addition to such speakers as Truett, Hulley, Scarborough, Carter Helm Jones, Cammack, Van Ness and others, Miss Jessie Burrall and S. D. Gordon of "Quiet Talks" fame, were also present. The time was almost equally divided between students and speakers who have reached the period of mature leadership.

Student Secretary Frank H. Leavell has created a Baptist student solidarity, aroused the denomination to a sense of its responsibility for students and caused states and many of the larger institutions to appoint Baptist student secretaries. In giving his brief report he said, "You can make Christ Master of your generation by crowning Christ Master of your wills, thought life and conduct; and through personal purity, loyalty to the local church, personal soul-winning and a missionary passion dwell in close contact with Jesus." His words met with universal student approval.

Next year the plan of individual state rallies will be resumed and probably gatherings in larger areas will be held the following year. Students presided and conducted all of the sessions successfully. After spending a few hours in such a gathering we are convinced that the youth of our land are at heart sound and capable of assuming the burdens we shall lay down.

Detroit Baptist Doings

BY ALBERT H. FINN

DETROIT and Michigan Baptists are keenly interested in the new day for Baptists. They are glad that the Northern Baptist Convention is to meet in Chicago in May and that an attendance of 20,000 is envisioned. With a program that will include the many enterprises of the denomination presented in comprehensive review, we are certain that 20,000 loyal Baptists will be in Chicago. Stimulated with the cheering facts then presented, the entire denomination will rise to new heights of consecration in facing its problems. Detroit and Michigan can be counted on for their quota.

This year Detroit entertains the National Baptist Convention (negro), and an attendance of 20,000 enthusiastic Baptists is expected. This is the first time that this convention has come so far north. The rapid shifting of negro population northward has warranted this rather radical change. Our more than sixty negro churches are alive to their tremendous responsibility and several building operations are in progress that they may be better prepared to entertain their brethren. The old Second church, now in its ninetieth year, will be the center of the convention's activities. A large addition to the present building is almost completed. Doctor Bradby, wide-awake pastor of Second church, is dean of the Baptist pastors. He has built up a strong church.

Detroit, like many other great cities, is developing a suburban district that makes up the metropolitan area. Many of these are separate, city or village corporations. At present, our so-called metropolitan district is comprehended in the fifteen mile circle beyond the present city limits. In reality the metropolitan area extends far beyond that line. The same influences that are pushing Detroit onward and outward are at work in these smaller cities and communities.

Industrially, Detroit and these aggressive neighbors are closely related. This means that socially and financially they are closely allied. It also develops that these suburban centers are face to face with changing religious conditions that call for careful study, wise leadership, and generous investment in the interest of kingdom advance. The calm complacency of fifty or twenty-five years ago must give place to real anxiety and Christian statesmanship if the problems of our great cities and rapidly growing suburban districts are worthily met. The psychology of the village church will not do. We are living in different times and under different conditions. We must meet today's problems in a more intensive way.

Founders' day was observed recently by a dinner at the Woodward Avenue church, when the children's home was the central theme. The program was informing and nearly 400 representatives from the various churches were present. This new Baptist enterprise is only two years old, but has taken its place among such agencies of Detroit, and is firmly implanted in the hearts and lives of our Baptist folk. The money for the needed new building has not yet been raised, but it will come. This month the churches, Bible schools, B. Y. P. U.'s and women's unions are gathering a Christmas offering as the maintenance fund for the coming year. Both founders' day and the Christmas offering for the children's home are annual features of the denominational program.

Evangelism has been in the fore for weeks in the Detroit area. Pastors and people have been deeply interested in his vital function of the Christian life. The tide of selfishness is running strong in modern life. Personal luxury, the keen desire to be entertained, the shirking of responsibility and unwillingness to accede to discipline are influences that kill the spirit of Jesus Christ. He came to minister, not to be ministered unto. Service is a hard word until the Master's motif is adopted as our deepest purpose, when soul winning becomes a passion and we sense the world's highest objective.

Registrations for the ship Evangel in a trip around the world are coming in numbers. Results should follow the study of our various mission stations. God is moving in a mighty way upon the nations. The difficulty is to get a comprehensive idea of what is happening to the hearts and minds of our constituency.

The Detroit city B. Y. P. U. is arranging for its annual banquet which will be held, Jan. 21. Doctor Abernethy of Washington, D. C., will be the speaker. We have an effective organization in Detroit of young people of vision and consecration, training for the larger tasks that mature years will bring.

Mr. Floyd Carr of New York, representing the Department of Missionary Education of the N. B. C., and especially charged with the propagation of the new boys' organization known as the Royal Ambassadors, has been in Detroit visiting the churches and organizing the boys into this new movement. He has re-

An Incident

BY ALLYN K. FOSTER

OUR Board of Education in its work among the students of the country has always been mainly concerned with winning to or holding to the Christian church our boys and girls in the most sensitive stretch of their lives. Our student pastors, as I have had every opportunity to know, are among the most devoted of all evangelists. They and their wives literally give their lives, including their home life, for these young people. In this year of evangelism their interest in their students is keener than ever. That interest has been made clear to me recently in the excellent preparation these men and women have made for my coming. It was in one of those colleges, fertilized by these earnest workers, that occurred the incident of which I wish our people to know.

At that university there is a radical club where many students question everything in the heavens above and the earth beneath. Their thinking for the most part is destructive. Nothing is accepted on authority, and unless you understood, your heart might contract at hearing their unbeliefs. Some of them see no need of God, question all received ethics, calling morals "conventionalities" with high scorn, scoff at orthodox views of the Bible, of prayer, of miracle, smile patronizingly when one speaks of conversion, and rail much at the church. I was invited to the club to stand inquisition. I had been in such places before. The finest minds among our students are often radicals like these, and I was not wholly unprepared for the grilling I got. For a couple of hours it was a set-to, all trying to speak at once. There was no vote taken on any of the issues, so nobody was convinced so far as I could see. My part was to widen their premises, to suggest new items for consideration, to admit just criticisms, and especially to bring a spirit of sympathy and understanding into the discussion. I think I understood them better and I suspect that they saw what I was after more clearly when we parted toward midnight.

Now comes the incident. After my last talk on "The Quest for God," three of the ringleaders of that club—one, the ringmaster of it—came to me to say that they had come to see the way out, not by solution of intellectual tangles but by following Jesus in his way of life. Was that worth while? Do you see any statistics here? Well, that's what we call evangelism by interpretation.

ceived a cordial welcome everywhere.

January will be an outstanding month for Detroit Baptists. In addition to the B. Y. P. U. annual dinner a mass meeting will be held, Jan. 14, to greet Doctor Brougher, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, and Doctor Bowler of the Board of Missionary Cooperation. This will be one of the largest gatherings of Baptists ever held here. The social service committee of which W. P. Lovett is chairman, has the preparations in hand.

Among the Churches

The new house of worship for the Halsey church will be dedicated, Dec. 19. Rev. Earl D. Sims has done a remarkable piece of work with this suburban church, both in the erection of the new meeting house and in the upbuilding of the church itself. He is truly a church invigorator.

A new church has been organized in Fordson, formerly known as Springwells, with Rev. F. E. Cary as the organizing pastor. It is within this incorporation that the River Rouge plant of the Ford Motor Co. is situated.

Nearly a half dozen new mission churches and Sunday schools have been established by Baptist workers to care for newer residential sections, and still the needs of this great city are not met.

The Christmas party given for our women missionaries every December was held this year in the Dexter Boulevard church. This is always a happy event when "our girls" are made to feel that their fruitful lives are really appreciated here in Detroit.

Miss Mildred Davidson was a recent Detroit visitor. She was one of the guests of honor and speaker at the women's conference at the Woodward Avenue church, Dec. 7.

Contracts have been awarded for the construction of the new Grand River Avenue church. This will be a fine example of church architecture and will meet the growing needs of one of the newer residential districts. The building will face on Wells street, with an entrance to Grand River Avenue. The new building will be the auditorium; the Bible-school unit will be built later.

Nebraska Notes

BY R. R. COON

DR. ALLYN K. FOSTER, who is making a tour of Baptist colleges as the representative of the Board of Education, with the purpose, we understand, of holding student conferences and giving chapel and evening addresses, spent a week with Grand Island college. His chapel talks were to the point, and his meetings with the different classes were encouraging. "He set us to thinking," was the general opinion—a service in this fast, modern age. This was not Doctor Foster's first visit to the college; we hope it will not be his last.

We have short records of evangelistic work now since the "six months' truce" of the Northern Convention has hardly begun. Evangelist R. R. Richards conducted a strong meeting at Polk and actually "snatched victory out of defeat;"

CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Why Not List

THE BAPTIST

as a

CHRISTMAS PRESENT?

No Greater Value

Is Offered

For the Money

Only $2.50

The Gift Will Repeat Itself

Fifty-Two Times

or

Once a Week for 52 Weeks

Subscribe for your young people just starting a home of their own.

Subscribe for your home town reading-room or for the Y. M. or Y. W. C. A.

Subscribe for your old pastor, who will prize your gift and the giver.

Subscribe for the prisoner in the penitentiary. Select names furnished.

Subscribe for worthy people on our lists unable to pay for the paper.

Subscribe for people in your own church who cannot afford to pay for it.

Subscribe for your pastor, if he does not take the paper.

Subscribe for your Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages.

THE BAPTIST

Is acknowledged by competent judges to be one of the very best religious weekly papers published. It covers each week all the salient and vital things in life in tabloid form. Its main object is to advance the kingdom of God in the world through Baptist organization and service and in loyalty to Baptist faith and practice. Cosmopolitan in its sweep and universal in its sympathy it takes in the whole world.

A SPECIAL SERVICE

During the month of January THE BAPTIST will publish special matter in connection with the aerial world tour described in our editorial columns this week. Bundles of the paper will be mailed to one address each week of the tour on receipt of money accompanying the order at the rate of five cents a copy.

Your Own Paper

THE BAPTIST

Your Own Paper

2320 S. Michigan Ave. Chicago, Illinois

thirty-five were converted, twenty-five joining the church by baptism. Others joined at Stromsberg, the twenty-five-year-old daughter of Polk, then Laclede. Mr. Richards is holding revival services at Alliance. Thanksgiving day he was the preacher at the union meeting.

A B. Y. P. U. rally of 100 young people of the Northwestern Association was held at Alliance, Nov. 27. Churches represented were Kilgore, Chadron, Scottsbluff and Bridgeport. Rev. Ezra Duncan, B. Y. P. U. state director, R. R. Richards

Here, There and Everywhere

THE MEN OF Marion Avenue church, Aurora, Ill., have formed a men's club for social and church activities with George W. Baxter as president; John J. Maloney, secretary; Fred W. Council, treasurer.

MINISTERS AND TEACHERS who find themselves in need of apt illustrations for sermons and lesson talks will delight in a book by H. M. Tyndall, pastor of the People's Tabernacle, New York City, entitled "Illustrative Anecdotes." The book has more than 600 pages and contains 1200 anecdotes.

THE CHURCH AT ROCHESTER, Pa., W. F. Bostick, pastor, observed its second annual homecoming day, Nov. 7, with 400 present. Five adults were received into the church by baptism and 260 persons joined in the communion service. Bouquets of flowers given by relatives represented shut-ins. The pastor's morning sermon was on "The Church of My Dreams"; the evening, "A $500 Prize Sermon."

CALVARY CHURCH, Norristown, Pa., Henry G. Weston Smith, pastor, is reviving the "family communion service." On Nov. 14 it had a communion service at which it aimed to have every family in the church present and sitting together as a family. The pastor's sermon was on "The Family and the Church." The report is "it proved to be a great occasion."

DEDICATION SERVICES for the new building of the West Park church, St. Louis, Mo., P. G. Van Zandt, pastor, were held, Nov. 21-26. W. H. Geistweit of Dayton, Ohio, former pastor of Third church, St. Louis, preached the dedication sermon Sunday morning, Nov. 21. The dedication offering resulted in $5000 in addition to pledges. The first twelve days of November were given to special meetings in this church, with Charles Durden as speaker and the pastor as singer.

RECENTLY RETURNED FROM Europe, Egypt, Palestine and Syria, E. A. Fridell, pastor of First church, Fresno, Calif., has been taking his people on a "pilgrimage through Bible lands" at the Sunday evening service. The pastor calls for decisions every evening, and for several Sundays adults have walked down the aisles to unite with the church.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Charlestown, Mass., has issued in attractive form a historical sketch in commemoration of its 125th anniversary. It is prepared by Rev. Wil-and W. W. Crabtree were the chief speakers.

A full list of evangelists is given in the last state bulletin. But it is not infrequently asked, "What is the matter with the old-fashioned revival when the pastor remembered Paul's suggestion, 'Do the work of an evangelist?'" The agony of a free-will offering would not then face a burdened church and as much permanent good might result. Try it; perhaps so many young pastors would not then be leaving the regular pastorate.

liam J. Cloues, librarian of the Newton Theological institution.

Nov. 7, Rev. Roy E. Williamson began his pastorate with the Warren Avenue church, Detroit, Mich.

LA GRANGE (ILL.) church, Eaton B. Freeman, pastor, held special services, Nov. 15-19, with Rev. and Mrs. R. B. Favoright of Maywood as speakers.

FIFTY PERSONS were given the hand of fellowship, five baptized and three converted and approved for baptism at Temple

The Baptist

Chicago, December 18, 1926

Vol. VII

No. 46

THE BAPTIST is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 2320 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Rates: Single subscription $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries, postage $1.04 extra; in Canada 52 cents.

Change of address: Old and new addresses should be in our hand two weeks before a change goes into effect. Give key number as it appears on label. Remittances: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment is through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, add exchange.

Renewal notice will be sent previous to date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should send in renewal promptly or, if paper is not desired send discontinuance order.

Advertising: Display: Per agate line, 30 cents; full page, $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituaries: 100 words free; 4 cents per word for additional; resolutions printed verbatim, 4 cents per word; cast to accompany order.

Correspondence should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, 2320 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

No manuscripts returned unless accompanied by full return postage.

Want Ads

Big Reduction now on Offering Envelopes, only 8 cts. per carton for "Wasteless System," Duplex and others. 20% to 30% discount. Free samples. Write Dufold-Tri-fold Company, Trenton, New Jersey.

Pastor's Assistant with religious education experience, desires position January 1. Address L, care of The Baptist.

Earn Trip to Europe. Organizing for lowest cost tours. 37 days $295. 60 days $490. Allen Tours, Little Bldg., Boston, Mass.

Chaplain Frank M. Wells, "The Soldier Evangelist," National Military Home, Leavenworth, Kan. Twenty-fifth season. Time open for winter and spring meetings with pastor wanting Bible evangelist. Terms: Entertainment and $100 and up for a two weeks' meeting according to financial strength of church.

church, Chicago, Nov. 14. J. H. Hughes is the pastor.

It's SMALL, it's mimeographed, but it's live and suggests a church actively at work—the bulletin of the First church, Barton, Ill., Carl A. Nissen, pastor.

THE ROYERSFORD (PA.), CHURCH, H. S. Crossan, pastor, has begun very definitely the months of evangelism. A personal workers' class meets every Sunday after the evening service. Oct. 31, four persons were baptized and on Nov. 7 ten were received into the church. Mr. Crossan has been with the church five years and is doing an effective work with the appreciation of the people substantially expressed.

THE NOV. 6 ISSUE OF THE BAPTIST reported twenty-five members received into the first church, Oakland, Calif., during the month of September, when the total should have been about fifty. Sixty-four members were received during the month of October. The present membership is 1351. J. Whitcomb Brougner is the pastor.

ENTERING UPON THE third year of his pastorate Rev. I. Fredmund of Calvary church, Albert Lea, Minn., gave a review of the work of the church and its various activities, using several interesting maps. One of these showed the membership with an increase of about fifty during the present pastorate. The membership is now 300. Another map revealed the attendance of the Bible school for the years 1923-1926. There has been a growth of the average attendance of 143 in 1923 to 186 for the first nine months of this year. The financial report showed that during the year 1922 $545 was contributed (not including money raised by the different organizations). Last year it reached $18,029 (including a gift of $5000) and during the first nine months of this year $18,263 has been added. A new brick building has been constructed, valued at $37,500 and the parsonage, valued at $5000 has been remodeled. During the last few months the senior B.Y.P.U. has been reorganized, and an intermediate B.Y.P.U. organized (with big play and banquet). About twenty-five teams were used on a recent Sunday in a "day of devotion". A boy scout troop was organized and an impressive installation service held. A Bible conference was conducted by Dr. Howland Hanson of Des Moines university and plans are being made for future activities and accomplishments.

Rev. A. P. Witt, who was associated in evangelistic work with Chaplain Frank Wells of the National Military Home, Owenworth, Kan., died, Oct. 30. A man of wealth, at the time of his death he was clothing, feeding and educating twenty-eight orphans. Chaplain Wells' words of him: "Mr. Witt was one of the most loyal and most consecrated men to whom I ever knew."

THE BULLETIN OF THIRD church, St. Louis, Henry Alford Porter, pastor, reports that during the three years of the present pastorate there have been 1240 additions to the church and $279,814 contributed, of which $123,103 was given to missions, education and beneficence. The celebration of Mr. and Mrs. Porter's third anniversary with the church was an occasion of happiness and thankfulness on the part of both pastor and people. A radio was presented to Mr. Porter.

HARRY BECKMAN, PASTOR at Dugger, Ind., and Mrs. Beckman are swinging into the evangelistic field with unusual promise. At Newcastle, Linton, Evansville and elsewhere in Indiana, in Louisville and other places in Kentucky, in city-wide, associational or county campaigns, as well as their local pastoral charges, they have developed a high degree of efficiency in evangelism and are winning local praise wherever they go. They are locating at Ownesboro, Ky., where they may be addressed for dates.

HARRY BECKMAN

CHAPLAIN FRANK M. WELLS, "the soldier evangelist," has no open dates until after the new year. Mr. Wells was a seminary classmate, '96-'98, at Louisville, Ky., with James H. Franklin and J. C. Massee.

REV. R. W. STEINKRAUS of Logansport, Ind., has accepted a unanimous call to First church, Moline, Ill. John W. Weddell has been the adequate acting pastor at First church.

REV. J. G. LITTLE, PASTOR of the Baptist church at Sterling, Ill., preached the sermon at the union service on Thanksgiving morning. His text was: "But one of them came back and thanked him."

TENTH AVENUE CHURCH, Columbus, Ohio, Thomas J. Hopkins, pastor, is redecorating church and parish house, laying new walks and doing some remodeling as well as installing a new lighting system. The budget for this work, $6500, was subscribed at a supper and social. This extra obligation is not to interfere with the record of the church for benevolences. Many of the students of the Ohio state university affiliate with Tenth church in its services, its church school and its young people's work. The church needs, in addition to its present equipment, an educational building.

A UNIQUE SERMON WAS preached by Rev. C. L. Doyle, pastor of the Baptist church at Tiffin, Ohio, at the union Thanksgiving services, in that the sermon was an original poem. Printed in the Daily Advertiser of Tiffin, it occupies the best part of a newspaper page.

DURING THE FIRST SEVEN months of his pastorate at First church, Selma, Calif., Claude L. Neal has given the hand of fellowship to forty-two members. He has conducted a school of missions with an average attendance of 131 people. A special Sunday thank-offering amounted to $506. A strong missionary and evangelistic spirit prevails. Harry O. Anderson will conduct evangelistic meetings beginning, Jan. 23.

AT UNION THANKSGIVING services of the churches of Wayne, Mich., Rev. James W. Johnson, pastor of the Baptist church, preached the sermon.

EIGHTY-FIVE PER CENT OF THE honor students at Bethel institute, St. Paul, Minn., are partly or wholly self-supporting.

JOHN W. MILLION, formerly connected with Des Moines university as president, is now a member of the staff of a bond house in Kansas City, Mo.

ON THE EVENING OF Nov. 8, Dr. W. H. Bowler, executive secretary of the Board of Missionary Cooperation, was guest of honor at a banquet at First church, Boise, Ida. It was a representative gathering of 200 Baptists who welcomed Doctor Bowler on his first visit to his home town since election to his present office. Members of the state board attended as well as people from churches in the far eastern and western sections of the state. All but two of the churches in the First Association were represented. Doctor Bowler's mother, a brother and two sisters were also present and it was an occasion made happy by the greetings of old friends. Rev. A. F. Colver, the toastmaster, led a discussion concerning the progress made by the committees on the World Tour and much enthusiasm was created by these reports. Then followed the address of the evening by Doctor Bowler. He spoke for almost an

Van Duzen Bells
formerly Van Dusen & Tift
Guaranteed Genuine Bell
Metal Bells made of Copper
and Tin. Famous for full rich tones, volume and durability.
The Vanduzen Electrical
Bell Ringer
The E. W. Vanduzen Co.
CINCINNATI, OHIO
Buckeye Bell Foundry
Est. 1837 428-34 E. 2nd St. Send for catalogue

TOWER CHIMES PLAYED FROM
ELECTRIC KEYBOARD AT ORGAN
CHURCH BELLS—PEALS
McShane Bell Foundry Co.
BALTIMORE, MD.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 10
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

The Original Modern Language Version
Twentieth Century New Testament
is unequalled. Ask for it at any Bookstore. $1.25
REVELL CO., 158 Fifth Ave., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

hour on the development and scope of Baptist denominational organizations, closing with several human interest stories from the life and work of our missionaries which gripped the hearts of the listeners. An informal reception in the auditorium followed the banquet.

FIRST CHURCH, WHEATLAND, Wyo., R. L. Stratton, pastor, dedicated its new church building, Oct. 31. Oliver Reed, pastor of First church, preached at the morning service, and State Secretary J. P. Jacobs in the afternoon. The three other churches of the town joined in the Sunday morning dedication service. Four evening services were held preceding dedication Sunday; in these ministers of the town took part and also L. S. Bowerman, pastor of First church, Casper, Wyo., and Henry Moorman, pastor of First church, Cheyenne, Wyo. A deficit of $2600 was pledged at the services. One person was received into the church membership by relation making approximately 132 members received during the past two years. The building is modern with full basement and Sunday-school rooms. Seating capacity, when Sunday-school rooms are thrown open, is 450. There is a loan on the building by the Home Mission Society of $3000 for five years without interest.

THE NEW BAPTIST CHURCH building, John H. Skeen, pastor, at Boulder, Colo., is near the campus of the state university, which has an enrolment of 2800. In the neighborhood of 500 students attended a "class mixer" in the church on Nov. 12 and 500 students attended a banquet at the church on Nov. 9. R. Fred Chambers, pastor's assistant, has a "way with him" with the students. The Boulder church has a membership of 700. Mr. Skeen has been with the church for seven years.

"TO NURSE A GROUCH AGAINST the minister while investing time and money in the church services is like setting the dog on the delivery boy when he brings the groceries you have paid for," says John A. Holmes in the Tiffin Baptist, First church, Tiffin, Ohio, C. L. Boyle, pastor.

THE CORNER-STONE OF the new building of the First church of Kenton, Ohio, was recently laid with interesting ceremonies.

Make World Tour a Family Affair

NOT least among the advantages of January World Tour is the opportunity afforded for the entire family to share the interest and pleasure of this excursion to Northern Baptist mission fields. The Log of the airship Evangel is no dry recital of facts, but a succession of word pictures touching life in many parts of the world; if a regular time is fixed for the daily reading, perhaps at mealtime, it will be an event looked forward to by the household. It is even hoped that the reading may be an incentive to the revival of the good old-fashioned practice of family worship in homes where that practice has been allowed to lapse.

All is now in readiness for the World Tour and the indispensable Log of the Evangel will be distributed in ample time to permit all who have enrolled to start promptly, Jan. 1. However, at this point the only hazard connected with the World Tour arises—the risk that delay in applying for passage may find the supply of copies of the Log exhausted. To make certain that you do not incur this misfortune, apply at the earliest possible moment for a ticket which you will exchange later for the Log. You will not need a passport for this journey. Indeed, it is likely that voyagers never experienced so few formalities in preparing to circle the globe, for to obtain first-class passage you have only to ask for a ticket which can be had without money. If you do not know the names of the tour committee and booking agents in your church, ask your pastor.

The sermon was delivered by T. F. Chambers of Granville, secretary of the Ohio State Convention. Rev. A. W. Snow, pastor of the church, has been tireless in his efforts to raise funds and get the building enterprise started.

"A GOOD BOOST HANDETH a strong wallop to a grouch and sendeth pessimism to the boneyard," is one of the planks of "the boosters' creed" of Englewood church, Chicago.

FIRST CHURCH, BRADFORD, PA., closed evangelistic services, Dec. 12, with J. W. Ham of Atlanta, Ga., bringing the gospel message. Preceding Mr. Ham's coming, the pastor, J. S. Brownlee, preached a series of Sunday morning sermons on the Holy Spirit.

IT WOULD BE A TASK OF delight and profit if THE BAPTIST could quote all the good things of gratitude and praise that the church bulletins coming to this office carry at the season of national thanksgiving. "It is good to give thanks."

JOHN T. FENNELL, who for nearly twenty years has been a teacher in the Sunday school of North church, Camden, N. J., James Dalton Morrison, minister, has the noble record of attending Sunday school for 1000 successive Sundays without once being absent.

REV. ARTHUR R. MERCER of First church, Niagara Falls, N. Y., has accepted a call to Fourth church, Providence, R. I.

REV. E. R. ALLEN, recently pastor of Broadway church, Bay City, Mich., has accepted a call to First church, Mystic, Conn.

THE Community Builder of the Greece (N. Y.) church quotes Maltie D. Babcock: "Out of the determination of the heart the eyes see. If you want to be gloomy, there's gloom enough to keep you glum; if you want to be glad, there's gleam enough to keep you glad. Say, 'Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.' Better lose count in enumerating your blessings than lose your blessings in telling over your troubles."

THE Englewood Economist, with a circulation of 61,000, publishes each week a sermonette by Milton M. McGorrell, pastor of the Normal Park church, Chicago. In a sermon vote in the Normal Park church, Mr. McGorrell discovered that every person voting except one asked for a series of sermons on prayer. A visitation campaign is a regular feature of this church three times a year. The duplex envelope system installed in the Sunday school about a year ago has doubled and in some cases trebled the offerings. The distribution of offerings show a three to two division between current expense and benevolence.

"SERVICE HYMNAL"

acclaimed by thousands of churches as the greatest all purpose hymnal ever used.

672 Pages, 745 Numbers, $1.00 Per Copy
Many old hymns not found elsewhere. Costly binding and clear print. Special discount to ministers, superintendents and choir leaders, in 100 lots or more.

Write for sample copy for examination.
SAMUEL W. BEAZLEY & SON
53 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Ill.

We Raise Money

For sixteen years the Ward Systems Company has successfully directed dignified fund-raising campaigns of the higher order. During these years it has raised millions of dollars for Colleges, Churches, Hospitals and Charitable Institutions.

Let Us Solve Your Financial Problems

Our latest Church fund-raising campaign plans have been very successful and economical. Write us stating your requirements. All correspondence treated confidentially. Our latest booklet and confidential analysis blank sent free.

The Ward Systems Co.

28 E. Jackson Blvd., Dept. D.,
Chicago, Ill.

Church Furniture

Pews-Pulpits-Chancel-Furniture
-Sunday School Seating

American Seating Company

Catalogues on request.
General Offices—1069 Lytton Bldg.
CHICAGO

"Pews, altars and pulpits from the largest exclusive church furniture factory. Write for catalog and particulars. Manitowoc Church Furniture Company, Waukesha, Wisconsin."

CHURCH FURNITURE

Everything for Church and Sunday School use. From Factory to You. Fine catalog free.

DeMoulin Bros. & Co.

1117 South 4th St., Greenville, Illinois

The Christmas Bookworm

(Continued from page 1381)

Worm: "I got so much I have a dreadful attack of indigestion. I think I'm dying of it, but look what I brought up." He begins pulling out books.

The children grab them eagerly, then say in high disappointment: "I can't read mine!" "Let me see yours!" "What language is this, anyhow?" Then rain-dears also come popping up from under the table: "Ah, we've found the thieves; you've got the books that belong to Mary Smith and Tom Brown." Oriental children explain their bookless state (see THE BAPTIST for Nov. 13, 20, 27) and rain-dears begin to cry: "It's too bad! We must get you some books, indeed we must!" They then hurry down to the audience and beg for a shower of money for books. They hold their open umbrellas upside down, so that money and stamps may be collected inside.

*"If I could make the laws
For dear old Santa Claus
I wouldn't let him pass
A single lad or lass."*

A Christian Cruise

By J. J. WICKER

THE charm of a Christian cruise is beyond words. The friendships made in a Christian company on a cruise to the Holy Land are in themselves large compensation. Lectures, sermons, addresses, entertainments, fervent prayers and hymns of joy make a great program for daily life on shipboard.

A week from New York we got our first glimpse of land, the Azores—nine islands, stretching along 400 miles. Our first view was of Fayal and old Pico, the highest mountain in the range (7600 feet) rising out of the sea, with white clouds hovering around the summit, making the mountain look like a mighty monarch, presiding with dignity over fortune. These mountains are all volcanic. The soil is rich and produces in manner of fruits and vegetation, and the ever green hills coming down abruptly into the sea form a picturesque view of verdant beauty. The islands are owned by Portugal. The people are poor, but the products are luxuriant and delicious, and the extreme friendliness of the populace lends a charm that makes one almost forget its poverty.

Our next stop was Lisbon. Democracy now reigns in the republic of Portugal and the revolutions taking place in the new freedom will work out a higher life for these fascinating people. A day more carried us through the Gates of Hercules, past the great Gibraltar and into the mysterious Mediterranean.

There is perhaps no more interesting city in all the world than Algiers. Half of the city is the old Mohammedan quarter and the other half is the new French, or European, quarter. If you had gone to the most modern city of the West, taken up half of it and joined it to one-half of the most distant eastern Oriental city of the world, the line of demarkation could not be more clearly drawn than in Algiers, divided by the Arabs and the French. This can be seen in the distance far out at sea, and on land it is still more emphasized. Like the Azores, Algiers is on the side of a mountain coming down into the sea and is surpassingly beautiful. The first street as you land is the Boulevard de la Republique, about 1200 yards long. This street cost more than a million dollars for each 100 yards. An automobile ride through the luxuriant parks and an ascent around the mountain overlooking the city and the sea, passing numerous monuments and points of historic lore, gives a rare thrill. For centuries, and until less than 100 years ago, pirates in Algiers ruled the Mediterranean.

As our ship steamed away we were in sight of awe-inspiring mountainous seashore all the way to Athens except for the time we were crossing the Adriatic. We dropped anchor at the Piraeus five miles from the classic city of Athens. Our automobiles were waiting, and in a few minutes we are in the midst of the bygone splendor of art and architecture, millenniums old. The Thesion is perhaps the best preserved of any building in the world—2500 years old. As we stood on top of the Acropolis we were lost in wonder as we thought of the art, architecture, oratory, philosophy, virtues and vices of the ancient Athenian. But to some of us Mars hill had the greatest charm, for from its summit Paul preached with power, unmoved by the works of men's hands save to pity their very genius in its failure to get men up to God. One of our number stood in Paul's pulpit and read the sermon of

AN INCOME THAT NEVER FAILS

Gifts by the Annuity plan support world evangelization and assure you an income as long as you live.

When remembering the national societies in your will please use exact corporate names as follows:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M. D., Home Secretary (re annuities); George B. Huntington, Treasurer, (re wills); 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society, Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th Street, New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society, George L. Estabrook, Treasurer, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention, E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, Frank W. Padelord, D.D., Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

Annuities

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these Single and Double Contracts will be sent to you on request.

"Where your heart is, there should your treasure go."

For Foreign Mission Service

There is urgent need for:

AN EDUCATIONALIST:

For superintendent of the Normal School, Rangoon, Burma. He should have special training in education and be familiar with normal school methods. It is desirable that he have the degree of Master of Arts.

A PRINTER:

For the Mission Press, Rangoon, Burma. He must be thoroughly experienced in all branches of the printing business including both technical and commercial aspects. College graduate preferred.

All candidates should be under 30, in vigorous health, married or unmarried, members of Baptist churches and of unimpeachable Christian character.

Correspondence with candidates is considered strictly confidential.

Write to P. H. J. Lerrigo, Candidate Secretary,

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society
276 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The Local Church

ITS PRESENT AND FUTURE

By F. A. AGAR

"We know Dr. Agar personally and consider him one of the greatest church builders in the land."—Alabama Baptist.

$1.00

REVELL CO., 158 Fifth Ave., New York; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Immanuel Bldg., Chicago.

"Tonight we are to have the field editor in another brief sketch entitled, 'A second week in Northern California.' This is Mr. Cress:

"On Monday, Nov. 8, Rev. P. A. MacDiarmid of Sona Bata, Africa, and I continued our tour of Northern California under the direction of Secretary Brinstad. In our talk on Dec. 11 we gave the high points of our first week. That was a great beginning.

"Monday found us at Fresno. We were guests of the district monthly meeting of Baptist ministers and missionaries. There were about fifteen pastors present and several workers from the Indian mission. There were morning, afternoon and evening meetings. At all of these THE BAPTIST, Missions and the state bulletin were presented. There was an almost unanimous vote by the pastors present to attempt at once a subscription effort for a list for THE BAPTIST and Missions equal to 10 per cent of the resident membership and to attempt to make the list for the bulletin cover every local church family.

"Nov. 9, we were at Madera for a supper conference and evening meeting. Rev. Sidney B. Cooper is pastor here. We shall close this sketch with the story of what he did after we were gone. It is worth telling.

"Nov. 10, we were joined again by Doctor Bancroft of the convention office and spent the afternoon and evening with the church at Turlock. Rev. C. C. Eastman, minister. Around a supper table this church and pastor rose to the ideals of the campaign and endorsed these ideals with a unanimous vote to go over the top. They will.

"Nov. 11 was armistice day. As no public meeting was arranged, we took to the woods. We turned into Sequoia national park, 6000 feet above the level valley of the San Joaquin. That night a big bear smashed one of our auto windows and raided our food supplies. A gentle snow fell all night and put a mantle on the General Sherman tree, oldest and largest tree in the world, thirty-seven feet in diameter and 280 feet tall.

"On the 12th we were guests of the church at Porterville for afternoon and evening sessions. Pastor F. C. Stannard entertained us royally and his people entered into the spirit of the enterprise with genuine interest.

"Sunday, Nov. 14, found us in San Jose. Pastor C. S. Knight of Light House church and Pastor Towner of First church gave us great audiences and genuine and sympathetic welcome. At First church the service was broadcast by the new radio station recently installed by the church. At Palo Alto, Pastor Paul L. Offenheiser and his people entered heartily into the plans for a greatly increased periodical circulation. Sunday was a great day.

"The Northern California campaign closed on the evening of Nov. 16 at Salinas. Pastor Gibson, his people and workers from other nearby points provided a supper conference and an enthusiastic closing evening audience. Over forty pastors and as many churches were definitely reached in sixteen days. There was an almost unanimous approval and adoption of the ideals set up by Secretary Brinstad by all the pastors and delegates present in this series of conferences. Indeed, so happy were the results that another tour has been agreed upon for the same dates, 1927, when it is believed still greater cooperation and tangible results may be obtained.

"The first church to complete its quota in this effort was at Madera. Let Pastor Coopes tell how it worked out: 'My people were deeply stirred by the messages, especially the people whom you met around the supper table in the manse. At the Sunday morning service following your visit, I preached on the theme, "A Matter of Values." At the close of the service cards were passed for subscriptions, when lo and behold, twenty-two subscriptions for THE BAPTIST came in. When you know that there are only fifty-three families in our congregation I think you will say this was splendid. They were not just paper pledges, either. The money accompanied them and I am sending them in today.' Hurrah for Madera and its pastor. May their tribe increase. They more than realized their 10 per cent goal.

"The office boy says that he saw by the papers that a great storm of rain fell on California from Eureka to San Diego following this tour. He says the papers stated that it was worth millions to California. He says that in common gratitude for this, California ought to hurry and get the rest of those 1000 new subscriptions for THE BAPTIST and add a few extras for good measure."

"WCOY now signs off. California is setting the pace. Hurry, 'Night."

the powerful apostle; 50,000 persons could easily have heard every word. As the last rays of the dying day played upon the summit of the Acropolis and the remains of the once glorious Parthenon, we felt as though we were being torn away from centuries of architectural beauty and glory.

The next morning we entered the Dardanelles. We passed the scene of the great world war slaughter and our steamer blew a solemn salute to the hundreds of thousands of dead; there was not a dry eye among all the passengers.

In the early dawn of the next morning we saw the light of the new day breaking over the eastern horizon upon the countless minarets of Constantinople. No harbor in all the world presents greater beauty. When I was in Constantinople for the first time twenty years ago, the streets were full of dogs. Now there is not a dog to be seen. The women were all veiled and rode in separate compartments in the street cars. Today the sultan is dead, the harem is empty, and the capitol is miles away at Angora. The young Turk is anxious to redeem the name "Turk." These handsome young men do all in their power to please the tourist; they are trying to catch up with western civilization and are well informed of our progress.

Steaming through the Bosphorus to the Black sea, we passed the American school for girls and Robert college. The alumni, scattered all over the country stand for the highest things. It is of interest to know that when Mr. Robert went into bankruptcy for a large amount of money, he wrote on the bankruptcy papers, "Legally absolved, but morally bound with 6 per cent interest." Later he paid every dollar with interest and afterwards founded Robert college. Born in such high honor, the school must grow in the highest ideals.

Back into the Mediterranean, passing near to Patmos, we sailed for Beirut. Less than 100 years ago a sailboat of 400 tons (ours was a steamer of 10,000 tons) took four months to reach Beirut from

Baby Chicks For Sale

Barron strain large type purebred White Leghorn baby chicks, $10.50 hundred. Chicks are very strong and stand cool weather better than hot weather.

Everlay strain Brown Leghorns, $11.50 hundred.

Sheppard strain single comb Anconas, $14 hundred.

Owens and Donaldson strain Rhode Island Reds, $14.85 hundred.

Thompsons strain Barred Rocks, $14.85 hundred.

White Rocks, $16 hundred.

All good, healthy, strong purebred guaranteed.

We pay postage charges and guarantee live arrival on all baby chicks.

Pullets of any breed listed, $1.50 each.

Cockerels, good size, $3 each.

Poultry book on feeding and raising chicks and pullets, $3 postpaid.

The Fulghum Hatchery
Freeburg, Ill.

New York. The conditions of degradation when Doctor Bliss started his school on a beautiful plateau at Beirut cannot even be imagined. Today this school is a university with scores of splendid buildings and is teaching all branches in academic work, medicine, trained nursing, and law—a real university with more than a 1000 students. The founder is in heaven but his work is going on with increasing power, and I think the American Protestant college at Beirut will do more to solve the problems of the Near East than all other agencies combined.

Our automobiles carried us 6000 feet at midsummer up the Lebanon mountains. As we looked back upon a panorama of colorful tile roofs in a city of 300,000 persons, surrounded by orange and lemon groves, together with orchards of every kind of tropical fruit and flower, the scenery of land and sea was declared by all to be the most awe-inspiring ever seen. We wrapped ourselves in overcoats as we turned about and viewed the eternal snows on Mount Hermon and the Lebanon.

Two weeks before, the Druises had snatched the hotel proprietor's son, and arrived in Baalbek the night after he reached home, upon payment by his father of $1000 in gold. The boy told us a thrilling story.

The League of Nations gave France a mandate over Syria. French soldiers are everywhere, and somehow we did not seem afraid as we visited the most wonderful ruins in all the world, barring the pyramids of Egypt. We were advised not to go to Damascus, but we went. As a state of war existed (and still exists), French soldiers were all along the railway line. We boarded the train at Rayach and rode for four hours to Damascus. The next day the track over which we had passed was cut, and three days later, when we left Damascus, our train carrying an armored car with a number of French soldiers and machine guns, the tracks behind us were cut again.

Damascus was completely surrounded by barbed wire. Firing was going on all the time, and airplanes were dropping bombs on the outside of the city, which took our hotel to the foundation. The remainder of the French gave us permission to go on top of the walls around the citadel, from which we could see all the city and the destruction which had been wrought. Nearly half the city is a mass of ruins, with many dead bodies lying in the debris.

Palestine

There is a country less than 150 miles long by about fifty miles wide that holds the vital history for the church of Christ than all the rest of the world. A range of mountains from Mount Hermon in the north extends through the whole country toward the south, dropping down on the one side into the Jordan valley, and on the other into the Mediterranean, with many charming valleys and plains.

The Sea of Galilee is 700 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. I do not wonder that Jesus loved this lake. It is thirteen miles long by about seven miles wide, and is in the shape of a heart, with Capernaum, the home of Jesus, at the top. The mountains surrounding it stand like guardian angels and behold their own beauty reflected in the face of this sacred water.

So crooked is the Jordan, known as "the way down" because of its fall to the Dead sea, that it is 225 miles long, running north, east, south and west in its course; it is only sixty-nine miles from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead sea by straight line. The Dead sea, 1300 feet below the Mediterranean and 4000 feet below Jerusalem, is the lowest place on the face of the earth. It is a beautiful body of water, forty miles long by about fifteen miles wide, but has not within it a living thing. Like a grave, it has no outlet and so is dead.

One would write a book of many pages to tell a little of the land of the Lord. I can only say that to pass by the Horns of Hattin, where Jesus made his great inaugural address, via Cana to Nazareth, where Jesus grew up and announced his call to the ministry, is a day that stirs every emotion of the soul.

Leaving Nazareth we crossed the Plain of Jezreel in full view of Carmel, Gilboa, Tabor, and the towns of Nain, Endor, Shunem, and by the Plain of Dothan, on down to Samaria and Shechem. What a wealth of Old Testament history! Jacob and his sons, Saul and his suicide, the northern kingdom, and the prophets! We were in the midst of "the land and the Book" in every place in Palestine.

Between Ebal (the tallest mountain in Palestine) and Gerizim in old Shechem, we had our lunch. An hour later we were in holy meditation as we sat down at Jacob's well and looked beyond the tomb of Joseph to the town of Sychar, whence the woman came and talked with Jesus.

All the afternoon we were winding our way through a country forever made sacred by Jesus' footsteps as he climbed the mountains and crossed the valleys, for "he must needs go through Samaria." We passed through Shiloah, Bethel, the birthplace and home of Samuel, in full view of Mizpah, where Saul was anoint-ed, and just before sunset our eyes feasted on the Holy City. Memories of sacred history poured like a Niagara into our souls as we lay down to sleep so near to Olivet, Gethsemane and Calvary.

Eight days in and around the Holy City, visiting Bethlehem, the home of Boaz, Ruth, and David, and the birthplace of our Lord; then by Solomon's pool to Hebron, where Abraham and Sarah are buried. It seems a tragic punishment that the people who rejected our Lord are not permitted to visit the grave of the father of the Hebrew people. Just here, let me call attention to the fact that near to the wailing place of the Jews in Palestine is the temple is a graduate school of religion, providing supervised practical training for the pastorate, religious education, college and seminary teaching, missions and social service.

The Divinity School of The University of Chicago

Its large faculty and hundreds of electives give special opportunities to those wishing to specialize in any religious vocation.

Its students may become candidates for the degrees of A. M., D. B., and Ph. D.

Students in the Divinity School may take courses offered by the affiliated Chicago Theological Seminary.

The faculty of the Divinity School publishes:

The Journal of Religion The American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literature The Institute

Correspondence work for academic credit in the Divinity School is conducted through the Home Study Department of the University.

Popular Bible study without academic credit, annually followed by ten thousand persons, is conducted by the American Institute of Sacred Literature.

For information as to courses, opportunity for remunerative work, scholarships and fellowships, address

SHAILER MATHEWS
Dean of the Divinity School
The University of Chicago
Chicago, Illinois

THE BIBLICAL SEMINARY CALENDAR 1927 (Third in Series).

The calendar for 1927 is based upon THE TWELVE MAJOR PSALMS. Printed in two colors. Price: Single copy, 25 cents. Ten or more, 15 cents each.

The Biblical Seminary in New York, 541 Lexington Ave., New York.

Enclosed find $..... for..... copies of the Biblical Seminary Calendar.
Name..... Address.....

area, on which no Jew ever puts his foot.

We can stand on the Mount of Olives, from which our Lord ascended, and, looking to the north on a clear day can nearly see Mount Hermon. The Jordan winds its way like a silver thread down through the valley. The Dead sea lies before us, while Nebo and Pizgah, twenty-five miles beyond Jordan, lift their lofty peaks to our admiring gaze as we think of Moses, who climbed to the summit and leaped into the arms of God.

The people may change, railroads may be built, and electric lights installed, but the sky above, the mountains and hills about, and the valleys below, as we gaze over these sacred lands, never change. I have been to Palestine many times, and each visit brings an increasing interest in the word of God and makes the revelation of the Book more real as the years come and go.

Of course we visited Jericho and the Jordan valley, Joppa and the Plain of Sharon, and in the twenty days spent in Palestine and Egypt we had a visit worth-while for a Christian cruise to Bible lands. It is impossible to dash in and dash out and have time to digest in any sense the Holy Land.

A number of our pilgrims returned to America, while others went on up through Europe after visiting Egypt and beholding the great pyramids on which Moses himself gazed.

Richmond, Va.

Crannell's Pocket Lessons for 1927

By

Philip Wendell Crannell, D. D.

*President Emeritus, The Kansas
City Baptist Theological Seminary*

CONTAINS all of the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons for Adults and Young People, with References, Daily Bible Readings, and Analyses. Vest-pocket size. About two hundred pages clearly printed on good opaque paper. Size, $2\frac{3}{4} \times 5\frac{3}{4}$ inches. Substantially bound in cloth. Just the thing for the busy teacher or scholar.

Price, 35 cents

Send for Bulletin of New Publications

The American Baptist
Publication Society
1701-1703 Chestnut Street
Philadelphia

16 Ashburton Place, Boston
125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago
313 W. Third St., Los Angeles
1107 McGee St., Kansas City
439 Burke Building, Seattle
223 Church St., Toronto

Order from Our Nearest House

The Saving Sense

Auntie (reading): "Satan trembles when he sees the feeblest saint upon his knees" . . .

Roy: "Auntie, but why does Satan let the saint sit on his knees if it makes him tremble?"—Sydney Bulletin.

Pat, who was always punctual, arranged to meet Mike at the postoffice at ten o'clock. Arriving a few minutes before time, Pat decided to walk down the street in the direction from which he knew Mike would come. Before he had gone far he observed Mike across the street hurrying toward the meeting-place.

"Hi, there, Mike!" he called. "Here Oi am. Come over."

"Arrah," answered the tardy Irishman, "don't be after detainin' me. Oi've only foive minutes to meet yez at the post-office."—Young Folks.

SOLOMON PEASE

Facetious story-tellers proverbially like to place the scene of their anecdotes in some region where they are personally interested. Your epitaph of "Solomon Pease" of Alabama quoted from the Baptist and Reflector:

"Here lies the body of Solomon Pease,
Under the daisies and under the trees,
Pease is not here, only the pod—

Pease shelled out and went home to God"

furnishes a fresh instance of this sort. Many years ago a friend who had been pastor of a Baptist church in Martha's Vineyard, Mass., assured me that the following epitaph of "Solomon Pease" could be found on a tombstone in that island:

"Under the sod
Here lies the body of Solomon Pease.
He opened his pod
And shelled out his soul
And went up to God."

The quaint device of splitting the word "body" into parts at the end of the line in order to have a rhyme for "sod" is a peculiarity that marks the Martha's Vineyard epitaph as the work of a hard-pressed genius. I have seen this epitaph quoted somewhere with additions, including, I believe, the rhyme of "trees" with "Pease"; but the epitaph I have given is the one my elderly friend (now dead) was willing to vouch for although he had not seen it. It would be interesting to discover whether any such epitaph actually exists in Martha's Vineyard, or in Alabama or anywhere else.

—WINFIELD G. HUBBARD.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

Bibles Testaments Portions

Visit or Write Nearest Agency	Of Every Kind In Every Language For Gift and Home Use For Missionary Purposes
New York New York Colored Philadelphia Washington Richmond Cincinnati Chicago Dallas Denver San Francisco

Notes on the Lesson for December 26

REVIEW: MOSES TO SAMUEL

Devotional Reading: Psa. 85:1-13. Golden Text: Psa. 85:9

The lessons of the past quarter have covered considerable time and have canvassed some outstanding personalities. Beginning with the departure of the Israelites from Horeb to Canaan under the leadership of Moses the quarter closed with Samuel the judge closing a distinctive period in the history of Israel just prior to the emergence of monarchy.

Biography

Biography is history at its best. Indeed, without biography and geography history would be colorless. Personality and environment bulk largely in the lessons under review. What stalwart leaders pass in review as the lessons of the quarter are recalled! At the head of the column is Moses, the incomparable emancipator, organizer, law-giver, and priest of God. Space will not permit the naming of all the rest. But a few of them cannot be passed by in silence. The doughty Caleb, the man of unquenchable courage and indomitable purpose; Joshua, a born general and a leader who knew how to use military tactics to the best advantage in whipping his undisciplined mass of followers into unquestioning obedience, and in quickly punishing infractions of his orders; Gideon, made immortal by such qualitative tests of his small force of men as reduced their fighting strength to zero so far as numbers were concerned, but raised it to omnipotence by his significant war-cry, "The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon." And what shall be said of Naomi and Ruth that hasn't been said? Samuel's biography is full of vital interest from his birth to his death, and even after his death, he comes back to pronounce the doom of a king who had failed in the great trust committed to him. Here is an opportunity for the teacher to analyze, compare, contrast and illustrate in a way that will hold the attention of the youngest pupils as well as the more mature.

Romance

"The Crossing" is the title of at least one great novel, and it has been the inspiration of much in literature as the progress of mankind has been traced from the first crossing of the Euphrates to the last crossing of the Mississippi, the Missouri and the Colorado on trek of men to the end of the trail westward. In these lessons we have two great crossings recorded. The crossing of the Jordan is one, and the crossing of the borders of Moab by Ruth is another. Both crossings were freighted with momentous potentialities for humanity. The first gave Jesus a home in Palestine, the highway of the nations; the second gave him a composite ancestry, the prophecy of his universal relationship with all mankind. The following of these romances of geography and of anthropology will enrich the review in the hands of a teacher with brains and imagination.

New Books

Song of Meditation, Robert MacGowan. New York: Revell. $1.25.

The author combines in these meditations the gift of preaching, the art of poetry and the meditation of a priest. The book contains sixty-two brief meditations, each consisting of a short excerpt of a scripture passage, an original poem and a prayer, all designed for guidance and help in private or family devotions. As such publications go, this is one of the best.

—JOHN EARL.

Experiences of Adolescent Experience, by E. High Mudge. New York: Century. $1.75. A study of the early years of adolescent life, based upon biographical studies written by college students in which they describe certain types of experiences. Inasmuch as it does with the experiences of girls, it seems incomplete. If the author follows it with a similar one on the experiences of boys, he will have made a worth-while contribution to the study of early adolescent life.

—RAYMOND W. SETTLE.

Christian Shackles, by Libbie Travers. New York: Macmillan. $1.50.

An intimate and personal story of a young soul with a definite religious experience, but whose mental birth came late in life. With the mental awakening comes the inevitable upheaval of the old anchors and an alarming drift upon a fog covered sea. As a record of religious experiences and conflicts of the soul which is illustrative of many of others, it is well worth reading. A contribution to the solution of the problem its title suggests, it is a million miles from nowhere.

—A. H. BAILEY.

Life of the Bowery, by Charles Stelzle. New York: Doran Co. $3.50, net.

For the reader who for many years has known Charles Stelzle for what he is, noted labor commissioner and evangelist of the Presbyterian church, it is pleasant to say that the son of the Bowery finds a thrilling expression of his experience in this autobiography no other than Mr. Stelzle himself. This is far more than an autobiography. Stelzle's work has thrown him into contact with the big men and big movements of his generation, and he has been able enough to meet them. Consequently the series of his contacts with Theodore Roosevelt, John Mitchell, D. L. Moody,

Wm. J. Bryan and others throws a new light on those men. Further, there is wealth of what may be called "findings" in the course of the narrative. Mr. Stelzle is a preacher, trained in Moody institute. He is a preacher of the prophetic type and holds himself charged with a message of Christianity in industry. The story is mottled with the message throughout, yet the message is never preachment and is never tiresome. It is vital. It is a contribution to both religion and social science. The last chapter on "The Religion of the New Democracy" ought to be read by 200,000 preachers in the United States.

—U. M. MCGUIRE.

A Curriculum of Worship for the Junior Church School, Vol. II., by Edna M. Crandall. New York: Century. $2.

The aim of the author in preparing this book was to introduce a more systematic and educational worship into the junior department of the church school. The material offered was first used by the author in her own work. It will prove an invaluable aid to those engaged in junior work.

—RAYMOND W. SETTLE.

The United States Senate and the International Court, by Frances Kellor and Antonia Hatvany. New York: Thomas Seltzer. Probable price, $3.50.

It is an interesting fact that one of the most careful and analytical studies of the history, principles and consequences of the problem of adherence to the World Court of International Justice as it is presented to the senate of the United States in its legal aspects is produced by the collaboration of two women. The analytical statement of the problem is formulated in 300 propositions, each expanded by concise comment. This is followed by a conclusion favoring adherence to the court in terms that will involve a free but bona fide reference to the jurisdiction of the court, at the same time eliminating all possibility of involving the United States in the political activities and obligations of the League of Nations. This conclusion is based upon the assumption that the matter must be settled by the Republican party and that the party is pledged to such a course of action. Copious footnotes and references accompany the text. Annexes contain a summary of the opinions and judgments already issued by the court, the text of the statute of the court, the rules of the court, the proposal submitted by Mr. Harding, resolutions introduced by Senators Swanson, Lodge and Pepper, and a list of documents that define the jurisdiction of the court. The index is brief but carefully prepared and seems to be adequate.

—U. M. MCGUIRE.

The Women's Class in Action, by F. Harvey Morse. New York: Doran. $1.75.

"The Women's Class in Action," is an extended and thoroughgoing discussion of that important branch of church school activity, from all angles and in all its phases. It takes up the matters of organization, equipment, service activities, teaching, holding members, getting new ones and advertising. In all of these it is very specific; for example, it even tells how to write letters to absentee and prospective members and how to conduct class papers. It has a tactful way of suggesting the removal of some of the crudities that often attend "booster" efforts to build a membership in an adult class. Its discussion of "contests" is particularly well balanced. Any one working at any angle of the adult class movement, whether it be for men or women, should have this book close at hand for detailed study. It is written in so dignified and simple a style that even a Baptist minister can read it!

—HERBERT W. HINES.

In Sunny Nigeria, by Albert D. Helser. New York: Revell. $1.50.

We hear much about the spirit of youth and the various forms of adventure which attract youth today. Here is a thrilling account of the adventures of a college lad who desired to be a pioneer missionary in one of the most abandoned places in the world. Who knows anything about Buraland? It has no annals or history or literature and nothing can be found concerning it but what comes from the pen of this young man and his friend.

In this book Mr. Helser gives first-hand information about the Bura, primitive people who live in the interior of North Central Africa. Upon departure for this strange land, he expressed his convictions and the conditions under which he would go in the remark, "I go in the faith of the living God, believing he has called me to the field. But while God often buries his workmen, he carries on his work. If I fall, will you promise to carry on the work I am beginning?"

What could be more encouraging to the cause of Christ today than to see a young man going forth into such hardship but with absolute faith in God and in the work to which he has set himself? Such accounts as this should deepen our confidence in the rising generation, soften our love for a great body of long neglected people and draw from us that liberal support of prayer and material means that shall not only make the people of Buraland rejoice in the blessings of Jesus Christ but also serve to strengthen our support of the whole missionary program of the church.

—C. R. OSBORN.

THE MEN AND THEIR MESSAGE
BRITISH PREACHERS
1926
SIR JAMES MARCHANT
Editor

One who wishes to know what the pulpit is saying on the other side of the Atlantic should read this new series—Homiletic Review.
Second Series $1.75
REVELL CO., 158 5th Ave., N. Y., 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Our Societies and How to Reach Them.

Board of Missionary Cooperation

The purpose of this Board is to promote and obtain support for every denominational activity, as provided in the united program of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Literature or special information concerning any phase of the work will be promptly furnished on request.

W. H. BOWLER

Executive Secretary

276 Fifth Avenue New York City

Partnership Opportunities

The 300 missionaries of The American Baptist Home Mission Society are to be found in nearly every State in the Union, and in Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Haiti and Jamaica. They serve as missionary pastors, teachers, colporter-missionaries, chapel-car and auto chapel-car directors, evangelists and Christian center workers.

In the making of your will and in the purchase of annuity agreements you may have a share in the home mission tasks of your denomination.

For annuity booklet and samples of single and survivorship agreements, please address

CHARLES L. WHITE

23 East Twenty-sixth St., New York City
The American Baptist Home Mission Society

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society (Corporate Name)

Address all communications to
276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

Last year 23,047 converts were baptized on mission fields in the non-Christian world. This is the largest total ever reported in a single year in the history of the Society.

When you make a will be sure that the full corporate name of the Society is used. Correspondence concerning gifts on the Annuity Plan with income ranging from 4 to 9% should be addressed to the Home Secretary.

C. E. Milliken, President
Frederick L. Anderson, Ch'm'n of the Board
James H. Franklin, Foreign Secretary
Joseph C. Robbins, Foreign Secretary
P. H. J. Lerrigo, Home Secretary
George B. Huntington, Treasurer

Why Not Increase Your Income

and at the same time

Help Some One Else?

The Board of Education of
The Northern Baptist Convention
(Legal name)

Will write you an annuity contract assuring you a good income for life and enabling you to perpetuate your influence for a long time to come. For information address—

Frank W. Padelford, Secretary
276 Fifth Ave. New York City

News Notes

Rev. and Mrs. Wm. Ashmore of Swatow, China, have arrived in the United States. They reached San Francisco about Dec. 1, and were welcomed first at the home of their son in Santa Ana, Calif. Before leaving China, the China Baptist Publication Society and other friends held a reception in their honor at Shanghai.

Nine hundred of the 1100 Baptist churches in Burma are self-supporting. The Burman pastors seem to deserve large credit for the achievement. They went to their churches with the proposal that they would live on the average income of their parishioners. The thing looks fair and Christian. How would it work in the United States?

Maggie Rattray was bought on a slave market on the Congo forty years ago. Mrs. Clark of the Baptist mission took her to Scotland. Later she was placed in Spelman college, Atlanta. At graduation she returned to Africa for mission work among her people. The government has conferred upon her a decoration in recognition of the value of her work in connection with the mission.

The recent death of Mr. Chu Pao San, veteran merchant of Shanghai, East China, means a loss to the Tanghai Baptist school of a member of its board of directors and one of its most enthusiastic promoters. His gift to the school of $15,000 for the new classroom and dormitory building was one of many acts of generosity. He was not wealthy, but he gave liberally. It was he who interested leading men of Tanghai in the Baptist school and procured their backing for it.

More than 700 stereopticon lectures were used in Baptist churches in the field of the Northern Baptist Convention in the first six months of the current fiscal year. This is a gain of 30 per cent over the same period of last year. More than 900 sets of lectures, eight or ten moving picture films and many hymn sets are available for January, and all are related to some theme in "The Log." Orders should be placed early. Pastors in the same locality may well group their orders so as to arrange for circuits of their churches.

The department of the interior is collecting data relative to Indian missions. Including the membership of Indian Baptist churches in New York and Massachusetts, Indian Baptists affiliating with the Northern Baptist Convention now number approximately 3828; enrolment in the Sunday schools, 2786; membership of fifteen woman's societies, 684; eleven young people's societies, 569. Number of ordained ministers holding commissions under the Home Mission Society: white, nineteen; Indian, five. Workers under the Woman's Society number fifteen. The replacement value of buildings used for missionary and educational purposes exceeds half a million dollars.

Our Societies and How to Reach Them.

WHEN YOUR WILL IS READ Will it contain a bequest for The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board

of the Northern Baptist Convention
276 Fifth Avenue, New York

If it does it will help the Board help worthy aged Baptist Ministers & Missionaries, their Widows and Orphan Children.

If you prefer or need the income while you live we shall be glad to have you take an whereby you will receive a high and safe return on your gift throughout your lifetime. At your decease the income only will be used in the work. Your gift may be made a memorial to yourself or others.

ANNUITY BOND (Gift Agreement)

Write for Information.

FOR ANNUITIES AND WILLS

Use the corporate name

Woman's American Baptist
Home Mission Society

Consult Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer,
Treasurer.

276 Fifth Avenue New York City

A SIMPLE PLAN:

You send to us:

1. Your check as an annuity gift.
2. Date of your birth.
3. Address in full.

We send to you:

1. A receipt for your check.
2. An annuity agreement.
3. Annuity payments every six months.

For full particulars regarding our annuity plan—Write to

Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer

Woman's American Bapt. Foreign Mission Society
276 Fifth Ave. New York City

The American Baptist Publication Society 1701-1703 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The denominational publishing house for the extension of the kingdom through the printed Word, Colportage, Religious Education, and Sunday school development.

FOR OTHERS

Put THE BAPTIST into your Public Library. Do it Today.

Annual Subscription, $2.50

THE BAPTIST

2320 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Volume VII

December 25, 1926

No. 47

The Baptist

Published Every Week by the Northern Baptist Convention

THE CHICAGO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Folks, Facts and Opinion

Sensational news reports concerning certain college questionnaires into the personal and social habits of students seem to have been newspaper ballyhoo. A bulletin from Bucknell university states that the matter passed much as a piece of ordinary research work, that it caused no disturbance and scarcely a ripple of interest.

Fifty thousand Christian clergymen are to be requested to participate in the current effort to raise $25,000,000 for the relief of five million Jewish people who face starvation and death in central and eastern Europe. In some localities 30 to 50 per cent of the children have tuberculosis. In Bessarabia the death rate among babies has reached almost 100 per cent.

Chicago is already the greatest center of theological education in America, and continues to increase its facilities for this purpose. The Congregationalists are now erecting beautiful seminary buildings in the area of the University of Chicago group on the Midway that will add greatly to the architectural splendor of that district. The tower that appears in the picture on the cover page is a memorial to the late Victor Lawson, founder of the Chicago Daily News, and a munificent supporter of the Chicago Theological seminary.

Charles A. Walker, pastor of the First church, Dover, Del., and editor of the Baptist Year Book, has again added to the debt of the denomination to him by the publication of the year book for 1926-1927. The table of contents reveals an array of itemized information which must have cost the editor many weary weeks of research and an endless amount of patience to gather and classify and prepare for the press. The proof-reading alone must have consumed days of the closest possible scanning of enough galley proof to make a book of 400 pages. It is published by the American Baptist Publication Society, not as a private enterprise for financial profit, but to furnish the denomination—even at a heavy annual loss—with such records and statistics as will correctly represent the progress of Baptist work and organization in America and in foreign lands so far as American Baptist missions are concerned. The year book is indispensable for every Baptist minister who wishes to be informed and have at his hand a ready reference to the name of every Baptist minister in America, to every Baptist missionary and to every Baptist organization North and South and in Canada. In paper covers it costs seventy-five cents and may be ordered from the Publication Society.

Week-day religious instruction under public school supervision by teachers who are paid for such work from the public funds is stoutly opposed by the Illinois Baptist on the ground that the state has no business to apply public funds for the support of sectarian teaching.

Howard hall, dormitory of the International Baptist seminary, East Orange, N. J., was dedicated, Nov. 23. Participants in the formal program were Frank A. Smith, Stephen G. Gaszi, R. A. Mikolon, A. K. de Blois, W. S. Booth, George R. Hovey, Martin K. Pawloski and Pres. Frank A. Anderson. The hall is named for the Howard family, prominent and active Baptists in Connecticut.

Secy. Charles L. White calls attention to the destruction wrought by storms in the Bahamas. Ten churches have been either destroyed or badly damaged. Most of the people on the islands are Baptists, generally poor and many of them now homeless. British Baptists cannot undertake their relief and relay the call to the Baptists of America. The American Baptist Home Mission Society appeals to prosperous American Baptists for help. Send gifts for the purpose to Dr. H. F. Stilwell, 418 S. 44th St., Philadelphia.

CONTRIBUTORS AND CONTENTS

DR. P. H. J. LERRIGO needs no introduction to readers of "The Baptist." After serving for some years as a medical missionary in the Philippine Islands he was called to assume the duties of home secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and for the past seven years he has filled the position with great ability. His graphic report of what took place at the international conference on Africa held last September in Le Zoute, Belgium, reads like a romance and reveals the many ramifications of foreign missions in the regions of physical health, industry and commerce. Foreign missions is not the simple thing it used to be. John Crosby, a late comer into the ranks of Baptist ministers and pastor at Glen Campbell, Pa., takes a peep into the unseen world and writes interestingly of "Guardian Angels." The questionnaire method so much in vogue these days is humorously treated by H. L. Williams who uses an alias to disguise his real name, possibly because he is a member of the editorial

Index	Page
FOLKS, FACTS AND OPINION.....	1398
EDITORIAL	1401
THE WORLD IN TRANSIT.....	1403
IN TRUST FOR CIVILIZATION, BY P. H. J. LERRIGO.....	1404
WITHERED BRANCHES, POEM, BY GEORGE G. PHIPPS.....	1405
GUARDIAN ANGELS, BY JOHN R. CROSBY	1406
LAWLESSNESS AND THE LAW OF SUGGESTION, BY JAMES W. GRAVES	1408
THE QUESTIONNAIRING PREACHER, BY H. L. WILLIAMS	1409
WHAT IS THIS? BY JOSEPH MAUCK	1410
THE DEVOTIONAL LIFE—LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE, BY HENRY VAN DYKE AND TERTIUS VAN DYKE	1411
THE CHIMNEY CORNER.....	1412
BOYS AND GIRLS.....	1413
YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE KINGDOM	1414
CHURCHES AT WORK.....	1415
AMONG OURSELVES.....	1416
NEW BOOKS.....	1425
NOTES ON THE LESSON.....	1426
INDEX TO "THE BAPTIST," VOLUME VII.....	1427

staff of another religious journal. Occasionally attention needs to be focused on the seamy side of life. James W. Graves, pastor of the First Baptist church, Binghamton, N. Y., raises the danger signal. "Emeritus," is the pretty Latin word used to dignify retirement from active service on account of long and meritorious service. But Joseph W. Mauck, for many years the honored and successful president of Hillsdale college, Hillsdale, Mich., refuses to "emerit" in the sense of going away back and sitting down. He is deeply interested in Christian unity and writes about it with the experience of age and the enthusiasm of youth. The continuous and organized attempt to break down respect for and submission to the eighteenth amendment is shown by the leading editorial to be in the direction of anarchy. The index which appears in this number indicates that the year of "The Baptist" will begin hereafter with January and not with February as has been the custom since the first number of the paper was issued on the first Saturday of February, 1920. This change brings the paper in line with the calendar year.

A movement is on foot to endow an American college in Athens, Greece, on the same general lines as Robert college Constantinople.

The first hospital to be built by negroes in Africa is projected by the foreign mission board of the National Baptist Convention. A Christmas offering on the dollar stocking plan is to be made by the constituency of the convention for this purpose.

Congressman Martin L. Davey of Ohio has hit upon the plan of taking out in honor of his father a life insurance policy of the five-year endowment sort for the benefit of the Memorial church of Christ at Kent, Ohio. The sum insured is $50,000, which at maturity is to be added to an equal sum to be raised by the church for a new building.

Miss Meme Brockway, director of children's work for the American Baptist Publication Society, is giving a year of a special deputation trip under the auspices of the World's Sunday-School Association. She has been released by her board for this work and the expenses involved have been fully provided by a friend of the cause and the Baptist board. Miss Brockway sailed on the "Roma," Nov. 6.

How is a landsman to understand the mysteries of navigation in relation to the management of our merchant marine? The government owns a fleet of ships. It wants to sell, give away or otherwise dispose of those ships because government ownership is a failure. Yet T. V. Connor, chairman of the shipping board, announces that the fleet earned a profit from July to November, 1925, of $2,000, and for the same period in 1926 of $1,663,000.

W.C.T.U. members all over the world participate this week in celebrating the fact that fifty-four years ago a band of city women inaugurated a sidewalk praying campaign in front of the saloons of Hillsboro, Ohio, resulting in the extinction of the legalized liquor business in that village and eventually in national prohibition. From that episode developed the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, organized in fifty-three countries, and well on its way toward a million members in America.

It seems like ages since the time more than thirty-five years ago when Wayland Hoyt and F. L. Wilkins waged a friendly war of the giants over the question whether the Baptist young people should organize a denominational society of their own, apart from the Y. P. S. C. E. Wilkins favored such an organization, helped to form it and became its general secretary. Years have passed. Wayland Hoyt passed with them a few years ago. Frank L. Wilkins lived on through the years in manifold activities in the Christian ministry, until Dec. 10, when he also passed away in Providence, R. I., to join his old friend in a realm where the light is so clear that they need no debate questions of denominational policy.

For only ONE CENT you can buy the Gospel of St. Luke or the Book of Acts. Just what you need for the Chapter a Day Bible reading program for January and February.

Why not order 500 or 1,000 for your church or Sunday School? Price is net, carriage extra. Send today to the

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

Bible House, Astor Place

New York City

Agencies

Philadelphia
701 Walnut St.
Dallas
911 Main St.

Chicago
1788 Jewelers' Bldg.
Richmond
218 North Adams St.

Cincinnati
424 Elm St.

San Francisco
250 Golden Gate Ave.

Washington
716 Woodward Bldg.
Denver
1515 Larimer St.

The American Bible Society announces that its current appropriations for this year will be kept within its estimated income of $1,087,000.

Alabama Baptists seem to be a happy family. Their felicity is thus explained by the Alabama Baptist: "There are those in the state who believe that the fundamentals of our holy religion are susceptible of various implications and that these should be applied to a modern world. But if there is a Baptist in Alabama who denies the unchangeable fundamentals this writer does not know that person. The Alabama convention has never presumed to exercise any authority over the churches either in the matter of doctrine or practice."

Chicago Association has announced the appointment of its full committee of arrangements for the coming meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention in the city of Chicago next May. The committee is composed of J. L. Kraft, chairman; Benjamin Otto, secretary; Johnston Myers, executive secretary; other members: W. G. Brimson, Chas. T. Holman, Merle Lucas, James Haynes, George H. Horton, W. R. Hibbs, W. C. Matthews, Perry J. Stackhouse, George H. Critton, R. A. Jensen, H. W. Virgin, Lewis C. Walker, A. E. Peterson, M. C. Tunison, C. J. Howell, F. D. Whitesell, and Mesdames Eugene Massey, A. W. Charles, A. G. Lester, S. C. Jennings, W. P. Topping and Chas. H. Parkes.

Bells are not yet obsolete. The largest bell ever cast in England has been ordered to be placed on the Wanamaker store in Philadelphia. It weighs over seventeen tons and will be the greatest bell in America.

Dr. A. T. Robertson of the Southern Baptist Theological seminary gave the Stone lectures at Princeton Theological seminary in 1916. He has received the unusual honor of an invitation for a return engagement to deliver a series of lectures on the same foundation this year.

A "Church and Drama Association" in which Jews, Catholics and Protestants will cooperate is the latest reported step toward the uplift of the screen. The aim is "to work for a wider appreciation and support of dramatic art as a creative force and to seek its employment for educational ends and the pursuit of social and spiritual culture."

Southern Baptists are going after their debts with hammer and tongs. It is estimated by the Christian Index that the whole amount of denominational indebtedness, not including local church obligations, is $42,000,000; and that by the time of the meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention next May, the two mission boards of the convention will owe $5,000,000. But state after state is putting on a debt-paying campaign, and the next few years will tell a different story.

With this issue Volume VII of THE BAPTIST is concluded, and the index for the contents of Volume VII is given on the last pages of this issue. Volume VII contains only forty-seven numbers of THE BAPTIST instead of the usual fifty-two, for the reason that we are closing it a month earlier so that the new volume may begin with the first issue of January rather than with the first issue of February as in the previous volumes. Volume VIII will thus again be a complete year's issue from Jan. 1, 1927 to Jan. 1, 1928.

R. E. OLDS SCIENCE HALL, KALAMAZOO COLLEGE

Ransom E. Olds, president of the Reo Motor Car Co. and for many years a trustee of Kalamazoo college, authorized Pres. Allan Hoben to make known to the board of trustees of Kalamazoo college, Nov. 1, his gift of a new science hall. This building and complete equipment will cost about $150,000. Plans and detailed specifications have been made and are in the hands of builders. Work of construction will begin at once and the building be ready for use in the fall of 1927. This building is a unit of a program of expansion for the college which is expected to be completed in 1933, the centennial year of the founding of the institution.

Pages would be required to give an adequate sketch of the great issue of the British Weekly celebrating the fortieth anniversary of that noble journal. During these tremendous forty years it has been throughout, as it describes itself, "a journal of social and Christian progress," a liberal, progressive and hopeful exponent of the Christian faith and of a Christian civilization. And it holds unimpaired the same character today. In addition to the usual features about fifty of the leading men and women of Great Britain recount through eighty pages the progress of thought and action among the British people in half a hundred different lines of development. The whole survey constitutes one of the most heartening outlooks for both the Christian faith and a Christian society that have come from the press in these troubled years.

Women and girls propose to girdle the earth with prayer for missions, Mar. 4, 1927. Special programs have been prepared and are now ready at two cents each or $1.75 per hundred, with instructions for leaders free. Order through the regular denominational agencies.

Benefits of the Wunder-Darrow debate at the Temple, Rochester, N. Y., are summed up in Wide Awake, Mr. Wunder's church paper, as follows: "Money cleared for church and club, paying back bills of club, leaving balance to finance program independently for year; fur-

Mount Etna is to be useful as well as explosive. Plans are afoot to erect upon its summit a gigantic searchlight having a million candle power to serve as guide for aviators.

The American Association for the Advancement of Atheism gave a hint of the breadth of its strategy when it protested against the issuance of a Thanksgiving proclamation by President Coolidge. The method resembles that of a person who tries to prevent old age by pulling out an occasional gray hair.

Fifty thousand men who work in the shoe shining and repair shops in New York are trying to secure a law closing such shops on Sunday. When the bankers sought such a law, the cry of "blue laws" was raised against them, but they won. The same cry may be expected to greet the "shine" men in their effort to secure a day of rest. The bogey of "blue laws" is kept in store for use in all such cases, but it is becoming a badly shop-worn bogey.

Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, passed through Chicago, Dec. 14, on his way back to California, leaving Mr. Brougher to spend Christmas with his two boys, Russell, who is pastor of the First church, Paterson, N. J., and James, who is a student in Newton Theological institution. President Brougher is hopeful in regard to the coming Northern Convention to be held in Chicago next May. He anticipates the largest crowd of Baptists ever brought together in general convention and he wishes to assure all who come to the meetings that there will be provided a program of speakers and music and spiritual fellowship which will meet the highest expectations of the most fastidious delegate and harmonize with the demands of an audience which will tax the gigantic auditorium of the coliseum.

The New Way—

A SAFE, SOUND and SENSIBLE plan of financing enables you to Build, Remove Debts or Carry Out your Endowment Program.

Over $125,000,000 has been raised for religious enterprises by members of our Associated Organizations.

Now is the time to arrange for your 1927 Financial Program.

HEDRICK, MARTS & LUNDY, Inc.

Harriman National Bank Building,
527 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

*Members of the Joint Board of Campaign Counsel
and Planning.*

Write for a copy of "Financing Philanthropy".

The Baptist

EDITOR: JOHN A. EARL
FIELD EDITOR: G. CLIFFORD CRESS

ASSISTANT EDITOR: U. M. McGUIRE
OFFICE EDITOR: JANET T. VAN OSDEL

Entered as second-class matter, February 4, 1920, at the postoffice at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Acceptance for mailing at special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized February 4, 1920.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY BY THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION AT 2320 MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Single Subscription, $2.50 a year. Clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership, $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries, postage is $1.04; in Canada, 52 cents.

Attacking the Integrity of Government

LAW, anarchy and dictatorship are the options open to modern peoples in the field of civil government. These principles are contrary to one another. No stable society can be built upon any scheme that tries to reconcile, harmonize or combine them, or that is partly legal and partly anarchistic or dictatorial. The people of the United States have solemnly exercised their option and chosen a government by law. They have formed a national constitution which is a compact in terms of law. They have set up complete machinery for government under that compact. They have carefully prescribed the lawmaking power, have attached to laws constitutionally made the highest national sanction, and have made obedience to all law the supreme test of patriotic virtue. If this doctrine is not true Americanism, the whole history of the republic has been a colossal hypocrisy.

Nor is American law an ironclad and changeless thing. It is as flexible as the people's needs, understanding and will. It provides ways by which they can change it at any time so as to serve more perfectly the purpose of an orderly, self-governed and growing society. Under these circumstances, the existing laws are the nearest approximation to common right that the nation acting collectively is able to express in terms of obligation. In consequence the citizen rests under the highest bond that a common compact of honor and interest can create to obey and support the law.

One item in that bond is the agreement that any citizen has the right to hold and express his own opinion concerning the merits of the law, and if dissatisfied, to seek its modification or repeal by lawful methods. There is no constitutional power in the republic that can prevent any citizen at any time from exercising that right. If there were such a power, that fact would justify revolution. But as long as this right is preserved, its very existence fastens the more tightly upon all citizens the political and moral obligation to obey and support faithfully all existing laws as rules of honor for common conduct. Any person, group or publication that accepts dissatisfaction with the law as sufficient reason for its violation, or that condones, encourages or incites its general violation or unlawful nullification, has invoked the principle of anarchy, has insulted the flag and is self-branded as a foe to the republic.

These principles have specific application to the Volstead law. The general accusation that those who favor that law make it their special pet is simply slander. The Volstead law neither asks nor deserves special privileges. Anybody has the right to disapprove it, to argue against it, to advertise it as abominable, to urge its repeal, to organize a group pledged to work for its repeal, and if possible by the use of lawful methods to secure its repeal. Advocates of the Volstead law grant that right and expect its free and full exercise. But they stand upon the American principle of government by law. Through all the long years of saloon legislation, when they hated license laws with all of the intensity of moral detestation and did everything they could lawfully to change the laws, they nevertheless recognized the obligations of citizenship and counseled obedience to the law.

But what has been the attitude of the liquor interests? Even during that period when they were in the saddle, when they were the pets of the politicians and when laws were made for their special benefit and protection, they always acted upon the principle of anarchy and encouraged or practiced disobedience or nullification toward laws that imposed restrictions upon their business. As it was then so it is now, and it promises to be so forever. The liquor business is in its nature anti-social, predatory, lawless and a prolific breeder of anarchy. It must be abolished to clear the ground for enlightened modern government by law.

If the liquor interests had been alone in the attitude of nullification toward the Volstead law, few people would have been surprised or disappointed. Such an attitude is habitual with them and was expected. But there is another group whose course in reference to the law has been astounding. Certain influential newspapers, reflecting the attitude of an indefinite number of people of highly respectable standing, have joined to condone, encourage and incite violations of the Volstead law. Had they merely associated themselves together to create public sentiment against the law with a view to securing its repeal, their action, however unwise from the point of view of the public welfare, would have been clearly within their rights under the law. But the indictment against them is far graver than that. The whole weight of their influence has been thrown in favor of violation and nullification.

Of course they have been too astute to advocate lawlessness in express and direct terms. But their argument runs in two items, namely: that because the law is unjust and oppressive it is and will be so resented by good citizens who do and inevitably will disregard it, evade it and nullify it; and that its extensive violation is a sufficient reason for its repeal. But when the issue is raised that good citizens do not violate the law and encourage its violation, these papers are silent. They even sneer at efforts to enforce the law, and so handle the news as to create the impression that lawlessness in this particular case is an expression of the spirit of American liberty. When and where has any paper that engages in this propaganda called upon citizens to honor the law by obedience until such time as its repeal can be achieved by lawful methods?

No more dangerous attack upon the integrity of the government has been made in the history of the country. Such propaganda is tearing out the foundations of the national edifice. In its presence prohibition becomes a secondary question, and we are confronted with the issue whether law or anarchy is to be the principle of social control in the United States. Are those who engage in such propaganda blind? Have they no concern for the possible consequences of an education of the people in lawlessness? They represent great property interests. The time may come sooner than they think when a sacred regard for law among the people will be the only protection of those interests against some storm of public indignation. What if, at such a time, the people whom they have educated in the principles of anarchy, should turn the practice of those principles against their teachers?

Wanted—A Gospel Message

A LITTLE more than a year ago the foreign mission board of the Southern Baptist Convention offered a prize of a thousand dollars for the best manuscript on "Evangelical Christianity an Alternative for a Lost or Decaying Religious Faith." The occasion for such an offer is stated in its own words: "Multitudes of intelligent men and women who once held the faith of Roman Catholicism, Greek Orthodoxy, Mohammedanism, Buddhism, etc., no longer believe in these forms of religion, or have become aware that their faith is gradually decaying." Causes and consequences of this change are indicated, and an instance is given of the report that 8000 priests and monks in Italy have abandoned the Roman Catholic faith.

The Southern Baptists are a great people. They specialize on evangelism. If anybody knows the gospel in its adaptation to all human needs, they may be presumed to know it. And who in the world is more apt than they are in the art of reaching the people most winsomely with the gospel message? But here is a phenomenon for study: Of all the manuscripts received in response to that offer, not one was satisfactory, and the offer is renewed.

Such a fact arrests attention. Are these multitudes whose faith is in eclipse opposed to religion? On the contrary, the call of the board for manuscripts says plainly and at some length that they recognize and feel the need for an adequate religious faith to motivate personal and social morality and are looking for it. Is not an elementary acquaintance with our common Christianity available to them? It is. But just here is the difficulty: Our common Christianity as we ourselves conceive and interpret it does not satisfy their demand for actuality, for spiritual dynamic and for moral guidance.

There is a note of desperation in the call. Referring to the specific need of these skeptical multitudes, it says: "If a religious faith is not found which can meet the world's moral need, then moral doom is certain for men, society and nations . . . Do you believe there is a religious faith that can meet these needs . . . ?" Addressed as it is to Christians, such a question is both incisive and alarming. It calls our easy profession of faith in Christ to the bar of a terrifying judgment. Are the facts of the gospel which we have been accustomed to allege so demonstrably certain that their evidence will convince honest skeptics who seek for truth through the methods of scientific investigation? Are the dogmas of evangelical Christianity, which we have accepted as fundamental, a help or a hindrance to an intelligent understanding of Christ on the part of people who are pioneering in a quest for a reasonable religious faith? Has practical Christianity as its followers actually practice it, shown such moral ideals and spiritual power as to warrant its acceptance by earnest thinkers who seek for a faith that will produce a universal type of brotherhood? Has the Christ, whose we are, and whom we serve, such moral and spiritual reserves of personality as to qualify him today for the supreme leadership of the world's best thought and life and to justify faith in him as the Saviour of the world?

Such questions define the task to which the foreign mission board of the Southern Baptist Convention is calling somebody who has not yet answered the call. - No mere sentimentalism, superficial thinking and rattling of old phrases will serve the purposes of such an hour. The Southern Baptists have done well to remind us of the magnitude of the task. It may be that we are called to a reinterpretation of our faith which will prove as difficult and as fateful as that of primitive Christianity when it faced Greek culture and Roman power.

Taking the Co out of Cooperation

COOPERATION is a fine art that requires such skill in team work as shall sink individual preference in the larger fellowship of community service. Denominational cooperation is comparatively a new thing. The gears do not always mesh noiselessly and the operators are not always cooperators; but on the whole the movement is a great improvement on the former method or lack of method. Recently, however, a district secretary violated the ethics of cooperation by trespassing upon the province of a state convention and without consultation with the executive secretary of that convention inducing an associate to leave that state and accept a more attractive and lucrative position in another field. Naturally the state convention secretary is hurt and asks if this is a sample of denominational cooperation. That is not cooperation, but it is an instance of what may happen where cooperation is free and personal initiative untrammelled. The human factor in this case was the brother who yielded to the inducements of another field so soon after giving assurance to the state executive that he would stay five years with him. No state executive secretary should mourn long over the loss of such an associate, because if an associate can be so easily transferred to another job he is more of a liability than an asset in the work by which he is so loosely held.

The World in Transit

An interpretation of significant events in the light of Christian ideals

This Ought to Hold Water and Possibly Several Other Things.

Amendment to the constitution of the United States is proposed in these terms: "No person shall be a citizen of the United States who acknowledges the authority or is subject to the law of any foreign government, prince, potentate or sovereignty which claims or exercises the right of active or passive legation; or which makes treaties, pacts, covenants or agreements with civil powers; or which engages in activities, functions or prerogatives belonging to sovereign states in virtue of their sovereignty; or which claims or exercises legislative, executive or judicial control of matters subject to legislative, executive or judicial control by the United States or by the states." It is aimed at the papacy of course, but it is a fine example of error by excess. The end could be achieved more succinctly by making the law provide that no person shall be a citizen of the United States who has any other interest in heaven or on earth.

Two Schools of Prophets Tell the World of China

When the prophets disagree how may the people know the truth? By investigating the interests represented by the prophets. Nicholas Roosevelt, writing in Foreign Affairs, calls attention to a typical situation in China which The World in Transit has repeatedly noted. He explains that conditions in China are receiving current interpretation from two groups of interpreters representing respectively the imperialist attitude and the missionary attitude. These two groups of prophets color their interpretations by their backgrounds of interest and connection. The imperialist looks on as a foreigner, sees a clash among selfish Chinese leaders, feels the interruption of trade, wonders how long American business will tolerate the conditions, contemplates the possibility of armed intervention to teach the Chinese good sense, and looks forward hopefully to the time when all China will be safely opened again for business. Silas Strawn, lately returned from unsuccessful negotiations in China, well represents that view. The missionary group, represented by frequent articles in THE BAPTIST, sees in China a great people stirred by new humanitarian impulses and striving hopefully through confusion, misunderstanding and foreign interference to create a new benign and mighty nation. Naturally those who live off the Chinese see things differently from those who live with and for the Chinese.

Opacity, Oil and Empire, Jail Fellows in Mexico.

Mexico refuses to stay out of the news. Knights of Columbus start a million-dollar propaganda to create in the United States a hatred of the Mexican government. Oil companies appeal to the government of the United States for aid in forcing the Mexican government to accept the terms of those companies in the settlement of conflicting claims. Diaz, president of Nicaragua, said to have been placed and sustained in his position by American dollars and American guns, raises an alarm that his political opponents are receiving aid from Mexico. Certain newspapers which specialize in jingoism begin to evoke faint screams from the eagle. Reports leak out that certain oil companies willing to accept the terms of the Mexican government are urged by the United States government not to do so; also that a subordinate in the United States government requested the representatives of the leading news agencies to invent and circulate the report that the Mexican government has gone over to bolshevism and is conspiring with the Soviet Union against this country. Officials announce with moral assiduity that the people of the United States have no designs upon any other country and wish only to live in peace with all the world, and the statement is indeed true—of the people. Latest report is that the oil companies have decided to look to Mexico rather than to Washington for a settlement. Let the Catholic church follow their example.

The Danube Holds the Secret of a Scientific Experiment.

Some Hungarian boys wanted to know about the future life. To find out, they agreed that one of their number should enter it by dying and should report to the others what he might discover. The lot fell to Paul Nagy, and promising to report as soon as he should arrive in another world, he plunged into the Danube and was drowned. Paul Nagy is one of the world's heroes. As a martyr to science and to human service he ranks with the young men in Cuba who submitted to inoculation with yellow fever germs in order to find a cure for it. Had he been able to send back authentic word from the unseen world a monument to his memory would have been erected on the banks of the Danube. It ought to be erected anyhow, for he did his best. He gave his life to find light for mankind. And this much he achieved: he showed that the secret of the spirit world is not revealed to mankind by that method. For that purpose one such sacrifice is enough; let no other try it. The sacrifice that wins immortality and reveals the truth of eternal life is a living sacrifice of human service and suffering after the pattern of Jesus Christ.

How Long Shall We Keep Piddling About the Divorce Problem?

Canada has annually one divorce to every 163,300 people, as the report goes, and the United States has one to every 685 people. A religious exchange accounts for the difference on the ground that Canada has "just laws adequately enforced." But the explanation may be as superficial as it is easy. Does it go to the bottom of the difficulty? Is it certain that fifteen out of every sixteen separations of husband and wife in the United States could be prevented by adopting the divorce laws of Canada? There is another way to view the subject. Consider that in this country where divorce is easy the marriage bond holds through life in six cases out of seven. This is a basic fact on which to proceed in any thorough study of the American family. Whatever else it may mean it shows to a certainty that civil law is not the bond upon which the permanence of the family depends. Divorce is a secondary question. Study rather how to create and perpetuate a sound family life.

One More Way to Use Uncollectable Debts.

An editorial in the Oriental Review suggests that by an international arrangement a large part of the war debts be pooled to create an international foundation for public instruction to be administered by the League of Nations. The very magnitude of the proposal arrests attention. If wisely handled, such a foundation could stay the educational decline that now threatens Europe, could promote the intellectual development of backward peoples, could vastly encourage and aid scientific research and could contribute immeasurably to the cause of international peace.

THE INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON AFRICA, HELD AT LE ZOUTE, BELGIUM

In Trust for Civilization

By P. H. J. LERRIGO

SIR Frederick Lugard, late governor general of Nigeria and now a member of the commission on mandates of the British government, stated to the International Conference on Africa held in Le Zoute, Belgium, in September that the British government had accepted the principle underlying the League of Nations mandate conception as the principle which should prevail in the government of every British colony. According to this conception, a mandatory should be accepted and governed as a trust for civilization. In line with this utterance it is stated that the Gold Coast government which a few years ago voted £40,000 a year for education now votes £100,000 and within a decade will give £350,000. The note here sounded was prevalent throughout the utterances of most of the government officials who assisted at the conference referred to. Among these were M. Louis Franc, colonial minister, Belgium; the Hon. E. B. Denham, C. M. G., colonial secretary, Kenya colony; Sir Edward C. F. Garraway, former resident commissioner, Bechuanaland Protectorate; Den. de Meulemeester, vice-governor Congo Belge, and others. Even Sr. Oliviera, ambassador of Portugal, pledged the cooperation of his government with the missionary societies in their Christianizing and civilizing work.

Never before has the continent of Africa been studied with such care from the standpoint of the effort completely to evangelize its one hundred and forty million peoples. Two hundred and fifty persons were brought together whose special relationship to the task and intimate knowledge of African conditions rendered them peculiarly fitted to grapple with the subject. Most of the 130 missionary organizations working in Africa were represented. In addition, leaders of negro education in America attended.

It is estimated that 800 languages and dialects are in use in Africa. It can readily be seen what a formidable barrier these place in the way of the spread of the gospel. The statistics regarding translation and the production of literature in native tongues, however, indicate an encouraging measure of progress. An encouraging achievement is the recent establishment of the International Institute of African Languages and Culture. This institute is prepared to help the missionaries in solving linguistic problems, remedying and preventing expensive mistakes in the choice of orthography, preparing school textbooks adapted to the needs and conditions of African life and in promoting a better understanding of the distinctive character and contribution of African peoples.

The problems confronting the missionary to Africa are extremely perplexing, but the conference was able to make many valuable suggestions. The following may be quoted from its findings: "The life of the African is essentially social and based on tribal conditions and customs. Therefore everything that is good in the African's heritage should be conserved, enriched and ennobled by contact with the Spirit of Christ. In all questions regarding indigenous custom the counsel of mature well-instructed African Christians should be sought. It is our hope that African Christians will build up a body of Christian custom, true to their genius and covering the whole of their life. This conference is convinced that Christian society must be built on Christian family life, and that the ideal of the Christian family life can only be realized in monogamy."

In order to economize time and to set the conference on the road to constructive achievement as quickly as possible the main subjects of the conference were treated in a series of papers which were published in advance in the International Review of Missions, supplying the delegates with a mass of information on each topic.

One of the constantly recurring notes in the conference was the need for a more adequate provision for the health needs of the African peoples. Every line of inquiry seemed to lead to this vital issue. The substantial part which the evangelical missions are taking in providing for Africa's physical need was pointed out. Seventy missionary societies, of which twenty-five are American, are carrying on medical work in Africa. There are 142 men physicians, fifteen women physicians and 282 nurses at work in connection with these missions. A total of 554 trained African assistants are associated with the workers from other lands; 136 hospitals are listed and 387 dispensaries. Last year 60,247 patients were treated in the hospitals and the total number of dispensary treatments reached nearly two million.

But with all this effort, we are touching only the fringe of Africa's physical need. A suggestion was made which may prove fruitful in this direction. It was pointed out that through the educational work carried on by the various missions it would be possible to conduct a thorough-going campaign for the dissemination of health information in such a manner as has proved so successful in our own southern states. Thousands of small schools are carried on by the missions all over Africa. For the most part they are elementary in character and poorly equipped. The term "bush schools" is descriptive, for they are located in little villages scattered throughout wild jungle areas. In spite of their primitive character and inadequate equipment they present the largest element of hope in the future of Africa. This ramifying system of small schools is already the means whereby the gospel message is brought to the interior villages. It is now planned to utilize it to bring to the people simple teaching on the more important principles of hygiene.

No matter how great the advance in the teaching of health principles, we must still cope with a vast amount of disease. The findings of the conference mention four scourges which menace the future of the continent: African sleeping sickness, venereal disease, tuberculosis and the various classes of worm infestation. The relatively small band of foreign medical workers may well be dismayed before the magnitude of the task of healing "the open sore of the world." Africa's own sons and daughters must more and more, in the days to come, take the leadership in sanitation and medicine. The production of strong native leadership in this line is imperative. Everywhere and in every line native African genius, ability, consecration and service are needed. But this is true in no line more than in medicine. Our own medical missionaries have already accomplished much in this direction. Drs. Catharine L. Mabie, Judson C. King, W. H. Leslie, and Hjalmar Ostrom have trained many assistants. Doctor King had six trained men working with him at one time. Doctor Mabie was able to turn over her dispensary work for a time to a trained helper. But the day is anticipated and it ought not to be placed too far in the future when our missions in Africa, working in cooperation with the government, will be able to turn out numbers of fully trained African physicians and nurses.

The work of the Le Zoute conference would have been incomplete without some attention being paid to the new and startling impact which commerce and industry are making upon Africa. Development along these lines is proceeding with astonishing rapidity. In every area there is a new influx of European enterprise and initiative. Profound changes are being brought about in the social organization of the native African tribe through these new contacts. Many great projects are on foot under government or commercial leadership which require large numbers of native workers. These are brought often from long distances and are placed in concentration camps adjacent to the site of the new enterprise. It is said that on the sixty miles of gold-bearing reef which comprises the Witswatersrand 300,000 natives have thus been brought together from all over south and east Africa. This is one of the older types of commercial enterprises but the condition found on the Rand is being rapidly paralleled in other sections of Africa.

The moral and physical dangers attending the bringing together of such abnormal aggregations of workers are obvious. The problem is brought home to Northern Baptists emphatically by the rapidly augmenting settlement of native workers at Matadi, Congo's port of entry. From all over Congo men and women of every tribe join the company on the hill behind the city. Mr. C. E. Smith, who has been acting as treasurer for our mission at that point, finds a striking analogy between the human whirlpool thus produced and the Chaudron d'Enfer (hell's cauldron), a watery vortex of extreme danger found in the Congo river just below Matadi where the waters meet in such a way as to produce a focus of hydraulic suction menacing every approaching vessel.

Africa cannot and will not remain isolated from the onward sweep of the world's economic and industrial development. Already the situation may be described as little less than an industrial revolution. But the physical development of Africa cannot proceed without the use of man power. It is already recognized that the hundred and forty millions of Africa's native population are not sufficient to furnish an ample provision for the work required. Even from an economic standpoint it becomes a matter of the utmost importance to guard Africa's people from the physical and moral conditions which threaten the depopulation of certain parts of the continent. From a spiritual standpoint it becomes an imperative duty of the Christian churches in more favored parts of the world so to reinforce their efforts in Africa as to give these child races a moral and spiritual preparation which will help them to stand firm in the presence of new temptations and strange new contacts with influences and peoples from across the sea.

Withered Branches

THE torrid sun of worldly gains
And sensual pleasures fiercely beat
With burning rays upon our souls,
Nor may one hide from scorching heat—
And warmth in measure we may need,
"I pray not from the world to take,
But save," prayed Christ, "from worldly greed, Preserve from withering, nor forsake."

"Abide in me—in me believe,
I'm the true Vine, its branches ye,
Truths which I held, humbly receive,
Or severed from me, withered be."
Yet his plain warnings, scarce we hear,
With half-faith questionings follow then,
While self-conceits thus bold appear,
Trusting ideals woven by men.

What Christ himself believed, must we
Or, withered, off the Vine we're pruned;
Unquestioning faith, like his should be,
To all he taught hearts well attuned—

Search then his life—his gospel clear—
Life founded on the truths he taught,
God's love—souls cross-redeemed—appear
In teachings none can set at naught.

"Many beliefs—which can one choose?"
Choose what believed the Christ divine,
All other teachings dare refuse
Lest, withered, drop ye from the Vine—
"Believest thou the Christ?" If not Soon falling to the soil ye lie
Where doubts and unbelief rage hot 'Neath burning rays from worldly sky.

How many branches there are strewn
Wide scattered o'er the vineyard's ground!
No life—its semblance only shown—
Hearts dry, no fruits of love abound—
While rings Christ's challenge in our ears,
"In God ye trust, why not in me?"
And blest the soul who childlike hears
"Bide in the Vine, or withered be!"

—George G. Phipps in Boston Transcript.

Guardian Angels

Are we to teach, ignore or suppress a doctrine that seems to have the tacit sanction of almost the whole of the universal church?

BY JOHN R. CROSBY

A MEMBER of my congregation, a devout and consecrated Christian, came to me recently and inquired if there was anything in the Word of God that would hinder or prevent her belief in the existence of guardian angels appointed by Almighty God to watch over the welfare of human beings, or whether this belief came under the heading of the "vain superstitions" spoken of by Paul. It was the first time that the question had been brought to me. I gave her the only answer that in my opinion could be given, namely, that the existence of angel guardians is rendered needless by the watchful care of God and that it is apt to detract from the mediatory glory of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

An "Angelic Cult"

On making inquiries among various members of different denominations, I was amazed to find how generally this belief was diffused among the Protestant sects. In some it appeared to be a mere tradition, in others an ingrained superstition, while in some it seemed to amount to an "angelic cult." I gave an actual prayer, or rather jargon, that a mother taught her child to repeat together with its evening prayer:

*"Two angels at my bed,
One at the feet and one at the head.
Matthew, Mark, Luke and John Bless the bed that I lie on."*

This seemed to have been handed down as a family tradition and may be a survival of the Catholic practices of pre-reformation days. The belief seems to be too widely and generally diffused to be accounted for by this theory, although it is marvelous how many of the old Catholic beliefs and superstitions linger even in this work-a-day, modernistic age.

In view of the general and widespread diffusion of this doctrine, it occurred to me that a short paper dealing with the question might be of interest, not only to my fellow pastors, but to other church workers and to the denomination at large.

A Common Belief

The belief in the existence of superhuman, spiritual beings inferior to Almighty God but of a pure spiritual, noncorporeal nature, is common to all monotheistic religions of the world (Christian, Jewish and Mahomedan) as well as to the polytheistic Semitic and eastern faiths and the gnostic and other sects deriving their origin from one or more of these religions. That the belief in angels was common in the time of Paul may be deduced from his warning, in the second chapter of Colossians, "not to be beguiled into the worship of angels," and the passage in Hebrews, "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to do service by a higher power?" These various monotheistic beliefs all postulate a sharp distinction between these beings on the one hand and Almighty God on the other. According to our own Bible it is indubitably taught that angels not only exist but that they visit and influence both nations and individuals. This is clearly brought out in both the Old and New Testaments.

The word "angel" is a direct transcription of the Greek meaning "a messenger" and is also used for the Hebrew mal'akh—one sent—the latter being used indifferently to signify a human or divine messenger. The term angel is also used to represent the Hebrew term B'ne Elohim— sons of God—and Sabaoth, in the phrase Yahweh Sabaoth—Lord of Hosts. The Septuagint or Latin version distinguishes between the divine and human messenger, rendering the one by the word angelus and the other by regatus or nuntius.

Professor Boyce in his "Abstract of Theology" states that "some have conceived that on each person in this life an angel attends to guard and protect from evil" but adds that although this was the belief of the early church, scriptural authority for it is wanting. His general attitude appears to be noncommittal. With the greatest respect for Professor Boyce, he seems to me to have mistaken the functions ascribed to the "guardian angels" by the early church, the fathers and the mediaeval theologians. This, however, can be dealt with later.

Superstitious Practice

It is sure that the primitive churches of the first few centuries held this doctrine without question or hesitation, basing their belief on the authority of the divine word. That this belief degenerated into superstitious practices we know from the warning of Paul cited above and from the fact that the council of Laodices, as late as the year 300, condemned the adoration paid to angels, although certain authorities claim an earlier date for this assembly.

In Genesis 17 and 19, the angels are personally sent to Lot not only to execute the vengeance of the Lord but actually to deliver him from danger. In Exodus 30:34, we read, "Behold mine angels shall be before thee." In Psalm 90:2, we have, "For he hath given his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways," and in Psalm 34:7, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them." In the tenth chapter of Daniel angels are definitely appointed to the charge of certain countries while in Deuteronomy 32:8 we are told that "he established the company of the nations according to the number of the angels of God."

In the New Testament we meet with equally definite assurance, Matthew 17:10, "Their angels always see the face of my Father, which is in heaven." Here we have a definite assertion that these ministering angels do not lose the celestial vision even when fulfilling their mission upon earth. In Luke 27:43, we read, "And there appeared unto him an angel from heaven strengthening him." In Acts 10:7, 42 we are told of Cornelius and the vision of the angel, and above all in Acts 12 the emphatic words of Peter, "Now I know that the Lord hath sent his angel" and in Chapter 27:23, "For there stood by me the angel of the Lord."

Personal Guardianship

Among the early Christians and the various sects of the first few centuries one finds continual traces of this belief in the guardianship of angels over the individual Christian and I have been unable to find any expression showing that it was ever questioned. There were expressions against its abuse and against the belief degenerating into worship, but not against the belief as a belief. The idea of the function of the guardian angel appears to have been to warn in case of approaching temptation and in a passage of undoubted authenticity attributed to Hippolytus (c. 220) he refers to that "warning from within, the voice of the angel, which admonishes us to take heed to the commandments of God." Jerome, in his "Commentary on Matthew" tells us, "How great was the dignity of the soul, since each one has from its birth an angel commissioned to guard it." (Comm. Matth. 18. Lib. 2.) A treatise doubtfully attributed to Epiphanius but probably of considerably earlier date, mentions that the "voice of our angel regarding the temptations of the flesh, should be listened to as the voice of God." The fact that the belief was universal may be deduced from the controversy in which Basil and Chrysostom took part as to whether a guardian angel was appointed to every human soul or only to baptized Christians. In a Syrian tract on baptism by Niclaus of Osroene, quoted in the Tubinger Quartalschrift for 1892 by Doctor Schind, the reason for the exorcism by the priest is given as "driving away the evil spirit and leaving the appointed angel in unopposed possession of the newly emancipated soul." It may be objected that the above quotations are from authorities of a later date than the first century after Christ, but that being admitted, the belief must have been universal in the early church or have been diffused so generally throughout all the countries of the world.

View of the Early Church

My own belief is that the early Christians recognized in the guardian angel the properties assigned by theologians to conscience. Indeed, the terms seem to be synonymous. A sermon by Clement, the disciple of Peter, refers to those who stifle the voice of the angel of God and plunge heedless of the interior warning into the abyss of sin (Clem. Hom. Lib. 2). Still more interesting is the passage in the second book of Hermas or Hermes, brother of Pius, bishop of Rome, about 150 A. D. This book, which we are told by Eusebius was publicly read in the churches, and is described by Athanasius as uncanonical but to be read by catechumens and of which the author is believed to be the Hermas mentioned by Paul in Romans 16:14, may be accepted as giving the authentic view of the early church upon this question: "There are two angels with man, one of righteousness and the other of iniquity. The angel of righteousness is mild and retiring and peaceful and still. When, therefore, he enters into thy spirit, he talks with thee of righteousness, of modesty, of purity, of charity, of forgiveness, of loving kindness, of piety. When all these things come into thy heart know that the angel of righteousness is with thee. Whereforearken to this angel and to his words. Here, therefore, thou hast the works of both these angels. Understand now and believe the angel of righteousness because his instruction is good."

Summing up the evidence, it seems conclusive that the general belief of the primitive church, indubitably founded on holy scripture, was that an angel was appointed to each human soul to warn him of the approach of evil and by exciting his conscious faculties to preserve him from the onset of sin. We are told by Hegesippus of Crete, writing about the end of the first century, that although the angel guardian can excite our imagination and our senses to turn us against sin, he cannot have control over our will, and that those who fall into sin do so knowingly having been warned by God through his messenger, the guardian angel.

Praying to Angels

It was not long before this simple evangelical belief in the beneficent messengers of God was corrupted into superstition and abuse. The practice of praying to the "holy angels" arose early in the Latin church and spread with alarming rapidity into the various eastern communities. Although in the Oriental churches the corruption probably had entrance through the various gnostic sects. Saint Ambrose (circa. 380) says, "We should pray to the angels who are given to us as guardians (De Viduis 9). The early sacramentaries and liturgies are full of this practice. The seventh century Sacramentarium Leonianum has "quae (oblatio) angelis tuis sanctisque precantibus et indulgentiam nobis referat et remedia procuret aeterna." In the Horologium Magnum of the Greek church the angel is addressed as follows, "Since thou hast the power to receive my soul, cease never to cover it with the shadow of thy wings." In the sacramentary of St. Leo the feast of St. Michael the archangel is celebrated, together with a reference to all angels, and in one prayer God is asked to sustain those laboring in this world through the protecting power of his holy angels. Various churches in different parts of the world had a special devotion to the angels, especially in Spain and the North of England and papal documents and local usages ascribe the rise of this cult to about the end of the third century or after the purity of the early church had been corrupted by the craze for theological and philosophical speculation which, passing under the name of theology, brought dismay and confusion to the church of God. It is interesting to note that the worship of angels and the belief in guardian angels has never been definitely formulated or declared a point of faith by the Roman church although in 1608 Pius V placed it among the regular feasts of the Catholic church.

Belief Widespread

After the reformation the belief in the ministry of the guardian angel seems to have persisted in those Protestant churches which sprang directly from the Roman church. In the larger catechism of the Presbyterian church question 29—we read, "What is God's providence toward the angels?" And the answer, "Employing them all, at his pleasure in the administration of his power, mercy and justice" seems to indicate that the belief in Almighty God sanctioning the employment of an angel as the guide and mentor of a human soul is not incompatible with the Protestant belief. I possess a tract by a Scotch divine, a Doctor Murdoch, published in Edinburgh in 1706 entitled De Angelis which states this belief as an accomplished and recognized article of faith without any argument or fear of contradiction whatever. Milton accepted it as is shown in passages too many to be quoted here. The Episcopal church received it as a heritage from the Roman church and clearly recognizes the mission of the angel guardians in the collect for the feast of St. Michael and all angels (which is lifted wholesale from the Roman breviary): "O everlasting God, mercifully grant that as thy holy angels, always do thee service in heaven, so, by thy appointment they may succor and defend us on earth." It is, therefore, easy to see how this belief has assumed widespread proportions among the Protestant sects, most of whom derive their origin from either Rome or Episcopalianism. As a theologian and a humble though ardent student of church history, I wonder what our attitude as Baptists should be on the subject. We are neither reformed nor Protestants and have no tradition from an older church. Are we then claiming as we do to represent the original apostolic practice and belief, to teach, ignore, or endeavor to suppress a doctrine which appears to have the tacit sanction of almost the whole of the universal church?

I LOVE to hear of those who, not contending
Nor summoned to contend for virtue's prize,
Miss not the humbler good at which they aim,
Blest with a kindly faculty to blunt
The edge of adverse circumstances, and turn
Into their contraries the petty plagues
And hindrances with which they stand beset.

—Wordsworth.

Lawlessness and the Law of Suggestion

Shall we give the world what we know it needs, or shall we give it what it thinks it wants?

By JAMES W. GRAVES

THE number of people who engage in real thinking is comparatively small. The thinking process is involved and difficult. Conversation, conclusions, decisions and actions generally follow the law of suggestion, and usually the course of least resistance. What is suggestion? Some one has defined it as "the entrance into the mind from without of an idea or image, which is accepted uncritically, and tends to produce muscular and volitional activity which ordinarily follows upon the presence of such idea or image". No one can boast immunity from suggestion, for all are subject to it except the feeble-minded.

Education, training, social custom, business, advertising, and even religion employ suggestion. The unthinking masses are often taken advantage of by unscrupulous people seeking personal profit.

One of the most needed reforms today is an ethical use of this power of suggestion. The old-time saloon keeper would give liquor to minors, treat the old toper and throw liquor on the floor or on the sidewalks that the fumes arising therefrom might stir the passion for drink—all to create a desire for drink in order that he might sell and get gain. We have overthrown the open saloon, but we have not gotten away entirely from the principle used by the dram-shop keeper.

One of the most momentous questions today is this: "Shall I give to the world what I know it needs, or shall I give it what it thinks it wants?" The way in which we answer that question determines whether we are good or bad, servers or suckers, honest men or robbers. And the one that attempts to create desires that are injurious, to arouse the appetites and passions that should lie dormant, in order that he may fatten his coffers on the weaknesses of his fellows is the most dangerous and detrimental of any class of citizens among us. He will not hesitate to commercialize sin and iniquity, and is not particular how he gets money, just so he gets it. But it is he who breaks down confidence in humanity, who engenders suspicion and distrust and destroys the work of schools and churches and other institutions that are trying to elevate the ideals of men. He and his kind make it difficult to carry on the world's work. They impede moral, social, intellectual and religious progress. Such men need reformation, or more particularly regeneration. They need new hearts, new motives, new ideals. With them dishonesty must give place to justice, and selfishness must be supplanted by righteousness.

Crime Age Changed

There is a decrease in certain crimes throughout the United States, and this decrease is most noticeable. According to recent figures from the police departments of 300 of the country's leading cities the actual decrease in arrests for drunkenness since the Volstead act went into effect is 42.3 per cent, or one million less cases each year. Where formerly drunk cases made up 32.5 per cent of the total arrests of the country, they have now been cut to 18.8 per cent. The greatest single factor in arrests today is the automobile. There are certain phases of crime that are giving students of social questions great concern. There are more crimes of major proportion, crimes of a terrible nature—terrifying, tragic, bloody, unusual, and brutal. Then, too, the age of the criminal is younger. A few years ago the average age committing capital offenses, was about thirty. Now the majority of serious crimes are committed by mere children, boys and girls just out of their teens. I see at least two reasons for this. The first is that the young and thoughtless are more susceptible to suggestion; and the second is that the young are inexperienced, are unable to protect themselves from the unprincipled persons who will not hesitate to commercialize their very souls for their own personal profit.

To protect the young and unthinking we need a reformation along several lines to remove the suggestions to crime. Here I have first a word to our daily press. We have never had a better public press than today, neither have we ever had a worse one. Some of our newspapers, even those that have the largest circulation, are too nearly police blotters, sheets which record crime in all its gory detail: slander, marital disturbances, rapine, stabbings, lynchings, shootings, murder. These are the things which are considered news today and these are the things which are dished up for the American family to feed upon. The press will probably come back with the statement that this is what the people demand. I am challenging the managers to give to the world what it needs rather than what it wants. The press will probably say, "We could not sell our papers." Very well, you do not have to sell your papers. You ought to feel that you have to give the public what it ought to have, what it needs, that which will help it rather than curse it.

Ethics of Newspapers

Here you have the issue clearly stated. In order to sell their commodity, and make a success of their investment, the newspapers are ready and willing to give to the general public what it wants, what it demands rather than what it needs. I am challenging this standard of ethics in newspaper business. I am saying that here we need a reformation in order to check crime and remove the suggestions to crime.

Even though the youth of today does not read the daily paper, he can scarcely stick his head outside the door of his home without having some scene of crime thrust upon his impressionable mind. He must look upon some one meeting a terrible fate, falling down a steep cliff, leaping from a burning building, or being struck by a train, or some thrilling and terrifying death. He sees some man or woman with a dagger raised to murder, or a revolver thrust into another's face ready to shoot, or who has shot to death. It is fighting, strangling, killing. It is crime in some form that is constantly before his sensitive imagination. The billboards are covered and smeared with that sort of stuff and one cannot help seeing it, for they are placed right in one's path.

The motion picture is educating the young and unthinking by the law of suggestion that life should have its "thrill." It is exceedingly difficult, for the young and unthinking, for those who are moved by the law of suggestion, to keep from taking all these scenes, pictures and stories and reenacting them into real life. It is next to impossible to feed the public on crime and not breed a generation of criminals. All the schools, Sunday schools, churches and other institutions that are trying to maintain healthy ideals cannot counteract the influence of newspaper, billboard, and motion picture.

A few years ago in conference with a number of moving picture proprietors, I suggested to them that they show only such pictures which, if enacted into real life, would not be a violation of statutory law. They replied: "We know that would be better for the public, but it would not do for us. We should go into bankruptcy inside of six months." It comes back to the same old story. "We stand ready to commercialize the weaknesses of the people if thereby we can get their money."

To the suggestion made for committing crime add that instruments for committing crime are easily secured, attractively offered for sale, and even death dealing and destructive weapons look as pleasing and harmless as toys and trinkets. I walked around a block in our city and stopped in front of three or four show windows in which were dirks, daggers, billies, revolvers and guns of every variety, shape, size, and description. I saw deadly weapons—revolvers in blue steel, nickel plated, carved handle pearl mounted and jewel bedecked, pocket editions of mammoth sizes.

When a person must have a permit from the court to carry a revolver, why should there be an open market for them? Why should not the disposal of them be left in the hands of the court? Why should not a careful record be kept of these instruments, and a watch also upon those who possess them? If we compel a pharmacist who has deadly drugs to sell to register and report sales, then why not use the same care regarding the weapons that drop into the hands of thinking, irresponsible people, who are likely to be involved in deeds of destruction by the power of suggestion?

Thomas Edison recently wrote to Henry Ford, "The serious agent in cigarets comes principally from the burning wrapper. The substance thereby formed is called 'nicotin.' It has a violent action on the nerve centers, reducing degeneration of the cells of the brain, which is very rapid among boys. Unlike most narcotics this degeneration is permanent and uncontrollable. I employ no person who smokes cigarets." Judge Ben Lindsay said, "I have had to deal with thousands of boys and girls who have disgraced themselves and their parents, and who have brought woe and misery into their lives; and I do not know of any one habit that is more responsible for the trouble of these boys than the cigaret habit."

Permit me to suggest to the respectable press of the country that it cease dishing out to us the pictures of "fashionable" women with cigarets, and give to the people the actual helpful facts relative thereto. I believe it will be more appreciated by the thinking public than so much of the propaganda appearing from the tobacco trust.

When we bring our whole moral nature up in revolt against the base and the vile in the suggestions which are constantly presented to us, when we shall be more discriminating in our patronage of amusements, when we shall be more careful regarding the business and organizations which we support, then we shall have a cleaner and a better place in which to live. Let us make it clearly known to the public, to our public servants, to the press, to those who offer to amuse and entertain us, that we stand committed against the things which are suggestive of thoughts and actions which have a downward tendency, and changes will soon be brought about that will be wholesome and gratifying. There are plenty of people trying to give us what they think we want, not what they know we need, but these very people will be the first to change to what we demand when we make known our higher and nobler desires, lest they lose financially. They are after the mighty dollar. Withdraw that and they will change to get it.

The rest of the whole matter is in the natural tendency of human nature to drift downward. Reformation is an excellent thing, and we need it, but regeneration is infinitely better. Men need new hearts, hearts that will love the best, the noblest, the purest and the right. The regenerating grace of God in Christ Jesus can and does give that. Regeneration carries with it reformation. It corrects the inner motive and enables one to live from a desire that is pure and holy. Christ can change it all.

The Questionnairing Preacher

BY H. L. WILLIAMS

PERSONALLY, I think that the questionnaire method of selecting a pastor is a great thing. Some people object against it, but they haven't taken the thing in the right spirit. I am frank in saying that if it had not been for the questionnaire I probably should not have my present parish. It gave me the opportunity of my life. When the long list of questions came to me I sat down and wrote to myself, "Now just what do these men want?" Nothing impressed me. It was this, "We want only your candid opinion of yourself."

Some men have overlooked that. They have gone out and get figures and statistics to compile an important document. That isn't what is wanted. But if the average man will place modesty behind him and write his own opinion as asked he will find this an excellent way to a parish.

I might be well to study some of my answers. For instance there is the question, "How would you rate your preaching ability?" I gave an honest answer: "I rank somewhat below Henry Ward Beecher but am on a par with the best men of today. S. Parkes Cadman is somewhat more eloquent, but I am the more logical and profound and have more exhibition sermons."

I take the question about building up the church membership. It did not ask for figures but merely an opinion:

"How do you build up your membership? (a) Popular methods? (b) By parish work? (c) By evangelistic work? (d) By force of personality?"

Now notice the breadth of my answer: "My method of building up a congregation is by the popular, parish, evangelistic method which is always successful when I attempt it because of my own dynamic personality."

Take the question, "What is your attitude toward the prayer meeting?" My reply is significant: "The prayer meeting is the dynamo of the church. Within the hallowed hour of sacred prayer are born those impulses which have shaped empires."

These are the kind of answers which count. Recently one of the men on the pulpit committee happened to mention them. He said, "One thing I will say about you, Williams, is that you have a good opinion of yourself and aren't afraid to give it."

I chuckled. "All you asked was my own opinion," I told him. And that was what I gave him.

I am so much in favor of this method that when I got on the field I began to see if it could not be applied in other ways. One of the first things a man looks for when he goes into a new town is a dependable physician. There were three of them in my church. One of them had served on the pulpit committee. I decided to try the questionnaire to find the right one. I took a copy of the one which had been used in finding a minister and revamped it and sent one to each physician asking the courtesy of a reply if he desired the family patronage. Here are the questions which were used.

1. Name and address.
2. Do you pay rent?
3. Do you pay it regularly? If so, why? If not, why not?
4. Please give me the record of your education. (a) Grammar school; (b) High school; (c) College; (d) Medical school.
5. What were your final grades in osteology, materia medica, anatomy, biology, etiology? (This question is a humdinger and made the doctors sweat.)
6. How many patients of yours have died in the last twelve months? Do you think that some other method might have saved them? Give only your personal opinion.
7. How much do you pay your nurses, assistants, anaesthetists?
8. If I die on your hands, is their pay docked in any way or do they receive their full pay?

9. When operating do you wear: (a) Cap? (b) Mask? (c) Robe? (d) Rubber gloves?

10. Will you give me a list of your patients (living) with whom I might talk regarding your methods?

11. Submit a rough draft of what you would do with my case if I put it in your hands.

12. Do you allow a special discount to clergymen and their families?

These, of course, were searching questions; but selecting a physician is a serious business and I was thoroughly sold to this questionnaire method. All of the answers came in promptly as I knew that they would, for every reputable physician likes to have such questions asked. It gives him a chance to show his professionalism. But it was difficult to weed out the answers. On nearly every question the answers were different. Finally I decided to let the whole matter rest on question twelve. That is an important thing after all. It always cuts a big figure with pulpit committees when they are after preachers.

But, alas, on number twelve there was uniform agreement. Each one had written in in fine, bold characters unmistakable in meaning, "Never again."

What Is This?

BY JOSEPH W. MAUCK

"HUGHES leads church envoys.—It was formally announced today that the former secretary of state, Charles Evans Hughes, has accepted chairmanship of the American committee of the world conference on faith and order which meets at Lausanne, Switzerland, in August next year."

Above is a news item from New York in a recent issue of the Chicago Journal of Commerce. What is this movement of such import that it has brought into the vocabulary of a leading journal, devoted chiefly to our business life, the high words "church envoys" and enlists as its outstanding leader in America a man who was an extraordinarily able former secretary of state for this great republic and is now the distinguished chief justice of the federal supreme court?

The bulletin for Oct. 28 of the Commission on International Good-Will through the Churches (one of the several commissions of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America) says:

"The eyes of the world will once again be turned toward Europe during the summer of 1927. There will be convened in Lausanne, Switzerland, in August, the World Conference on Faith and Order. The forthcoming gathering was first contemplated in a resolution passed in 1910 by the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal church (at Richmond, Va.), which called for the appointment of a commission to arrange for 'a conference for the consideration of questions touching faith and order, and that all Christian communions throughout the world which confess our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour be asked to unite with us in arranging for and conducting such a conference.' We are now informed that eighty-seven nation-wide communions have signified their intention of cooperating in this conference. The call to unity summons every Christian throughout the world to remember the New Testament teachings that the church should reflect the unity of God; the impulse of the Holy Spirit within the church and in their own hearts, making toward unity; the purpose of the Lord, that through his church the non-Christian world should be converted and all human society purified and inspired, a purpose which cannot be fulfilled but by a united church; and the strength and violence of the antagonistic forces of our day, which can be met only by a united church."

The action at Richmond contemplated years of preparation, appointing of commissions by the highest councils of the many communions of the churches in America and abroad, educating them up to world conception of their service, and sending of delegations to enlist the communions and ecclesiastic heads in the various lands. The considerable expense of these preparations were in the first years borne by men and women of liberal means in the Protestant Episcopal communion in America, and they are still the main force in the promotion and cost of the movement.

The Universal Christian Conference was held in Stockholm, Sweden, in August, 1925, and has freely been accepted as the greatest of its kind and general scope since that of Nicea 1600 years ago. It was initiated later than the Richmond proposal and did not require such an extended preparation. It was concerned chiefly with social, industrial, civic and other questions which intimately touch the present life of the world, but its speakers and committees paid high tributes to the Federal Council of Churches and the now approaching World Conference on Faith and Order which really is more fundamental in that it will stress a frank consideration of the points of difference in faith and practice which have given rise to and maintained the schisms in the universal church of the Christ. Time has been given for many communions to make searching self examinations and consider whether or not their several so-called "distinctive" creeds and practices are of such import as to impede a world-wide cooperation.

At this juncture, let two points be emphasized: First, that this conference of 1927 has gripped the active interest of statesmen and publicists of our country at large, as well as the no less able statesmen of the church; and second, that it is to be held in Switzerland, the most international in spirit of all lands of the earth, at Lausanne about an hour by train from Geneva, the home of the League of Nations and its secretariat. It is easily conceivable that the time of its sitting will be fixed with some reference to the annual meeting of the league, for which leading political statesmen of the world will gather.

The Devotional Life

Let Your Light Shine

"If the Lord lights our candle, shall we not hold out our little candlestick to other guests in the Great House before we all go up to bed?"—Henry van Dyke.

By DANIEL G. STEVENS

A New Heart for the New Year

There is no new thing under the sun.—Ecclesiastes 1:9.

He that sitteth on the throne said, "Behold I make all things new."—Revelation 21:5.

FROM the point of view of material circumstances there is nothing new under the sun. There is not even a New Year; there is only another year.

Our forefathers traveled by coach, or on horseback, on foot and by sailing ship. We travel by express trains, floating palaces, automobiles and flying-machines. But these are only new methods of doing the same old thing. Progress in material efficiency, increase of speed, implies nothing new in the elemental circumstances of life.

Yet John, standing on rocky Patmos, with the eternal heavens above him and the ancient ocean around him, heard him that sitteth on the throne saying, "Behold I make all things new."

How is this? Surely the meaning is plain: Christ makes all things new because he produces a change in us and in our relations to all things.

The only way to find a new heaven and a new earth is to obtain a new heart. When we become new creatures in Christ Jesus the old things are passed away; behold they are become new!

It is the folly of earthly wisdom that men limit the idea of newness to that which is novel—experienced for the first time. In truth, the familiar is also "new" if we approach it with a fresh heart.

The man who is renewed in Christ is like one returning to life from a desperate illness. To him the familiar trees and grass and sky are new—not because they are different from what they always were, but because he himself is made new by an inward transformation.

(These reflections are from "Light My Candle", by Henry Van Dyke and Tertius van Dyke, published by Fleming H. Revell.)

Inadequate Knowledge of God

If ye call on him as Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to each man's work, pass the time of your sojourning in fear: knowing that ye were redeemed, not with corruptible things . . . but with . . . the blood of Christ.—I Peter 1:17-19.

THERE are many people today whose conception of God is failing them because it is a cheap and superficial thing, lacking in depth and quality. They have been going along in the easy attitude of the careless young man who says to himself: "O well, if I get into trouble the old man will pull me out."

When trouble comes the prayer of such people to escape the consequences of their careless and sometimes evil conduct does not at all match with the purpose of God. Then they are surprised, even aggrieved and rebellious, and declare their unbelief.

And all the time the difficulty is that they have cherished an inadequate and petty conception of God.

I am not interested to try to apportion the blame for this tragic situation in which many find themselves. Undoubtedly the preachers are too much engaged with "popular topics." And equally truly are many church members avoiding serious consideration of the nature of God and the consequent duties of man.

It is well that we should realize Jesus' emphasis on the name of Father as revealing the nature of God. But it is assuredly not well that we should abuse that name by reducing it to its shoddy popular proportions.

We must turn from our stupid and unreal theories of an easy-going, good-natured God to the living God in nature, in history and in the heart of man.

I WONDER what he charged for chairs at Nazareth.

And did men try to beat him down
And boast about it in the town
"I bought it cheap for half-a-crown
From that mad Carpenter"?

And did they promise and not pay
Put it off to another day;
O did they break his heart that way
My Lord, the Carpenter?

I wonder did he have bad debts,
And did he know my fears and frets?
The Gospel writer here forgets
To tell about the Carpenter.

But that's just what I want to know
Ah! Christ in glory, here below
Men cheat and lie to one another so It's hard to be a carpenter.

—G. A. Studdert-Kennedy in his new book of verse, "More Rhymes from a Padre."

The Chimney Corner

Monsoon in the Deccan

FOR the sound of the rain on the distant hills

After the summer's drought,
For the tinkle of little rippling rills
Into the well's wide mouth,
We thank thee, Lord.

For the chill in the air as the dark draws on,

For the restful night and the cool, damp
dawn,

For the call of the birds, they've been gone so long,
We render thee thanks, O Lord.

For the magic of green on shrub and tree,

Budding forth over night,
For the promise of grass that is to be,
Decked with flowers bright,
We thank thee, Lord.

Rain has come, rain has come, with rejoicing we say,

And we praise where we knelt to pray.

—In Dnyanodaya.

Radiant Happiness

MOST of the lasting happiness which I have observed in this world is a reflected happiness. It is more often derived from a gift conferred than earned by any self-considering endeavor. I need hardly say that those happy folk who by the fragrance of their own lives dispel the musty humors and the sullen, melancholy broodings of the world, themselves lead happy lives. It is their own inward happiness that radiates about them as if it were the rising luster of a star. They are the givers, and therefore rightly are also the partakers of the joy. They are welcome everywhere and when they leave us we feel as if a cloud had drifted suddenly over the disk of the sun. And we forget too easily that they also must have shared earth's troubles and learned to overcome. It was of one of them that Lowell wrote:

Blessing she is, God made her so,
And deeds of week-day kindness
Fall from her noiseless as the snow.
Nor hath she ever chanced to know
That aught were easier than to bless.

We cannot be wrong in arguing from this contagious power of geniality that joy is a form of duty. We deprive the world of what is due to it by our sullen discontents. Joy is a gift that waits on our desire. We owe it to God and to our neighbor. We can make a good showing of the joy we have ourselves obtained by faith and overcoming. So we may help to dissipate the miasma of unfaith and set a fashion of genial smiling.

—From Saturday Night Thoughts, Boston Transcript.

Bridging Two Thousand Years

FOR over 1900 years the very situation of such an important Bible city as Capernaum has been in dispute. Until recently no one knew for certain where the city which Jesus made his home after the men of Nazareth rejected him really stood. Two sites have been pointed out—Minyeh, which lies about half-way up the western shore of the Sea of Galilee, and Tell Hum, near its northern end. At the former place there is a mass of ruins covering a space of several acres. At Tell Hum there are similar ruins nearly half a mile long and over a quarter of a mile wide. Authorities were divided as to which of these two places was Capernaum.

As a result of excavations carried out by the late Dr. Pere Orfali, archaeologists are agreed that Tell Hum is the site of ancient Capernaum. Doctor Orfali was rector of the Franciscan School of Archaeological Research and president of the Palestine Oriental Society. He not only laid bare a large portion of the ruins at Tell Hum but made an exhaustive study of the site. He found the remains of a first century building in the Roman-Corinthian style, which is now accepted by many scholars as the synagogue built by the centurion of the Gospels and the one in which Christ preached. The position of the stones would indicate that the synagogue was destroyed by an earthquake.

It was largely composed of white limestone, resembling marble, and is about seventy-five feet long and fifty-four feet wide, the outer walls being built of large blocks of stone. On the south side, facing the lake, it had three entrances. The bases of the columns are still in contact, though the pillars have fallen. The latter were adorned with beautiful capitals, and the lintels were profusely ornamented. Among the ruins was discovered a large block of stone with a picture of manna carved on its face. Possibly this was the very picture that led Jesus to utter the words, "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness." On another stone there is a quaint design in relief of what is believed to be a representation of the Ark of the Covenant, while other distinctly Jewish emblems include a seven-branched candlestick, grapes and pomegranates. None of the stones which the synagogue was built with appear to have been removed, and it has now been decided to reconstruct it as originally stood. Doctor Orfali, in fact, undertook to carry out this task, but sudden death delayed the work. It has now been resumed.

The Great Procession

BY HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD

DID you ever happen to think, when dark

Lights up the lamps outside the pane,
And you look through the glass on that wonderland

Where the witches are making their tea in the rain,

Of the great procession that says its prayers

All the world over, and climbs the stairs,
And goes to a wonderland of dreams,
Where nothing at all is just what it seems?

All the world over at eight o'clock,
Sad and sorrowful, glad and gay,
These with their eyes as bright as dawn,
Those almost asleep on the way,
This one capering, that one cross,
Plaited tresses, or curling floss,
Slowly the long procession streams
Up to the wonderland of dreams.

Far in the islands of the sea
The great procession takes up its way,
Where, throwing their faded flower wreaths down,

Little savages tire of their play;
Though they have no stairs to climb at all,

And go to sleep wherever they fall,
By the sea's soft song and the stars' soft gleams,

They are off to the wonderland of dreams.

Ears that Hear Not

OUT of 130,000 school children examined in Chicago this year 3000 deaf in varying degrees is the report of Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, health commissioner for the city of Chicago. According to specialists, three million of the twenty-one million school children in the United States are similarly afflicted.

"The sense of hearing is one of the most important channels of communication with the outer world, especially in account of its relation to language. It also has much to do with mental development; for this reason loss of hearing is recognized as an important cause of mental retardation. It prevents a child's advancement in his studies," says Doctor Bundesen.

"Deafness is a crippling defect, a mental misfortune. Seventy-five per cent of deafness is almost wholly preventable, especially in childhood.

"Diseased and enlarged tonsils, swollen adenoids, infections of the nose, such as colds, scarlet fever and measles, are largely responsible for ear troubles. Early attention to nose and throat defects in children and the prevention of communicable diseases save most of our youngsters from the serious handicap of deafness."

BOYS and Girls

Your Christmas Gift to the Orient

Dear Boys and Girls,

The mail is lots of fun for me these days, owing to the way in which you are responding to my appeal for stamps for the bookless children of the Orient, as our Baptist Christmas present to them this year—a book, translated! In case you have not read of our plan, read THE BAPTIST for Nov. 13, 20, 27 and for Dec. 4, 11; it would be a shame if any of you were left out of any plan so absolutely right!

Acknowledgment is made of stamps and checks from the following:

Cairo Sunday school, Cairo, Neb....	$0.92
Luella Jackson, De Kalb, Ill.....	.10
A Friend, Atchison, Kan.....	.20
Junior Dep't, First church, Franklin, Ind.....	1.00
Helen Smith, Adams Basin, N. Y....	2.00
A Friend, La Jolla, Calif.....	.30
Margaret Louise Whiteaker, Maysville, Miss.	1.00
Junior Dep't, United church, Lewistown, Me.	1.00
Friend, New York, N. Y.....	.97
Primary department, Salina Sunday school, Salina, Kan.....	2.60
Wilbur Schweizerhof, Salina, Kan.40
Maurice Campbell (three years old!) Salina, Kan.25
Collected by Martha West and Harriet Callihan of Cambridge, Ohio.	9.00
Harry Howard Kruener, Flushing N. Y.10
Viola Catherine Kruener, Flushing, N. Y.10
Miss Lily Bryant, Flushing, N. Y....	.10
Miriam & Gladys Lockhart, Wheeling, W. Va.	1.00
George Stothers, Hilton, N. Y.....	.12
A Friend, Lansing, Mich.....	.26
Mrs. H. M. Cole, Sedgwick, Me....	.22
Elizabeth Hobart, Oakland, Calif....	.18
Betty Gillespie, Anoka, Minn.....	.02
Roberta Gillespie, Anoka, Minn....	.02
Virginia Gillespie, Anoka, Minn....	.02
Delbert Gillespie, Anoka, Minn....	.02
Miss Bertha Richardson, Brooklyn N. Y.	1.00
Lois Johnson, Volga, S. D.....	.20
A Friend, Chicago, Ill.....	1.00
Primary Class, Portageville church, Portageville, N. Y.....	.30
Miss R. L. Van Doren, Clarksville Ohio	1.04
A Friend, Brockport, N. Y.....	.20
Total	$25.74
Acknowledged, Nov. 24.....	62.52
Total to date.....	$88.26

You will be interested in some of the letters received with the stamps and the checks:

"We are a family of grown-up boys and girls but as I am much interested

The Explorers' Club

CONDUCTED BY MARGARET T. APPELEGARTH

in children, especially little girls, I am sending you a check for $1 and trust it may help some children to get a book. I am also enclosing four cents for my brother."

Rev. Alonzo R. Stark, pastor of the First church of Cambridge, Ohio, should be proud of at least two members of his congregation! One expects them to grow up into regular "pillars" of that church, for consider the energy it takes to collect from so many different persons. May their tribe increase! Mr. Stark says: "I am enclosing a check for $9 to apply on the work of translating a story for the foreign children. The stamp money was collected by two young girls, both members of the church. With best wishes for your success in such a fine work—"

From the Portageville church (N. Y.) primary class comes the following, signed by the treasurer, Master John Burgie: "We are sending you fifteen two-cent stamps to help you have a book translated for the boys and girls of some other country. We like to read books and we want other boys and girls to have them too."

"I am sending you ten two-cent stamps. Although you say nothing is too small, this amount seems little when one thinks of the money it costs for the books. However, you said that you wanted stamps by Christmas as a special present and I am sending them and wish there were many times more."—Lois Johnson.

"If two and two makes twenty-two, here goes—the stamps! Please do what you wish with them."

"Last Sunday the teachers and scholars of the primary department of the Salina Sunday school had a stamp shower for the printing of books for foreign children. Am sending you a draft for $3; $2.60 from the children and teachers, and forty cents from Wilbur Schweizerhof who is in the junior department."

"Am sending twenty-five cents from Maurice Campbell, three years old, from the Salina cradle roll. He failed to get his offering in last Sunday when we had a stamp shower in the primary."

"One dollar, sent to buy stamps as per THE BAPTIST; sent for the junior department of the church school, United Baptist church, Lewiston, Me. With Send stamps, checks or money order for translating a story book as your Christmas gift to the bookless children of the Orient to Miss Margaret Applegarth, 14 Arnold Park, Rochester, N. Y.

many good wishes for the success of the book."

"I am sending $2 which I hope will help you in your shower of postage stamps. I am much interested in it and hope to send more later."—Helen Smith, Adams Basin, N. Y.

"Enclosed please find $1 from the junior department of our Sunday school (First church, Franklin, Ind.) for your stamp shower. May it be a great success and blessing."

"Ten drops for the shower, with prayer for your work."

"I am sending a few stamps. They are not as many as I would like to send, but I am hoping that many others will send what they can. I am interested in this move, for some day I want to go and teach these boys and girls to read the book we are going to translate for them."—Luella Jackson, De Kalb, Ill.

"Enclosed you will find ninety-two cents in stamps for your book fund. This has been given by boys and girls, mothers and fathers, of the Cairo Sunday school (Cairo, Neb.). May God bless your plan and a wonderful blessing to yourself for this far-reaching service."—Mertie Lowry.

You must acknowledge that these are all enthusiastic letters, and it is inspiring to know that our boys and girls are responding. But if you will glance over the list of acknowledgements, you will see a curious oversight. The western states, and the middle western states have done very well, and New York state has honorable mention, and Maine. But where are all the Baptist boys and girls who live in Pennsylvania, in New Jersey, in Massachusetts, in Connecticut? Surely you aren't going to let Kansas, South Dakota, West Virginia, Minnesota, California and Nebraska think the Baptist boys and girls of the East are sound asleep, or among those who meant well, but who put it off till tomorrow.

For tomorrow, my dears, will be Christmas! It will come much sooner than you think. And all the bookless children in the Orient will still be bookless unless some of you share in this Baptist Christmas gift to these unknown friends. Already your names are mentioned in next year's junior study book, called "Please Stand By," in chapter 5, telling how in December, 1926, the Baptist boys and girls gave enough money to get one book translated for the bookless. So won't you please stand by this week?

Switzerland has 3,880,000 people. Of these 57.5 per cent are Protestants and 39.9 per cent Roman Catholics. According to the United Presbyterian, census reports show rapid increase of Protestants and decline of Catholics.

Young People and the Kingdom

CONDUCTED BY EDWIN PHELPS, GENERAL SECRETARY, B. Y. P. U. OF A.

"Meeting Helps" on Devotional Topic for January 9

Christ the Way of Eternal Life.

(Note: These helps are built around the material given in "Young People's Leader," the official magazine "for all Baptist young people." Subscriptions to the "Leader" may be made through the B. Y. P. U. of A. at $1 per year.)

This evening's topic lends itself acceptably to a devotional type of meeting. Consequently a regular worship service would be appropriate. If possible, mimeographed, typewritten, hectographed or printed programs of the service should be used. In order not to break into the atmosphere of the meeting, announcement could appear on the back of the program. If no written program is used, the announcements could be on slips of paper handed out to those present. If a society does not have facilities for reproducing copies, the materials may be sent to some nearby city where the work will be done at small cost.

The following is a suggested service of worship. This may be changed or adapted to meet your needs.

1. Piano or violin prelude: "Day Is Dying in the West." At the end of one verse, the leader should read impressively John 1:1-5, timing it so that it is finished at the end of the playing of the verse. Every one immediately joins in the singing of the chorus.

2. One or two short prayers, persons previously prepared.

3. Hymn: "This Is My Father's World," every one singing.

4. Scripture reading: John 13:31-35. (This should be read over several times before the meeting so that the reader will be familiar with it.)

5. Hymn: "There's a Wideness in God's Mercy," every one singing; or, special selection by quartet: "The King of Love My Shepherd Is."

6. Topic presentation:

a. Talk on the aim of the Gospel of John, as presented in Leader.

b. Hymn (3 verses): "Jesus calls Us," every one singing.

c. Talk on the setting and "appreciation" of the gospel, as presented in Leader.

d. Volunteer quotations of favorite passages in the Gospel of John (announcement should be made at least the morning before this is presented that the favorite passages from John will be called for); or several persons might present the thoughts from "Quiet Talks With God Each Day" as given in Leader.

e. Talk on the application we should make of the Gospel of John in our lives, bringing in as one application the reading of the "Log of the World Tour" for January 9.

7. Hymn: "O Love that Wilt not Let Me Go."

8. Benediction, preferably by pastor: John 14:27.

It Pays

"Advertising will ruin your business," said the signboard which stood accusingly alongside the railroad.

"Ruin it?" I thought, "and after all that has been said for advertising and its value." Then I looked again. "If it is all done by your competitor," finished the board. That was an entirely different matter—food for thought.

"Your business"—what is it? Why, the young people's society, of course. And it will be ruined by advertising if your competitor does all the advertising. "Your competitor" means other young people's interests, amusements and so on. Are they advertising and are you getting along without it? Then "advertising will ruin your business."

It is needless to argue for the value of advertising, yet we cannot keep from quoting a poem (as WCOY would say, "The office boy will now recite for us"): The fish it never cackles 'bout Its million eggs or so.

The hen is quite a different bird, One egg—and hear her crow.

The fish we spurn, but crown the hen, Which leads me to surmise, Don't hide your light, just blow your horn;

It pays to advertise.

"How can we advertise our society?"

"Where can we advertise our society?"

"What shall we advertise about it?"

These and hundreds of other questions immediately rush to your minds, if not to your lips. These are problems, and we want to offer a solution. First, we'll give you a little history.

Last year the B. Y. P. U. of A. held a publicity contest. All Baptist young people's societies in the country were eligible. Samples of advertising were submitted, and at the end of the contest a group of competent judges awarded prizes. The first prize, a silver loving cup, was awarded to the B. Y. P. U. of First church, Rock Island, Ill., to be kept until won by another society. The second prize, the banner pictured on this page, was awarded to the B. Y. P. U. of First church, Lansing, Mich. The third prize was a set of books, awarded to the B. Y. P. U. of Bronson, Kan. A fourth prize, not originally provided, was awarded to the B. Y. P. U. of Valleyford, Wash., for meritorious work. So much for history.

This year there is to be another publicity contest, Jan. 15—Apr. 30, 1927. All societies are eligible. A neat booklet of materials and suggestions for advertising has been prepared and is ready for all who want to enter this contest. The first of each of the next three months additional suggestions will be sent to all who thus enter the contest.

The rules are designed to give the small or financially weak society the same chance as the large or financially strong society. No special talent is needed except the talent for neatness.

For a copy of the rules and materials, send at once to the Baptist Young People's Union of America, 2328 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. Just a few more days are left before admission to the contest is closed.

December 26 Topic
THE HEART OF CHRISTMAS

January 2 Topic
CHURCHES ON WHEELS
For a full treatment of these topics
see Young People's Leader.

Churches at Work

If your church has developed interesting and effective methods of carrying on its work, we shall be glad to give an opportunity of telling other churches about them through the medium of this page. Material should be addressed to the Board of Missionary Cooperation, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City

MORE WORLD

TOUR SUGGESTIONS

Many pastors have suggested novel ways in which to promote the World Tour. Among the best of these are: like every Sunday sermon in January travelogue, a plan which has been adopted by many. Have a church supper and make it a point to book every person who attends. Establish an honor roll in the states for all churches booked at least 85 per cent of their families for the tour. Print a facsimile of the calendar on the back of the church calendar to enable those not reached by the tour committee to enroll. Make use of circulars now available for use in connection with the World Tour. For the conclusion of the tour, home-coming parties which can be made both amusing and impressive, will from all accounts be highly popular. One enthusiastic Baptist asks for a supply of hotel labels from all countries mentioned in the Log that he may arrive with his baggage decorated in true tourist style. It is one request which could not be made for unfortunately the denomination's Log does not include hotel labels. However, old labels, if you have such specimens, would add an interesting touch.

TO HEAR

BAPTIST LEADERS

Baptists in fifteen of the principal cities in the eastern half of the convention territory will have an opportunity to hear during January two of the best known Northern Baptist leaders, Dr. Edwin Whitcomb Brougher, president of the Northern Convention and Dr. W. H. Bowler, chief administrative officer of the Board of Missionary Cooperation. Dr. Bowler will present the denominational plans and Doctor Brougher will give an address with a characteristic title, "Do Your Own Business." Numerous religious centers between Chicago and the Atlantic coast were included in a trip made by the two leaders in November, and were everywhere given an enthusiastic reception.

A TEST ON

THE TOUR

The department of missionary education of the Baptist Board of Education has prepared "The Test of the Tour" to be used in connection with the World Tour during January. The test is based on the Log and Elihu Norton's "Commentary on the World Tour" in the January Missions. There will be four tests and they will be found useful among such groups as World Wide Guild, Baptist Young People's Union, Baptist Christian Endeavor, Royal Ambassadors, and organized Sunday-school classes. To stimulate interest in the test a contest among two or more organizations in the church is suggested.

A RALLY

DAY EVENT

The slogan for the annual rally day of the First church of Kearney, Neb., was "Take a Dare?" Placards bearing these words were placed conspicuously in the various rooms of the church school some weeks before the day set for the rally and aroused much curiosity. The following Sunday the committee announced that these words would constitute the slogan for the rally and that every one possible was to be greeted with them. If asked to explain their significance, the reply should be made, "Come rally day and you'll find out." Buttons bearing the words, "Talk about it", were worn by all church members during the week preceding the event. A systematic visitation campaign to every home in any way connected with the church was made. The local press accorded space in featuring this unique idea. The program opened with a bugle call from the front steps of the church building, followed by a processional of the whole school, with banners and class colors flying, marching in double column down the aisles of the auditorium, a national flag and a Christian flag leading the columns, and all singing, "Onward Christian Soldiers." The program was built around the story of Daniel, the climax coming when a group of boys dramatized a portion of the story and a group of girls followed immediately, bearing a large placard, "Dare to be a Daniel", and sang the old hymn of that title. The meaning of the mysterious slogan was at once manifest, as the impression left was that the one who will "take a dare" must be characterized by the Daniel spirit, courage for the right, loyalty to duty and devotion to truth. Some results were an awakening of new interest, added prestige in the community, the value of, and incentive for, originality in a program, a Bible truth presented in an impressive way and the largest attendance the school had ever had, surpassing by one-half the total local church membership.

GOOD REPORTS

Rev. Robert L. Kelly, field worker for the Board of Missionary Cooperation, cites four striking examples of the benefits derived from the every-member plan. Analysis of results of the canvass at the Fifth Avenue church, Huntington, W. Va., Dr. M. L. Wood, pastor, shows a large increase in funds received this year over amounts received last year. The increase for missions was $3,587.96; for current expenses, $4,146.68. The number giving to missions was increased by 201 subscribers and the number giving to current expenses by 185. Of those giving to missions, there were eighty-four increased pledges.

The Lake Harriet church, Minneapolis, Minn., Dr. Earle V. Pierce, pastor, reports that the number of subscribers for missions increased from twenty-five to 106; that $900 more was subscribed for current expenses than the objective and that the number of subscribers for current expenses increased from forty to 140.

St. Albans church, (W. Va.) Mr. Meyers, pastor, reports sixty-nine more bona fide new subscribers of record than last year as a direct result of an every-member canvass.

Rev. D. B. Lloyd, Sisterville church, (W. Va.), reports $826 more subscribed this year than last. The leaders of the church are encouraged and affairs are in better shape than they have been for ten years. "The every-member canvass pays a big dividend" writes Mr. Lloyd.

CREDIT FOR

READING LOG

It has been announced that the World Tour will be included in the national missionary reading contest with the following authorized credits:

Five points will be allowed each person who reads or hears the reading of the Log daily.

Since the January issue of Missions includes not only the Log but also Elihu Norton's "Commentary," those who follow both of these will be allowed ten points if read daily. For the reading of additional material in January Missions, five points may be credited.

Rev. F. B. Palmer, executive secretary for the Colorado State Convention, is recovering from a dangerous operation for appendicitis. The trouble has been of long standing and his friends will rejoice that he is on the way to perfect health.

Among Ourselves

Letter from Shanghai, China

By GORDON POTEAT

AMERICAN newspapers gave accounts of the fight between a British naval force and Chinese soldiers at the city of Wanh sien, far up on the Yangste river in the western province of Szechuen. This incident is considered by many to be more serious than the shooting in the streets of Shanghai in May, 1925. The May 30 incident was an affair of the police who used force to quell a mob. Those who fired were Chinese and Indian policemen under the direction of a British officer. But the affair at Wanh sien brought into action military forces of China and Great Britain and involved casualties on both sides, the Chinese losses including a large number of civilians, how many no one seems to know. The British admit that about 150 civilians were killed.

It is not my purpose in this article to try to balance the reports from different sources, to pass judgment or to place blame. I seek rather to report on the effect of this incident on the minds of certain Chinese and others whose expressions I have heard. I am interested primarily in the effect which such an affair has upon international relationships and especially upon the good-will which is the only foundation for the security of missionary work. Experience in the great war should have taught us that after such an incident occurs adjudication of the blame attached to either side does little to allay the storm of passion which bursts forth.

Protest

"Are we not human beings?" asks a Chinese student, "Shall British guns be turned on one of our cities and we not protest? Shall the British treat us like children, and after such an affair give us a bit of candy and tell us to stop our crying? Do they think they can make us forget like that? After all, there is no use arguing with them any more than with a tiger who has his mouth open to devour you. The only thing the tiger understands is superior force, and that is all the British understand. We must have student military training and prepare to meet their force with superior force."

"We should not discuss this question passionately, but from the standpoint of international law," declares a Chinese editor of the commercial press. "We should seek to investigate the causes which give rise to such a situation and do our best to remove those causes so that such things shall not occur in the future. We know that there are two kinds of rivers—national and international. Where a river passes through several countries, as the Rhine, agreements are made between the several countries which permit the shipping of the different countries to use those rivers freely. Where a river is wholly within a given nation shipping on that river is naturally confined to vessels of that nation, as for example, the Mississippi river. Due to certain treaties formulated some years ago, our Chinese rivers have been opened to international traffic. In order to protect that traffic, the foreign nations have detailed gunboat patrols on our rivers. The treaty is not clear on this right to police the rivers, as it states that foreign naval powers have the right to cooperate with the Chinese government in the suppression of pirates. But at any rate the powers have construed it in such a way as to give them the right to have gunboats on our rivers. If the foreign gunboats were not on our rivers the Wanh sien affair could not have occurred. I am a man of peace. I do not think we should war over this matter if we can change the treaties so that these gunboats are barred from our rivers. I think that the foreign powers are stupid to hold to this right in this day when the psychology of the Chinese has changed so completely. Formerly the Chinese were indifferent to the abrogation of their national rights. Not so now. To use force as the British used it at Wanh sien will not help the British to maintain their trade; such a policy will eventually eliminate their trade. They must learn that trade and communication between nations must be founded on good-will and mutual satisfaction."

The Angels Rejoice

By MRS. J. H. CHAPMAN

Weary and sad I have pled today
With the souls of men in the world's dark way;

I stood in the path where sin's hot breath

Whispers the wooing that leads to death,
Where young life, beautiful, strong and gay,

Followed in rapture the tempter's way.

They listened not—though my best was given,

My heart cried out for the rest of heaven,
My steps were faltering. Shall I plead
When few so few my cry will heed?

Then I caught the sound of an angel's song,

A burst of rapture both loud and long.
The joy of heaven was echoed here.

I ceased my murmur in holy fear.
Had a host repented? Nay, only one,
Yet the Master whispered to me, "Well done!"

"The British naval men were careful even in the excitement of a bloody battle to keep as far as possible from injuring the civil population," declares a British newspaper correspondent. "This is important evidence to show the humanity of the sailors and that they carried on the battle in a spirit that was not un-Christian. Further this eyewitness estimates that only 150 civilians were killed. . . . The only alternative (after attempts to negotiate had failed) was for the British to act on the spot, and they did it in the only way possible—by the use of force. Reason had failed. The Chinese militarists understand only force; they appealed to that in the forceful seizure of the ships and they had to surrender them on the terms they chose and by the only means they understand. . . . No people can be accused of aggression or imperialism when they seek to support and defend their nationals in any part of the world. The consensus of the opinion of papers of the United States on the matter is overwhelmingly in favor of the British action. The American verdict is that the British could do nothing else."

The Legal Aspect

A Christian Chinese college professor discusses the legal aspects of the affair: "This incident could not have occurred in a western country, America for example, for coastal and river shipping are monopolized by the country for itself. Gunboats of foreign nations do not patrol the waters of those countries.

"The treaty on which the foreign powers base their justification of this patrol in the Yangste river reads as follows: (British ships of war coming for no hostile purpose, or being in the pursuit of pirates, shall be at liberty to visit all ports within the dominions of the emperor of China, and shall receive every facility for the purchase of provisions, procuring water, and, if occasion require, for the making of repairs. The commanders of such ships shall hold intercourse with the Chinese authorities on terms of equality and courtesy. In consideration of the inquiry sustained by native and foreign commerce from the prevalence of piracy in the seas of China, the high contracting parties agree to concert measures for its suppression).*

"According to the Chinese version of the affair," he continues, "the trouble arose from the capsizing of a junk which General Yang Sen claimed was the fault of the British mercantile steamer. In open ports this matter would be duly investigated by the harbor master, an official of the Chinese government. Wan Hsien has no harbor master. Yang Sen tried to detain this vessel, but the boat got away. In reprisal he seized two other British boats belonging to the same company when they came into port. The British newspapers assert that this was an act of piracy on the part of General Yang Sen, who is one of the lieutenants of Gen. Wu Pei Fu, in order to justify this naval action under the treaty. But the treaty says that the contracting parties shall act in concert, and never intended that the British should act alone and against the Chinese authorities. If Yang Sen is a pirate, then Wu Pei Fu, his superior, is an arch pirate. Why had the British newspapers formerly supported Wu Pei Fu so heartily if he is a pirate? While the matter was under diplomatic negotiation in Peking the naval authorities of Britain took independent action.

*This is from the treaty of Tientsin dated 1860 negotiated between Queen Victoria and the Emperor of China.

"This shows that the treaties must be revised to eliminate these foreign gun-boats from our rivers. Four methods of dealing with the treaties have been advocated: (1) Abrogate the treaties. But this is not a solution of our trouble. It would render the international situation more acute and perhaps precipitate a clash. (2) Follow out the resolutions of the Washington conference. But this is not now satisfactory to the Chinese, nor conditions have changed since the Washington conference. (3) Declare the treaties null and void at the time of their expiration when they come up for renewal. This has been done with the Belgian treaty. (4) Negotiate with individual powers for revision instead of with the powers as a group."

He concludes: "I believe that the solution of our difficulties will not come through making demands on the British, or by asking for indemnities, or demanding a salute to the Chinese flag. The only fundamental solution is a revision of treaties which will make it impossible for such conflicts to occur in the interior of China."

Two Leaders Tour the West

THE recent tour of Dr. James Whitcomb Brougher, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, and Dr. W. H. Bowler, executive secretary of the Board of Missionary Cooperation, was highly successful from the standpoint of interest manifested in the cities they visited. In some cases the two denominational leaders appeared together and on other occasions addressed separate meetings on the same day. They met on the Pacific coast and traveled eastward to Chicago. The first places where they appeared were Medford and Portland, Ore., with a good attendance in both places. At McMinnville, Nov. 10, Doctor Bowler spoke to the students of Linfield college, with the result that the entire student body enrolled for the Northern Baptist World Tour. In Spokane the Baptists of the city arranged a luncheon at the Davenport restaurant and in this noonday affair, attended by 250 people, Doctor Brougher and Doctor Bowler were received with enthusiasm. At night a meeting that packed Grace church was held. Butte, Mont., the travelers were again entertained at a luncheon which brought together many Baptists of the city and in the evening a satisfactory meeting was held in the First church.

In Minneapolis an afternoon mass meeting was held in Calvary church, with a full attendance in spite of rain. On the evening of the same day, Nov. 14, Doctor Brougher spoke in the First church, St. Paul, and Doctor Bowler in one of the Minneapolis churches. From the Twin Cities Doctor Brougher went to Chicago to address the pastors' conference, while Doctor Bowler remained to speak to the pastors of Minneapolis and St. Paul. He also gave an address at Bethel institute, where the students followed the example of Linfield college and pledged unanimous participation in the World Tour. The two leaders met again in Des Moines, where Doctor Brougher gave a daytime address at Des Moines university and at night spoke in the First church. Doctor Bowler gave his attention that day to World Tour plans for the state of Iowa.

From Des Moines Doctor Brougher and Doctor Bowler went to Chicago where an afternoon conference with a state group was held to discuss the World Tour. An evening meeting was held in Immanuel church, with a good attendance. The next day was devoted to a meeting of the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention. Omaha was the next city visited and the program there included a luncheon at the Elk's club, attended by many business and professional men, and an afternoon conference and a fine mass meeting at night. This was on a Friday and from Omaha Doctor Bowler returned to New York. The following Sunday Doctor Brougher spent in Colorado Springs and on Monday morning he went to Denver to be greeted by the Baptists of that city. From Denver he went to San Diego to speak to the B. Y. P. U. In all of his addresses in this series the emphasis was on evangelism.

Beginning Jan. 14 at Detroit, Doctor Brougher and Doctor Bowler will again take the field together for a tour covering the states between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic.

Henry Clarke—A Tribute

By ROBERT A. ASHWORTH

DR. Henry Clarke, who passed away early in November, will long be remembered for the notable service that he rendered during thirty-one years in the pastorate. He served only three churches since leaving the Rochester seminary in 1891: ten years in Stonington, Conn., ten years in Bristol, Conn., and over eleven years in Racine, Wis.—in itself a remarkable record. Four years ago he retired from the active pastorate, making his home with his daughter, Louise, whose husband, Herbert W. Hansen, is pastor of the Baptist church in Benton Harbor, Mich. He left an impression upon each of his fields of service that will not fade.

Henry Clarke was a good friend for any man to have, as multitudes discovered, gentle, self-effacing, witty and full of fun, with the soul of a poet and the conscience of a prophet. He stands out in my mind as within the circle of the truest Christians and the most useful ministers of Jesus Christ that it has been my privilege to know, the sort of man and minister upon whom the progress of the kingdom of God ultimately rests. Seldom in the limelight, never seeking publicity, he pursued his even way consistently year by year and sought his reward in lives transformed and brightened, youth inspired and trained for Christian service, and churches edified in the scripture sense and their foundations deepened and strengthened. The secret of his success is that he loved people, young and old, and all kinds. Naturally he won their love in return. I write this as the tribute of a sincere personal affection.

Belinda and the State Board

DEAR Ann,

You will not wonder that I have left your letter so long unanswered when I tell you that we have moved. You know that is a long-drawn-out operation, especially when you move from a "whole house" where you have lived a long time to an apartment where Ezra says "there isn't room to swing a cat in" and adds, "The word should be spelled 'apartment' for little people and not full grown men."

I want to tell you about the missionary meeting in our Philadelphia College club house. It was really a state board meeting—not the stiff, formal board, but a cushion-y board that wouldn't have wearied you if you had sat on it all day.

Do you remember Mrs. O'Harra? She was at the bottom of it. She is always planning something nice for somebody. You know she is the one who always asks after your Moses. Ezra says that's one reason why he likes her, because "she has always inquired after the husbands of the missionary women and goodness knows they don't get much attention these days." But that isn't the only reason. When I first came, a stranger to Philadelphia, her home was the first to receive the lonely woman, and her mother (for years president of the state society), was mother, sister, counsellor and friend until she went to her well-earned rest. Ezra has never forgotten that. Mrs. O'Harra's good works are known all the way from her church, the old First, through the city, state and country.

She planned this gathering to be combined with our state board, over which Mrs. Hodgins presides so efficiently, to welcome Mrs. Joseph Wilds, new president of the Atlantic district. I wish you had heard the good reports that show Pennsylvania is "on the job" and especially that of Mrs. Newcomb, who gave us such a vivid account of the state convention that those of us who couldn't go felt we had attended. We have some fine secretaries and chairmen, and our busy "father-director," Doctor Russell, of the board of promotion usually finds time to drop in to give our enthusiasm a shove forward. Altogether we feel that this board is a worthy successor of the woman's foreign board, which began nearly forty years ago to work up missionary interest among Pennsylvania Baptist women and did it too, as many a church, many a pastor and many a woman can testify.

They had not some handicaps we have now. The women went ahead without saying "Ah, yes" or "no" to the brethren and they "got there."

Ezra has come in and, peeking over my shoulder, calls out, "Back to the woods, Belinda. You're getting off the track"; and I guess I am.

After we had heard the reports and business, and Mrs. Wilds had been praised and congratulated and had given us a talk on "Stewardship"—not only of time and money and influence, but of "smiles" if thereby a woman can be won—what do you think we did? You remember Harriet Newell Jones who used to make us all want to do as she said. Well, we made her honorary secretary for life in appreciation of her twenty-seven years as general secretary of Pennsylvania during which she worked, traveled, talked and wrote at least eighteen hours out of every twenty-four. How she did it and still keeps so "up and coming" is more than I can tell.

When we sat down to luncheon it was a love-feast as well. Mrs. Wilds divided honors with Mrs. Jones. When Mrs. Hodgins called upon every woman for a little speech each poured her appreciative words on the two surprised and modest women. And, of course, when it came their turn to speak they could do no less than to praise each other. Mrs. O'Harra came in for her share for arranging the luncheon. If you had been there, Ann, you would have said, "Behold how these missionary women love one another." We had a good time and are bound to work harder than ever to help bring in the Master's kingdom.

I almost forgot to say that we are all going to take the trip around the world in January, and are going to take a lot of others with us. I shall pin Ezra right down to watch the daily Log, and I hope you'll see that Moses is ready to start with the rest. I know you'll be ready.

I must stop now. I am enclosing the rally song written by Harriet Newell Jones, which was sung with enthusiasm at the state convention. It can be used at your meeting by changing the word "Pennsylvania" to the name of your state or city.

Don't think you will be excused from your usual New Year's visit because we are in a small apartment.

As ever,
Belinda.

Mrs. Joseph S. Adams

MRS. Joseph S. Adams, known to all the missionaries of Central and Eastern China as "Mother Adams," died at her home in Kuling, Central China, on Nov. 26, 1926. She was born in London, England, Dec. 7, 1856. Forty-nine years were given to foreign missionary service.

Miss Eleanor S. Tylar was engaged to Rev. Joseph S. Adams when he set out from England for Burma in 1875. After two years of study in the Mildmay Missionary college, London, she sailed for Rangoon to be married, Sept. 21, 1877. The young couple worked for the newly organized China Inland mission at Bhamo, near the Chinese border, and later in East China. In 1883 they became representatives of the American Baptist Missionary Union and settled at Kihwa as the first resident missionaries at that station. Loneliness, danger of riots and warfare, epidemics, fires and other discouragements had to be met as they did their work and cared for their growing family; but when they went home for their first furlough in 1892 they left behind them a strong church and a well-equipped station.

In 1893 Mr. Adams was designated to open a new mission in Central China. This meant the difficulties of pioneer work with no equipment and no helpers to start with; but before his death in 1912 he had seen the station become a thriving one, and the compound outside the east gate of Hanyang had become a center of successful evangelistic work.

Mrs. Adams continued to live and work in China after her husband's death, with the exception of two years in America given to student evangelistic work in connection with the Buchman evangelistic and personal work campaigns. In China also she assisted the Buchman party in its work among missionaries and foreign residents in China, Korea and Japan. Her experiences made her a special source of help and inspiration to missionary wives and mothers. She was the mother of nine children, eight of whom are living; five have seen active missionary service.

The grave of Mr. Adams is on the hill outside Hanyang city wall beside the Yangste river. Mrs. Adams had hoped to be buried there, but when she realized that she could never leave Kuling, her summer home, it became her will that her grave be made nearby on the hills near Kiukiang, also on the Yangste. Though she had to be separated from her children for many years at a time and could not be present at their college commencements or their weddings, Mrs. Adams wrote once to one of her sons: "The compensations of missionary work for this wonderful people far outweigh all sacrifices."

North Pacific Coast Letter

BY LEONARD W. RILEY

Doctor J. F. Watson Honored

BAPTISTS of West Washington and the Pacific coast are delighted with the honor that has come to Dr. J. F. Watson, executive secretary of the West Washington Convention. The situation in our mission work in the Orient requires special consideration at this time, and the foreign secretary, J. H. Franklin, has asked one or two men of wisdom and judgment to accompany him on a four months' tour of foreign mission fields. He has made no mistake in his selection of Doctor Watson, whom he will find not only an agreeable traveling companion, but helpful in determining future policies. Upon his return Doctor Watson will give an account of himself in the report and the message which he brings back with him. Friends on the Pacific coast follow him with their prayers and wish him a pleasant voyage.

Conference of Colleges

The twenty-first annual conference of the Independent College Presidents' Association of Oregon was held with Willamette university, Salem, Ore., Nov. 26-27. Nine institutions make up the membership of this organization. The voting strength consists of the president and one member of each of the faculties. The discussions centered about such subjects as: "The Small versus the Extensive Curriculum in the College," "The Problem of the Backward Student," "Schoolastic Standards and Extra-curricula Activities," and "Religious Education Subjects in a College Course." The last subject was presented by Prof. William J. Sly of Linfield college. Statistics showed that Linfield college is offering more in the line of religious education than any other one of the institutions in the conference. The meeting next year will be held with Pacific college, Newberg, and Pres. J. W. Burkett of Philomath college will preside.

News Items

Nov. 21, J. J. Ross, pastor of First church, Vancouver, B. C., was the supply at First church, Seattle. A. M. Bailey, of this church, was the preacher at First church, Vancouver. On the same day other exchanges across the United States-Canadian line were made in an effort to promote good-will between these two friendly peoples.

The budget proposed for First church, Seattle, for next year calls for $44,646. Of this amount $15,000 is for missions. The salaries of the pastor, the pastor's assistant and the pastor's secretary call for $10,600. These figures are indicative of the immense volume of business done by our churches in these modern days.

Oct. 31, First church, Colfax, Wash., celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. Secy. A. H. Bailey preached the sermon. The program centered around the history of these fifty years.

John Burris was ordained at the church at Palouse, Wash., Nov. 9. For many

As Lonely as a Tree

BY WILLIAM L. STIDGER

AS lonely as a tree
Along the tide-worn sea
My eager heart would be Without the love of thee!

As lonely as its limbs
To chant thy heavenly hymns
Through wandering, wistful winds
Along the wide world's rims!

As lonely as the quest
Of twilight in the west
My weather-wrinkled breast
Shall turn to thee for rest!

—Zion's Herald.

years he has been an evangelist of the German Methodist church. The sermon was delivered by Rev. J. L. Përinger, charge to the church by Secy. A. H. Bailey, and the charge to the candidate by Rev. Edker Burton. R. V. McCall was moderator.

Rev. T. M. Marshall has closed his work with the church of Lynden, Wash., to give his full time to the church at Laurel. The subject of Mr. Marshall's last sermon at Lynden was "Rock or Sand Foundation."

In a recent bulletin, Ernest H. Shanks, pastor of First church, Salem, presents some pointed figures. He states that the membership of the church numbers 900. About 100 are non-resident and shut-ins. About 400 more have seldom attended the services of the church for years past, which leaves 400 who attend church regularly. These 400 are the backbone of the church, contributing to the local budget and to missions. This frank analysis of the membership probably would fit many another church. James W. Kramer, evangelist, begins a meeting with this church, Jan. 9.

W. W. Bustard, formerly of Cleveland, Ohio, will hold a meeting with First church, Tacoma, Wash., C. O. Johnson, pastor, Feb. 20-Mar. 6.

Dec. 6, Baptist ministers of Seattle were the guests of Baptist pastors of Tacoma; the Seattle brethren furnished the program and the Tacoma pastors the "eats." This meeting was held in the new building of the First church, Tacoma.

Pastor William T. Turner of Eagle, Ida., was ordained to the Baptist ministry, Nov. 28. He was converted in Wilmington, Del., under the ministry of Doctor John Snape. Rev. E. E. Cox was moderator, and Mr. W. S. Chipp of Boise, clerk. The examination was conducted by Rev. A. F. Colver of Boise. The sermon was by Rev. T. A. Leger of Shoshone, charge to the candidate by Rev. E. E. Cox and the charge to the church by Mr. Robert J. McMahon. Rev. J. E. Kanarr led in the prayer of ordination. On the morning of the same day a new addition to the church at Eagle, estimated at $3000, was dedicated.

Thomas A. Leger of Shoshone, Ida., began service with First church, Dayton, Wash., Dec. 12. C. S. Treadwell of San Jacinto, Calif., has accepted a call to Kettle Falls and Pleasant Valley in the Eastern Washington Convention field. Both Mr. Leger and Mr. Treadwell have held former pastorates in this field. W. E. Monbeck, pastor at Pullman, Wash., since Nov. 27, has been assisted on a special meeting by Pastor J. Newton Garst of the First church, Spokane.

H. W. Vodra, religious education director of the East Washington Convention recently underwent a serious surgical operation. A letter from him indicates that he is making a good recovery. He expects soon to be back on the job in better health than ever.

The First church of Corvallis, Daniel Bryant, pastor, since May 1 has received thirty-six new members, nineteen of them by baptism. The total membership is now 556, and the Sunday school enrolment is 795. On Sunday, Nov. 28, the church made a thank offering of $852. The junior guild girls of this church are making a canvass of the membership for subscriptions to Missions and THE BAPTIST.

The Preparation of a Modern Prophet

By CHARLES L. WHITE

"EARTH'S dwellers speak many tongues; heaven has but one." So runs the classic proverb; in modern days Rudyard Kipling has brought the underlying thought a little nearer by declaring that even on earth the diviner qualities of human nature produce a unity in which the local distinctions of east and west are forgotten.

This unity finds an illustration in the growth of Baptist influence and sentiment in Norway, which has been intertwined with the development of the denomination in the United States. Back and forth, hither and thither, the Divine Weaver has thrown the shuttle of the loom of time, forming the firm fabric of truth and love as they are in Christ Jesus, our Lord.

Other nations have aided, for it was a Danish sailor, converted and baptized in America, who first lifted the Baptist standard in Norway. This man, Fredrik Rymker, went to Denmark and then, in 1857, to Norway. Baptisms followed his labors and a church was organized Apr. 22, 1860, near Skien. He returned to Denmark in 1863 and the little groups in Norway were left in comparative obscurity.

But America again held out her hand. This time a Norwegian, Godtfred Hubert, who served in the navy early in the civil war and who was baptized in the Boston Bethel, went back to Norway before the war was over and began preaching Baptist doctrines. For some reason he was supported there for twenty years by English Baptists and thus another national thread was intertwined in the Norwegian weaving. Still others were mingled, for in 1863 two Swedes, Larsson and Hansson, entered Norway as Baptist missionaries and several churches were organized.

The Swedish influence in Norway appears also in the fact that several Norwegian missionaries studied in the Bethel seminary at Stockholm, Sweden. Here too the American influence has been great, especially through the work of two men, both of whom were trained at Colgate university. These were Knute Oscar Broady, D.D. LL.D (Colgate college, '61), founder and for forty years (1866-1906) president of Bethel seminary; and Charles Eric Benander, D.D. (Colgate seminary, '91), his successor, who after twenty years still holds that position. Doctor Broady continued to teach there till his death in 1922 at ninety years of age.

The influence of the United States Baptists has been exerted in Norway through the Dano-Norwegian Theological seminary of Chicago, although many of its students have remained in this country. With the establishment of a Baptist Theological seminary at Oslo, Norway, in 1910, the necessity of depending upon outside schools of theology has ceased.

America can claim its share of credit for the labors of Rev. P. Stiansen who was born in Risør, Norway, Sept. 15, 1879, and was graduated from the Dano-Norwegian Theological seminary then at Morgan Park, Chicago, in 1902, and did postgraduate work in the divinity school of the University of Chicago. He organized the first Norwegian Baptist church of greater New York of which he was pastor till November, 1909. Meanwhile he had done work among the Norwegians of Boston and had been graduated from the Union Theological seminary at New York in 1905.

Until 1914 he held Norwegian pastorates in this country and then went with his wife and children to Fredrikshald, Norway, where he became pastor. In 1920 he went to the Arctic region, becoming pastor at Troniso. In both Fredrikshald and Troniso he was a member of the city council; in Troniso he was elected chairman of the Board of Education—the first time a Baptist was elected to this position in Norway where ministers of the established Lutheran church are usually given preference.

But now the thread of Mr. Stiansen's life is back in America. In August, 1926, he returned to become dean of the Norwegian Theological seminary affiliated with the Northern Baptist Theological seminary of Chicago.

In connection with Baptist work in Norway, it is interesting to observe that the northernmost Baptist church in the world is in that country—the church at Vardor, which was formed in 1886. This church and ten others, all north of the Arctic circle, constitute the Northern Association of Norway. Together they have a membership of over 1000 people.

DR. P. STIANSEN

Here, There and Everywhere

REV. M. C. POWERS, PASTOR for three years of First church, Missouri Valley, Iowa, has accepted a unanimous call to First church, Waukon, Iowa.

EVERY MEMBER OF THE last graduating class of the Mounds-Midway School of Nursing, Saint Paul, Minn., who has taken the state board examination, has passed without a red mark. This record is the result of careful study and thorough training. The faculty and graduates can well feel proud of this accomplishment.

FIRST CHURCH, PLYMOUTH, Ida., Henry Jacobs, minister, has been conducting special evangelistic services under the direction of the Duff sisters' gospel trio.

TWO HUNDRED DELEGATES of the Hudson River Association met in the annual meeting, Oct. 12-13, at Calvary church, Warwick, N. Y., James Bristow, pastor. This was the sixty-eighth annual gathering. A. J. Coffey of Phoenicia was the moderator; Robert W. Doughty of Beacon, N. Y., succeeds him. At the ministers' conference R. B. Pattison, Ossining, and E. A. Snyder, Beacon, gave the principal addresses. Miss Hattie Rowe, Poughkeepsie, presided at the woman's hour, the principal speakers being Mrs. M. E. Van Nostrand, Albany, and Miss Stella Relyea, Kinwha, China. The associational program stressed evangelism throughout; addresses were given by J. H. Cope, Haka, Burma, and C. H. Detweiler. Prof. B. C. Cape presented "Our Baptist Schools. Russell M. Brougner of Paterson, N. J., and Dean Thomas Waring of Hamilton, N. Y., gave the inspirational messages.

ON ACCOUNT of the health of his son, Lawrence, James Fisher has resigned at Wellington, Kan., to accept a pastorate at Mesa, Ariz.

IN EIGHTEEN MONTHS J. H. Hughes has welcomed into the fellowship of Temple church, Chicago, 174 new members.

GEORGE MCGINNIS of La Grange, Ill., for ten years district superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Illinois and during the last two years its state field secretary, severed his connection with the organization after the election and is now available for pastoral work. He has served as pastor of Baptist churches in Sandwich, Chicago, Aurora, Joliet and Waukegan, Ill.

GREECE COMMUNITY CHURCH, N. Y., made an average counted attendance of more than 200 during November.

STANTON PARK CHURCH, Detroit, had a Thanksgiving made glad by the presentation to Pastor L. D. Ballingall of a gold watch and gold knife by the congregation; to the church by the senior Philathea class of twenty-two choir chairs; and to the church for the prayer meeting room by Mr. and Mrs. R. K. Smith of 100 chairs.

MISS LILLIAN PHILLIPS is the new director for young people's work in the church at Indiana Harbor. Pastor Rhoades received five candidates for membership in the church, Nov. 28.

WILFRED NOBLE is building up an enthusiastic "Get One" club at Logan Square, Chicago.

LA GRANGE CHURCH, Chicago, witnessed two baptisms at the hands of Pastor E. E. Freeman, Dec. 5.

THE MARRIAGE of Miss Isobel Herbert Virgin and Mr. Cecil Gillett Osborne was solemnized at North Shore church, Chicago, Dec. 3, by Dr. Herbert Whiting Virgin, father of the bride.

THE CONGREGATION of the Mariners' Temple in New York City is buying a plot in Valhalla Park cemetery, Staten Island, which to bury its dead, and it places the names on a memorial tablet in the church.

RANSOMVILLE CHURCH, N. Y., dedicated its reopened church building, Nov. 14-15. All of the organized activities of the church were represented on the program. Several neighboring ministers participated. A reception and banquet attended by 200 people concluded the festival.

CAVALRY CHURCH, Kansas City, Mo., began work in its present organization Nov. 1, 1921, with George E. Harris, pastor. In the intervening four years 200 persons have joined the church, and total contributions have been $192,834. Overtaxed with the complex and pressing demands of the field, Mr. Harris has signed to accept a pastorate at Billings, Mont.

PARK MEMORIAL SUNDAY SCHOOL, Springfield, Mass., is nearing 400 in attendance and expects to go beyond that number before the end of the year.

NEGRO SINGERS with negro melodies introduced a pleasing variety into the service at First church, Sioux City, Iowa, on recent Sunday evening.

J. EARLE EDWARDS began work at Queens Village, New York City, a year ago with eighty-nine members. Now the church has 285 members including forty new members of the congregation. The Sunday school has grown from 200 to 457. A new building has become necessary and will be undertaken.

FRANCIS C. STIFLER of Wilmette, Ill., the speaker at the Baptist Social Union dinner at Hotel Astor, New York City, Dec. 1.

DR. JAMES S. KIRTLEY has raised the question of broadcasting the services at the land Avenue, Toledo, Ohio.

W. H. GEISTWEIT will open in his church at Dayton, Ohio, in January a college institute to run two months, employing regular teachers and providing for a series of lectures by specialists.

PRES. J. WHITCOMB BROUGHER has completed a speaking tour across the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention.

LEOPOLD H. R. HASS is conducting a school of evangelism in his church at Waterville, Me.

MOUNT PLEASANT CHURCH, Newark, N. J.,

Nurses Training

WITH facilities for training nurses such as are now offered by the Association through the specialized departments of the Mounds Park Sanitarium and the unexcelled equipment of the new Midway, the selection of student personnel for the Mounds-Midway School of Nursing will necessarily be on a high plane. High school training or its equivalent is prerequisite for entrance.

Along with the increased facilities, however, comes the increased number of students who can now be admitted to the training.

Over and above these added things the Mounds-Midway will continue on the high standard of excellence for training and spirit for which it has always been recognized.

Applications for the spring term are now being considered and should be made to the Superintendent of nurses.

The NORTHWESTERN BAPTIST HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION
SAINT PAUL

has sold its building for $275,000 and will build a new house in a new location.

KENILWORTH CHURCH, Brooklyn, N. Y., has published a new elaborate and beautiful directory.

FIFTEEN CENTS for a substantial supper as the feature with which the ladies of the First church, Marion, Ind., closed a successful school of missions conducted by pastor James E. Bell and helpers.

DR. R. W. HOBBS of the First church, Lansing, Mich. had the misfortune to break his bones in his left leg between the knee and ankle while exercising in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium, Friday, Nov. 5. He will be unable to continue work for two or three months. But the church rallied, went on with meetings under Dr. W. W. Bustard of Cleveland and received great spiritual blessing. Dr. J. F. Mills of Gloversville, N. Y., has been engaged as supply pastor and the trustees have told Doctor Hobbs to take the time necessary for complete recovery.

FIRST CHURCH, Decatur, Ill., T. Harley Marsh pastor, closed an evangelistic campaign of three weeks, with the assistance of Evangelist Carl Bassett. More than fifty donations have come to the church. In appreciation of his eleven years' service as pastor the church voted Doctor Marsh a substantial increase in salary, this being the second increase within the year.

ON SEPTEMBER, Rev. W. T. Carpenter was struck by an automobile and rendered unconscious. After lingering for eight weeks without regaining consciousness he passed away, Nov. 12, at his home in Lima, Ohio. Funeral services were held in the First church, of which he was a member, Pastor H. Deere conducting the service, assisted by Rev. Robert Hughes, Rev. L. A. Wood and Rev. A. W. Snow. Mr. Carpenter held pastorates at Westport, Ky.; Grand, Goodland, Morocco, Kewanna, Columbia City and Marion, Ind.; Sturgis, Mich.; Robinson and Greenville, Ill.; Chesapeake and Chesterville, St. Marys and Kenton, Mo. His last pastorate was at Kenton. Carpenter was "A brother beloved, and faithful minister in the Lord." Many can testify to the blessing received through his ministry.

MEMBERS OF FIRST CHURCH, Hastings, Neb., Roy E. Barnett, pastor, found a surprise awaiting them at the close of a recent Sunday morning service, in the form of an electrically lighted bulletin board that was put in place during the service. It was unveiled following a dedicatory prayer before members of the congregation left for their homes.

THE FRIENDLY BIBLE CLASS of the Swedish Baptist church, Sioux City, Iowa, has the distinction of making the first donation to the nursing service of the new Midway hospital. The contribution is six dozen hot-water bag covers, made by the class of which Mrs. L. J. Slinkman is the leader. Our Baptist hospitals are always grateful for contributions of this kind. Those interested in hospital welfare service should address Superintendent of Nurses, 1700 University Ave., Saint Paul, Minn.

"A PICTURE OF TYPICAL MOTHERHOOD," is descriptive of the booklet "Mother" by Rennetts C. Miller. The eighth edition is now off the press; 75,000 copies have been sold. The price is 40 cents and the booklet may be had by addressing Mr. Miller, Box 304, Kingston, N. Y.

WILLIAM OWEN CARVER, JR., son of Prof. W. O. Carver of the Southern Baptist Theological seminary, has been critically ill, but is reported convalescent.

DR. C. P. STEALEY, editor of the Baptist Messenger, and Mrs. Stealey were called to Louisville to share sorrows with the family of their son, Mr. S. L. Stealey, over the death of his oldest son from the results of an accident.

"SCOTCH NIGHT" WAS A FEATURE of the week-end program at First church, Bridgeport, Conn., on the occasion of a visit from Samuel G. Neil.

A COUNCIL OF SPRINGFIELD ASSOCIATION, Ill., recognized Grand Avenue church, Decatur, and ordained its pastor, H. R. Applegate, Dec. 3. Ministers participating were Herbert Hines, Ernest N. Cox, T. Harley Marsh and N. J. Hilton.

STUDENTS FROM THE COLLEGE at Northampton, Mass., conduct junior church for the First church.

THE ACME FARM and the Fulghum Hatchery, which have advertised in papers throughout the country, are pronounced fraudulent.

IMMANUEL CHURCH, Salt Lake City, met in "committee of the whole," Dec. 5, for general conference and the observance of the Lord's supper, beginning at 4 o'clock.

CANDIED SWEET POTATOES, chicken pie, mashed potatoes, head lettuce salad, apple pie, honey, hot rolls and coffee composed the menu served by the ladies of First church, Topeka, Kan., at the last "church night." Let's all join that church.

DO YOU BELIEVE in universalism and in spiritism? Dr. Herbert Whiting Virgin invited his people at North Shore, Chicago, to a restudy of those subjects on two recent Sunday evenings.

MEN'S ORGANIZATION OF FIRST CHURCH, Ontario, Calif., has changed its name to the "J. U. M. club." It has a lunch and a workout in the gymnasium every Monday evening.

TWENTY-TWO DELEGATES in council at Union, Mich., recommended the ordination of Albert H. Gibbons, pastor of Union and Mason churches. Besides L. D. Pettit and John E. Hopkins, officers of the council, other ministers participating in the ordination program were G. A. Miles, H. V. Gould, Jos. I. Lindsay and C. G. Morse. Luncheon was served to seventy-five people.

"GROWING OLD GRACEFULLY" was the subject of a recent sermon to his people at First church, Chicago, by Perry J. Stackhouse, who has a long way to go before he has occasion to put it into practice.

C. W. WEBB AT MADISON, ILL., held his own revival meetings with a fine spiritual interest and substantial gains in membership.

EARL RINEY IS BEGINNING his fifth year at Coffeyville, Kan. The parsonage has been given over to the growing Sunday school, and a new building is in prospect, with $20,000 already subscribed.

AFTER SEVEN YEARS AT AKRON, Ohio, with 325 baptisms and 600 accessions, R. W. Edmondson goes to Alexandria, Ohio.

CALVARY CHURCH, Norristown, Pa., will post in the vestibule a "recognition list" carrying the names of all whose subscriptions to the church are paid in full.

PROSPECT AVENUE CHURCH, Buffalo, prints in its calendar its terms of membership as

AN INCOME THAT NEVER FAILS

Gifts by the Annuity plan support world evangelization and assure you an income as long as you live.

When remembering the national societies in your will please use exact corporate names as follows:

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Rev. P. H. J. Lerrigo, M. D., Home Secretary (re annuities); George B. Huntington, Treasurer, (re wills); 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society, Charles L. White, D.D., Executive Secretary, 23 East 26th Street, New York City.

The American Baptist Publication Society, George L. Estabrook, Treasurer, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Miss Alice M. Hudson, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention, E. T. Tomlinson, D.D., Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, Frank W. Padelord, D.D., Executive Secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Inquiries concerning ANNUITIES and WILLS addressed to any officer named will be held as confidential and will receive prompt attention.

Annuities

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

On two lives the rate of income varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, interest payable semi-annually.

Samples of these Single and Double Contracts will be sent to you on request.

"Where your heart is, there should your treasure go."

Communion Ware of Quality

Materials FINEST MANSHIP

ALUMINUM or SILVER PLATE
Individual Glasses

Best Prices. Send for Illustrated Catalog
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
844 1701-1705 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Pews, altars and pulpits from the largest exclusive church furniture factory. Write for catalog and particulars. Manitowoc Church Furniture Company, Waukesha, Wisconsin."

BAPTIST OLD PEOPLE'S HOME
Wood, Ill. Rev. L. T. Foreman, Ex. Sec.

Nearly a score of years of blessed service. Ten thousand days of kindly ministry to the aged people every year. Seventy-five beds yearly for rooms. Require nothing for 150 people at once. Gifts gladly welcomed for our $250,000 goal.

follows: "This church receives members upon profession of their faith and baptism by immersion, or upon letters from churches of like faith and order."

A CONTEST IS ON FOR attendance and membership between the Baptist men of Salem and of Corvallis, Ore.

W. S. BOOTH, new executive secretary for the Newark Baptist city mission society, spoke recently at South church on the subject, "Business—Heavenly or Heathenish?"

ATTENDANCE AT THE men's Bible class of First church, Kansas City, Mo., is running above 1750.

FORTY-FOUR STUDENTS OF Ottawa university are members of the life service league. The student volunteer band has nine members.

MISS ISABEL CRAWFORD was the speaker at First church, Adrian, Mich., the last Thursday evening in November.

CHOIR OF THE FIRST church, Akron, Ohio, rendered "The Vision of Deborah" on Sunday evening, Dec. 5.

CALVARY CHURCH, Omaha, Neb., organized forty years ago with forty-nine members, is now the largest Baptist church in the state, with 950 members. The fortieth anniversary was observed in November. A month before, Pastor H. C. Whitcomb challenged the deacons to bring in as an anniversary offering forty new members. They brought forty-five.

TWO FIFTH AVENUE busses provide service for those members of Park Avenue church, New York, who wish to go to the upper west side.

PASTOR J. J. ALLEN of Sandusky Street church, Pittsburgh, is recovering from a serious illness.

HOMESTEAD, PA., FIRST CHURCH, made a "silent Thanksgiving" offering, Nov. 28. In silence the people filed by the communion table and left their offerings, amounting to $700.

RARELY DOES A SUNDAY evening pass at Woodlawn church, Chicago, without several additions to the church.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF First church, Terre

Haute, Ind., are signing up to sing carols on Christmas eve to "shut-ins."

ARTHUR E. COWLEY has closed a fruitful revival at Lebanon, Ind.

HERMAN LANG AT BEULAH church, Detroit, is rejoicing to observe growth in many directions. For one item, his brotherhood has reached an attendance of more than 150 and aims at 300.

MRS. N. B. LESLIE, pastor at Noblesville, Ind., had the assistance of Rev. S. W. Powell of Anderson four evenings in meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life. Tudor Jones, Welsh tenor of Anderson, accompanied Mr. Powell. The meetings were stimulating to the church and fruitful in conversions. They are to be followed up by the local workers.

BETHEL INSTITUTE CONDUCTS Monday evening classes for twelve-to eighteen-year-old boys and girls of the neighborhood. Programs consist of athletic drills, talks on first aid, devotional periods of Bible study and brief addresses by invited speakers. Students have charge of the classes.

SEVEN PERSONS JOINED the Comanche (Iowa) church as a result of a two weeks' revival meeting. John T. Hall, pastor, was assisted by Rev. Frederick C. Codd of Davenport, Rev. George E. Dawkins of and Dr. E. M. Lake, Portsmouth, N. H.—were invited to attend. Owing to the celebration of the 100th anniversary in his own church, Doctor Lake was unable to be present. The program included a history of the church; a woman's meeting at which a group of women dressed in appropriate costumes reenacted the organization of the Home Mission Society fifty years ago; a social and stunt night. The sermon Sunday morning was preached by Mr. Kemper on "They Kept the Faith." The open forum in the afternoon on "Does God Need the Church?" was conducted by Doctor Price. The three "daughters," South, Pennsylvania Avenue and Olivet churches, attended and participated in the Sunday evening service. Addresses were given by Pastors Dissette, Toy and Grey; also by Doctor Hobbs and the former pastors. Doctor Price remained for the twentieth annual banquet of the service guild class, Oct. 17, and spoke to a large gathering.

IN SEPTEMBER, 1925, Rev. Finley Keech, who had just completed his work at Rochester Theological seminary, assumed the pastorate of South church, Newark, N. J. Emphasis has centered around young people and the children. During the past summer a daily vacation Bible school was held

SOUTH CHURCH, NEWARK, N. J.

The Baptist

Chicago, December 25, 1926

Vol. VII

No. 47

THE BAPTIST is published every Saturday by the Northern Baptist Convention at 2320 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Rates: Single subscription $2.50 a year; church clubs equal to 10 per cent of church membership. $2.00; single copies, 10 cents. In foreign countries, postage $1.04 extra; in Canada 52 cents.

Change of address: Old and new addresses should be in our hand two weeks before a change goes into effect. Give key number as it appears on label. Remittances: Should be made payable to THE BAPTIST. Acknowledgment is through change of label date. If check on local bank is sent, add exchange.

Renewal notice will be sent previous to date to which subscription is paid. Subscriber should send in renewal promptly or, if paper is not desired send discontinuance order.

Advertising: Display: Per agate line, 30 cents; full page, $125. No time or space discounts. Classified: 6 cents per word. Obituaries: 100 words free; 4 cents per word for additional; resolutions printed verbatim, 4 cents per word; cash to accompany order.

Correspondence should be addressed to THE BAPTIST, 2320 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill. No manuscripts returned unless accompanied by full return postage.

Muscatine and Rev. Fred Madson of Clinton.

DR. JOHN ATCHESON of Macalester college spoke on "The Value of the Christian College" before a meeting of the Twin City Baptist Ministers' Association at Bethel institute, Nov. 15.

A THANK-OFFERING FOR current expenses was taken by White Temple church, Mitchell, S. D., Ray N. McCann, pastor, Nov. 21. Pledges were brought up to date. The offerings received totaled $612. At the mid-week service, Nov. 17, seven people were baptized.

FIRST CHURCH, LANSING, Mich., R. W. Hobbs, pastor, celebrated its 175th anniversary, Oct. 14-17. The three living ex-pastors—Rev. C. W. Kemper, Charleston, W. Va.; Dr. Orlo J. Price, Rochester, N. Y.;

with almost 100 children in attendance. A troop of boy scouts has been organized under the direction of Henry Maxted, a graduate of Syracuse, and for the first time South church school is represented by a team in the Sunday-school basketball league of the city. The young people have organized a Sunday evening vesper club. Aside from its Sunday study hour, the men's Bible class has stood the expense of "Bibling"

Surpassing all others in New Songs, Solos, Hymns, Duets, Quartets and Choruses. (3) Bindings.

Cloth, 55c Red Rope, 45c Manila, 35c

Send for Sample and Be Continued

BILHORN BROS. 136 W. Lake St. Chicago

the Hotel Grant. This was accomplished through the Gideons. The church has made an increase of $500 in its missionary pledge this year, and the women's missionary society has undertaken $600 more for the golden anniversary. For a series of fire-side sermons a full-sized fireplace was erected on the platform and lighted each

FINLEY KEECH

Sunday evening. The auditorium was limmed during the prayer and sermon. There have been two baptisms and several candidates are now awaiting the ordinance. Rev. Howard Thurman of Oberlin, Ohio, will be the speaker during the week of prayer. Emphasis will be placed on personal evangelism during January, February and March.

H. C. MATTHEWS has resigned the pastorate of the church at Sawtelle, Calif., and has accepted a call to the church at Richmond, Calif. During his pastorate at Sawtelle there was erected at a cost of $70,000 a house of worship which is one of the best equipped church buildings in the state. Mr. Matthews is a recent graduate of the Berkeley Divinity school.

RUFUS KEYSER has closed his work at West Hollywood after a year's pastorate. This is a new church and Mr. Keyser has been its only pastor. There is a membership of 100 people and a Sunday school of about 100. The field offers opportunities for exceptional growth.

FLOYD T. BECKWITH is in the fourth year of a prosperous pastorate with First church, Pomona, Calif. The house of worship of this church is an imposing one with elaborate equipment. The membership is nearly 100.

Conley Memorial church, Highland Park, Mich., has a charity fund of $1500 to furnish food, clothing and fuel to any in the community, irrespective of color or creed, who may be suffering because of the industrial depression. The church has been organized into groups and the community will be canvassed for needy families. These groups will also aid in the evangelistic campaign which will begin, Jan. 2.

FOLLOWING HIS PASTORATE at Wheaton, Ill., Dr. Smith Thomas Ford was secured by First church, Penn Yan, N. Y., as stated supply during the illness of the pastor, W. H. Wheatley. Doctor Ford is now serving as interim pastor at First church, Fall River, Mass., where Dr. E. C. Herrick was formerly pastor.

FARMINGTON ASSOCIATION (Maine) held its December session with the Farmington church, Dec. 1-2, W. S. Boardman, pastor. The program included addresses by Secretary Pendleton, Doctor Hamlen, Rev. Walter Quarrington, Rev. F. H. Knollin and Pres. C. D. Gray of Bates.

NEARLY 200 PEOPLE attended the annual church dinner at First church, Sacramento, Calif., Dec. 3. A program of music was given by the junior college club. Building plans were presented by C. J. Hopkinson of the building committee and by Ivan Satterlee, church architect. Dr. S. L. Divine of Westminster Presbyterian church gave an address, "We Build a Church."

NEW YORK BAPTISTS plan to hold their summer assembly at Cook academy, Aug. 1-13, 1927, under the direction of the religious education commission of the state convention. Standard teachers' training courses in one week units will be offered. Prof. L. R. Loomis of Keuka college will be dean of the assembly.

MISS ELLEN HOLMES, who was born in China in 1894, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Holmes, is now a medical missionary working in Foochow, China. Mrs. Holmes writes that her daughter is in need of bandages which could be made from old sheets and pillowcases. She would also like to have colored pictures—post cards, magazine covers, and any old envelopes that are discarded from letters. Mrs. T. D. Holmes may be addressed at Alfred, N. Y.

EUGENE NEUBAUER, after eight years of service in the Monongahela valley, has decided to take up evangelistic work. His last pastorate of four years at Fairmont, W. Va., has been unusually fruitful in conversions. He may be addressed either at Fairmont or at "Bluffside," Rockport, Ill.

ARTHUR T. FOWLER closes his first year at Calvary church, Lawrence, Mass., with a series of evangelistic meetings in which he is assisted by Samuel G. Neil. The meetings are in progress at the time of this writing.

MARCY AVENUE, BROOKLYN, was supplied two Sundays by Dr. David Bovington.

AT THE FIRST MONTHLY church supper of First church, Worcester, Mass., Dec. 7, a special program of song was provided by George Hernandez, negro tenor. On the evening of Dec. 10, Mrs. Harry Emerson Fosdick addressed a meeting under the sponsorship of the woman's educational department.

MR. GEORGE A. LAWSON, associate minister at the Church of the Master, Cleveland, has accepted as a part of his duties the leadership of the church school and young people's work.

EVANGELIST WM. S. DIXON has closed a successful campaign with Pastor Chas. B. McClellan at Norwich, Kan.

WE-WANT-U BIBLE CLASS of First church, Doylestown, Pa., sponsors a nursery for the convenience of mothers who wish to attend church or Sunday school.

CLARENCE HILL FRANK had the pleasure of welcoming into his church at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Dr. and Mrs. Howard B. Grose, who came by letter from Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

FIRE OF DELIBERATE but not incendiary origin, to which Pastor C. D. Nutter was a party, burned up a note that had been standing for several years against the church at Ft. Fairfield, Me., Dec. 12. The people viewed the scene with pleasure.

AT THANKSGIVING TIME Rose Glen (N. D.) church, had a chicken dinner, with an address by Fred R. Stockton, state superintendent. Pastor C. F. Brown baptized six candidates, two of whom were his own children.

MISSIONS

AN International Baptist Magazine

Indispensable to EVERY Baptist who would know what the WORLD is DOING and what his denomination is doing in it.

Its remarkable pictures are windows on the world. Look through them and see your neighbors in Cheyenne and Tokyo, New York and the Congo.

More important than all, the world and its people are viewed from the standpoint of the missionary Christ—He who said "Go ye into all the world—"

Both foreign and home Baptist missions are covered by MISSIONS.

If there is no Club or Club Manager in your church, be the Manager and start a Club. All Helps and sample copies furnished freely on request.

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR
(in clubs of five or more)
Single Subscription, $1.25

Address

MISSIONS,
276 Fifth Ave., New York

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

Bibles Testaments Portions
Of Every Kind
In Every Language
For Gift and Home Use
For Missionary Purposes
New York New York Colored Philadelphia
Washington Richmond Cincinnati Chicago
Dallas Denver San Francisco

CARRY IT ALWAYS WITH YOU!
DR. R. A. TORREY'S
Gist of the Lesson
ORIGINAL "GIST" FEATURES

International S. S. Lesson Text in Full; Full Exposition; Important Words and Phrases Emphasized; Condensation of Thought; Changes in Revised Version Noted; Accepted Dates and Places; Prayer Meeting Topics, etc. Flexible Binding, 35c postpaid.
F. H. REVELL CO., 158 Fifth Ave., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

"THIS is station WCOY (We Count On You), broadcasting from the office of THE BAPTIST, Immanuel Bldg., Chicago.

"Tonight we shall have a brief sketch from the field editor entitled 'Ten Days in Sunny Southern California.' This is Mr. Cress:

"Our first contact with Southern California Baptists was at Downey where a local association was in session. This church which entertained the annual meeting is the oldest Baptist organization in the state. Its new and beautiful edifice was overflowing with delegates. Generous time was given for the presentation of THE BAPTIST.

"On Sunday, Nov. 21, Temple church, Los Angeles, gave us two large audiences. The field editor spoke in the morning; the service was broadcast. Missionary MacDiarmid of Sona Bata, Congo Belge, spoke in the evening. Pastor Birney S. Hudson and his people were generous and THE BAPTIST circulation will not be less because of the day.

"During the ensuing week, Mr. MacDiarmid and I had happy fellowship in meetings specially arranged for us in Pomona, with Pastor F. I. Beckwith; the First church, Los Angeles, Dr. J. A. Francis, pastor; and in the First church, Pasadena, Dr. John Marvin Dean, minister.

"On Sunday, Nov. 28, Mr. MacDiarmid spoke in the morning at Santa Ana with Pastor Russell while the field editor spoke at Anaheim where Pastor Ledbetter is leading this young church in a constructive program. In the evening we both spoke at Fullerton. Here Pastor S. Fraser Langford was concluding a school of missions. In all these meetings our hearts were warmed by the cordiality and good-will extended and by the devotion to Christ manifested everywhere. The quota accepted for the cooperative missionary program by Southern California is an index of high devotion and leadership.

"Monday, Nov. 29, was our last day. We were the guest-speakers at the ministers' conference, Los Angeles. For this day, all the pastors in three associations were invited. The meeting was in Burdette hall in the Temple church. A resolution was unanimously passed at the close of the meeting, urging Southern California pastors to put on campaigns for our denominational periodicals with the goal set at not less than 10 per cent of the membership enrolled as subscribers for Missions, THE BAPTIST or the Watchman-Examiner. All our periodicals received favorable attention. The result can be nothing less than a greatly increased interest in the value of the denominational papers with a wider reading, a better informed membership and a more intelligent and joyful participation in the forward-looking program of the denomination.

"California as a state gave THE BAPTIST generous support last year. Only two states surpassed it in the percentage of their members taking the paper. With the November campaign and the unusual interest shown during the tour over the state, it will not be surprising if California leads the Baptist host during 1927 in subscriptions.

"WCOY now signs off. Good night."

KENILWORTH CHURCH, Brooklyn, celebrated, Dec. 5-12, the first anniversary of the dedication of the parish house and church house.

FIRST CHURCH, ARLINGTON, Mass., invited as guests of honor to its annual church supper, Dec. 8, all members received in the preceding twelve months.

HERBERT M. RICHMOND received from his church at Ansley, Neb., an addition of $200 to his salary.

"THREE G" CLASS OF WOMEN of First church, San Francisco, celebrated its tenth anniversary with a reunion. The treasurer, who has served throughout its history, reported about $2000 of class funds paid out to local church and Sunday-school support, to city, home and foreign missionary work. This class has furnished a number of home and foreign missionaries and five of the present church deaconesses are members of the class. Its present membership is twenty-nine; about 150 women have been connected with it during its lifetime.

W. F. STRUTEVANT recently baptized five persons at Crisfield, Mo.

A DENOMINATIONAL CONFERENCE was recently held in First church, Cortland, N. Y., to which all the churches of the association were invited. The conference was held under the auspices of the promotion committee of the association. Rev. H. S. Myers of the Board of Missionary Cooperation was the speaker.

SUMMER HILL (N. Y.) CHURCH recently held three weeks of evangelistic meetings. There were a number of conversions and the church was much revived. The meetings were conducted by Mary Ross Danforth. Pastor W. T. Barnes commends her work.

THE ANNUAL FORMAL reception of First church, Philadelphia, to the pastor, Mr. Rose, and the assistant, Mr. Nichols, and their wives was held, Nov. 18. A successful school of service with separate classes for men, women and young people has closed. Once a month Mr. Rose gives the people a Sunday night book talk. The last book treated was Lewis Browne's "The Believing World."

FIRST CHURCH, CHATSWORTH, Ill., Rev. Wm. H. Lucas, pastor, recently conducted two weeks of evangelistic meetings. Rev. S. Ashford Ogg of Battle Creek, Mich., did the preaching. There were twelve professions.

CENTRAL SQUARE CHURCH, Portland, Me., reports its missionary quota paid monthly and increased every year; all bills paid and a balance in both treasuries for November; an increase of 14 per cent over last fall in the Sunday school; the Christian Endeavor society doubled; and a larger audience room imperative.

FIRESIDE TALKS BY Pastor H. N. Geistweit have been drawing crowds at First church, Des Moines. For these evenings, the rostrum is arranged like a living room with a fireplace, and the pastor discusses under the general head "Growing People" such subjects as "Sans Apron Strings," "Climbing Fool's Hill," "The Evolution of a Girl's Ideal," "The Call of the World," and "When Winter Comes."

FIFTEEN PERSONS were baptized, Oct. 22 by W. O. Samuelson as he entered his fifth year as pastor of First church, Valley, Neb. The Wednesday evening following he gave the hand of fellowship to eighteen. Sunday evening congregations are growing; average attendance 300. The church conducts work in several outstations.

NEW MEMBERS ARE RECEIVED at every communion service by Pastor William H. Hurst at Baptist Tabernacle, Wilkes-Barre, Pa. The Sunday-school is crowding the new building erected three years ago. Nov. 1, the church began a campaign to liquidate the indebtedness of $20,000 on its building. Church members pledged $6000 to be paid in one year. An appeal will be made to friends of the church who are not church members to help in raising funds.

TWO COMMITTEES HAVE been appointed to Calvary church, Sacramento, Calif., by Watson Brown, pastor, one to investigate the ways and means of converting the church building into an office building, the other to devise ways of relieving immediately the crowded condition of the church.

Obituary

Mrs. Charlotte S. Thomas widow of Rev. E. J. Thomas (for many years on the Illinois state board) died, Nov. 29, at her home in Atlanta, Ill. She was the mother of Dr. Judson Thomas, well known in Chicago churches and as a national worker. She was Atlanta's oldest resident, being nine-two years of age. She was a woman of stalwart character and brilliant intellect and has all through the years been a strong factor for good in the social, civic and spiritual life of the community.

Charlotte Spinning was born at Middletown, Ohio, Mar. 17, 1834; was married to Rev. E. J. Thomas of Cardiganshire, South Wales. Together they served churches in Michigan and Central, Ill. Mr. Thomas died Apr. 13, 1916.

Two daughters, Mrs. Armada Bevan and Miss Mary L. Thomas, both of Atlanta, survive.

Funeral services were conducted by Pastor Fred R. Johnson. Interment was in the local cemetery.

New Books

Crannell's Pocket Lessons. Philadelphia: Judson Press. 35 cents.

Designed to carry in the vest pocket like a diary, contains the lesson text, daily Bible readings, the historical setting, an exposition, concluding notes and final questions of a practical nature. Crannell is a master of terse English, an extraordinary condenser, yet an orthodox inspirer. There is no better book of pocket lessons published.

—JOHN A. EARL.

Chimes and the Children, by W. R. Bowie, D.D. New York: Revell. $1.25.

There is a growing conviction that if the children of today are to be greatly interested in the worship services of the church tomorrow, at least some of the present preaching from the pulpit must be within their scope of understanding. Doctor Bowie, rector of Grace church, New York City, and editor of the Children's Year gives in this collection of children's sermons a variety of subjects that appeal to the child's mind and heart, and demonstrates the fine art of finding great spiritual truths enfolded in the commonplace things of our every day life.

—C. R. OSBORN.

The Religion of an Electrical Engineer, by George D. Shephardson. New York: Revell. $1.50.

The author has been engaged in scientific and engineering work for many years and during this time has also been a careful student in the field of religion. He has become thoroughly convinced that the God indicated by science is the same God as revealed through religion. He sees no great conflict between these two fields but says, "Science recognizes the existence of phenomena and of means of communication that are beyond its present scope, and that direct revelation from God to man is not impossible." You will enjoy the style of this author as he uses his accustomed method of dealing in hard facts, analyzing conditions to determine the exact nature of the problem and then seeking the solution.

—C. R. OSBORN.

The Church and Missions, by Robert E. Speer. New York: Doran. $1.75.

Such recent interpretations of the new missionary situations as "The Christ of the Indian Road," by Stanley Jones have produced their natural conservative reaction. The result is a contrast between new and old attitudes among missionary workers and supporters that gives more promise of debate than of cooperation and conquest. At such a juncture it is important to find a new synthesis in which there will be room for everything Christian in both attitudes and which will eliminate partial views on either side by the substitution of balanced and common judgments. Perhaps no missionary leader of the present generation is better qualified for such an undertaking than the secretary of foreign missions of the Presbyterian church in the United States, Dr. Robert E. Speer. Bravely and thoroughly he faces the problems involved, and he seeks their solution on fundamental and common ground. He accepts at their face and at their full value the most conservative and the most advanced interpretations of the New Testament, of church history, of modern experience in missionary work and of world conditions today, points the broad common basis they offer for cooperation in the evangelization of the world, and applies the result specifically to the solution of such problems as denominationalism, creeds, nationalism, native self-control, social service and the Christian attitude towards the non-Christian religions. The field surveyed by Doctor Speer promises to occupy a large place in Christian thinking within the next few years.

—U. M. MCGUIRE.

Day after Day, compiled by Harold M. Robinson. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Christian Education. 75 cents.

This is the second series of "Day after Day," the first having been prepared by J. Wilbur Chapman in 1919. It provides for "day after day" devotionals in the family—scripture selections and a prayer to accompany the reading. Such a book as this may be a help in maintaining family devotions, especially where the head of the house finds it a difficult matter to pray orally.

—DELLA ROBERTS.

The Identification Testament. New York: Oxford University Press. $2.50.

The Oxford University Press is doing some unique work in printing the Testaments and the Bible in new forms. A short time ago notice was given of their beautifully illustrated Testaments and Bibles. Now comes the Identification Testament which is so named from the fact that any one carrying a copy of it, with the identification certificate filled out, is identified as a Christian American. The pledge, the prayer, the two hymns and the silk American flag inserted on the inside of the front cover, are distinctive features. It is printed on Oxford India paper with easily-read black-faced type and bound in flexible and long-wearing Persian morocco leather, antique grain.

—A. T. TULLY.

Jesus the Carpenter, by Walter Benwell Hinson. Published by Hinson Memorial Baptist church, Portland, Ore. $1.25.

This volume of fifteen of Doctor Hinson's sermons glows with the personality of that warm-hearted, conservative preacher. One-third of them are straightway testimonies to the place and power of Christ; two-thirds are rebuttal arguments against modern tendencies in the church. They are the actual, spoken sermons of a preacher who dearly loves his Lord, who senses new currents of thought running through the religious life of our time, and who believes that the faith is thereby gravely endangered. They are not pulpit-pounding, arm-swinging efforts to shock a group of hearers. This man spoke from his heart. It is the man, not his tongue, that we hear. He is moved, therefore he is moving. The point of view is unreal to me, but the man himself, who appears plainly, I love. I cannot help wondering if, now that there is "no darkling veil between," he is still worried over the fears so prominently displayed in these sermons.

—FRED E. DEAN.

A Faith for a New Generation, by James Gordon Gilkey. New York: Macmillan. $1.75.

Another attempt to meet the situation which has arisen in religion with the advent of the new scientific learning. The book is designed for college students in the main and looks toward a solution of those difficulties in personal religious belief which assail multitudes of young people who cannot reconcile the old statements of religious faith with the new knowledge of the universe. The author, a young man himself, who

From "Parties That Are Different",
Abingdon Press

Crannell's Pocket Lessons for 1927

By

Philip Wendell Crannell, D. D.

*President Emeritus, The Kansas
City Baptist Theological Seminary*

CONTAINS all of the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons for Adults and Young People, with References, Daily Bible Readings, and Analyses. Vest-pocket size. About two hundred pages clearly printed on good opaque paper. Size, $2\frac{3}{4} \times 5\frac{3}{4}$ inches. Substantially bound in cloth. Just the thing for the busy teacher or scholar.

Price, 35 cents

Send for Bulletin of New Publications

The American Baptist
Publication Society
1701-1703 Chestnut Street
Philadelphia

16 Ashburton Place, Boston 1107 McGee St., Kansas City
125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago 439 Burke Building, Seattle
313 W. Third St., Los Angeles 223 Church St., Toronto

Order from Our Nearest House

FOR THE INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS

TARBELL'S Teachers' Guide for 1927

"Stands out infinitely superior to anything ever attempted. It redeems the International System."
—G. Campbell Morgan, D.D.

$1.90
(Postpaid, $2.00)

At all Booksellers, or

F. H. REVELL CO., 158 Fifth Ave., N. Y.; 17 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago

SELECT NOTES

By AMOS R. WELLS, Litt.D., LL.D.

The World's Greatest Sunday School Commentary for 1927

Its wealth of material gives a solid foundation for the spiritual and inspirational interpretation of special themes. It is complete with maps, bibliography, teaching methods and abundant illustrations.

Price $1.90 net $2.00 delivered
At all booksellers

W. A. WILDE COMPANY
131 CLARENDON STREET BOSTON MASS.

has had ample opportunity to observe the trend of thinking among serious young people because of his ministry among the colleges, has put the new generation under debt to him for the frank and yet reverent way in which he has handled a situation which seems to grow more tense with the progress of events. The most difficult chapter in the book and the one to which strenuous objection will be raised is "The World's Debt to Jesus." Here Mr. Gilkey has granted entirely too much in his eagerness to meet the new generation on what he supposes to be its own ground. If large portions of the gospels are to be attributed to legend, it is almost impossible to save what remains. In my judgment, the weakness of this otherwise strong book is its tendency to leap over difficulties by too readily admitting hypotheses to be true when they are only theories. —JOHN EARL.

In His Way, by Len G. Broughton. Nashville, Tenn.: Sunday School Board of the Southern Baptist Convention. $1.50.

The sub-title, "A Love Story That Had to Be," explains satisfactorily the origin; for scarcely anything less than sheer necessity would be a sufficient motive for writing such a book. Given a rarely beautiful, brilliant, pure and pious southern girl; surround her with a sufficient number of rich and influential friends; create such situations as may be needed to bring the story to the desired conclusion; let her commit her way to God. Under such circumstances, after a considerable amount of difficulty and a little impossible heroism, she is sure to marry a rich and noble husband and to do a lot of good with his money. Such is the lesson, and such a girl so situated may profit by it. In the field of artistic expression, Doctor Broughton is a great preacher. He shines in the pulpit. —U. M. McGUIRE.

Religion in the Making, by Alfred North Whitehead. New York: Macmillan, $1.50.

This book consists of four lectures delivered in King's chapel, Boston, in February, 1926. Doctor Whitehead applies the same train of thought to the field of religion which he applied a year ago in the Lowell lectures on "Science and the Modern World." He declares that the aim of this group of Lowell lectures is to give a concise analysis of the various factors in human nature which go to form a religion, to exhibit the inevitable transformation of religion with the transformation of knowledge, and more especially to make clear those permanent elements in the foundation of religion around which we may expect to find a more or less constant change.

The four themes covered are "Religion in History," "Religion and Dogma," "Body and Spirit" and "Truth and Criticism." Concerning this work John Dewey says, "There is news in the realm of mind. The mentality which has prevailed for three centuries is changing." The author says the change is not short of revolutionary. He gives his readers a sense of the nature of the change and what it imparts. —C. R. OSBORN.

Notes on the Lesson for January 1

THE CHRISTIAN A FOLLOWER OF JESUS

Lesson Text: Mark 1:16-20; 2:13-17; 1 John 2:6. Golden Text: Mark: 2:14

For the next three months the lessons will stress the Christian life. This opening lesson begins with the initial act of becoming a Christian. The Christian life begins in personal decision to obey the call of Jesus.

Character

Two things are basic in the Christian life, namely, developing the character of Jesus and shaping personal conduct after the way of Jesus. The last verse in the lesson text points to the first of these as well as to the second: "He that saith he abideth in him." That is what is meant by character. The Christian life is more than following an example however high and holy that example may be. There is an inner experience of spiritual transformation which produces a likeness to Christ in spirit and character, balances conduct and gives the motive power necessary for the task of following Jesus in his way of life. This inner experience was in the mind of John when he referred to abiding in Christ. It is one of the many paradoxes of truth that abiding and following are possible at the same time in the life of the same person. The abiding begins as it did in the first disciples by the honest decision to follow Jesus. When the sons of Zebedee left their boats to follow Jesus they at once began to abide in Jesus. That is, their conduct in taking up Jesus' way of life forced them to seek a more intimate sharing of the spirit and character of Jesus than any mere outward activity in service could guarantee. "Teach us to pray," they said to Jesus after they had followed him for some time, and in that request they voiced their yearning for something more and deeper than any attempt in their own strength to follow Jesus could possibly bring.

Conduct

If Christian character is the foundation upon which Christian conduct rests and the force which gives Christian conduct its motive and grace, then Christian conduct is the unimpeachable evidence proving that behind the conduct are the beauty and goodness of a true Christian man whose whole life is moulded by the sweet and powerful influence of the indwelling Christ. It is not without exceptional significance that the first following of Jesus described in the lesson resulted in the social effort of seeking others. The sons of Zebedee were to become fishers of men; and Matthew actually became at once an evangelist inviting his friends to meet Jesus at a dinner given by him. No man can follow Jesus truly and be selfish. Loving altruism is the very core of following Christ. All else in following the Master is summed up in the social spirit of seeking others, sharing with others and saving others.

FIRST CHURCH, Glens Falls, N. Y., reports receipts of $1,695.64 for current expenses in November.

The Saving Sense

A Scot applied for a position as patrolman on the London police force. In Scotland Yard they asked him: "Suppose you saw a crowd congregated at a certain point on your beat, how would you disperse it, quickly and with the least trouble?"

"I would pass the hat."

I never understood finance; I never understood even my own finances—Lord Birkenhead.

"Isn't Bessie pretty, Aunt Lucille!" exclaimed Paul admiringly of his little playmate.

"Bessie is pretty because she is good," answered Aunt Lucille primly.

"But, Aunt Lucille, you are good!" cried Paul in astonishment.

A countrified-looking man was sitting on a fence staring at the telegraph wires of a new line that was being constructed, and a sophisticated old gentleman watched him with a smile.

"Waiting to see a message come over those wires?" asked the old gentleman.

The other smiled and answered, "Yes."

The old gentleman then proceeded to enlighten him concerning the mysteries of telegraphy and after a talk of some minutes said: "Now that I have taken all the trouble to explain this to you I hope you will explain it to the other farmers around here."

"I don't work on a farm though," said the other.

"You don't! What you doing around here then?"

"I'm foreman of this construction crew and we're testing out a new wire."

"Eat your rice pudding, dear."

"No, mummy, I don't like rice pudding."

"Well, dear, just pretend you like it."

"No, mummy, I'll pretend I'm eating it."—Progressive Grocer.

Don't try to get change for a dime on Sunday morning unless you want to be suspected of being a nickel Christian.

BLMYER CHURCH BELLS

Bring People to Church

Write today for catalog and special proposition—new low prices and liberal terms.

THE JOHN B. MORRIS FOUNDRY CO.,
Proprietors The Cincinnati Bell Foundry
Established 1832
Dept. 12 Cincinnati, Ohio

PIPE ORGANS

of any size or construction. Estimates cheerfully submitted. Also Reed Organs for Church or Home.

Electric Organ blowing out for organs of any make. Write, stating which analog is desired.

Hinners Organ Co., Pekin, Ill.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 19

ESTABLISHED 1858

THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

INDEX TO "THE BAPTIST," VOLUME VII

Africa, The Appeal and Challenge of, by John E. Gell	685	Branches, Withered, Poem, by George G. Phipps	1405	Civilization, in Trust for, by P. H. J. Lerrigo	1404
Ambassadorship for Christ, by Thomas H. Sprague	878	Bread-line, The Romance of the, by H. Campbell-Duncan	136	Colleges, Our Undernourished, by Fred G. Boughton	620
Americans Speak, Four Great	78	Bunyan, John, What Has Become of? by W. W. Keen, M.D.	657	Conversation, The Consecration of, by Robert A. Ashworth	168
America's Emancipation, by Evangeline Booth	781	But Once, Poem	655	Cookstove, The Consecrated, by Frederick W. Stewart	853
Among Ourselves, 19, 50, 83, 113, 146, 178, 209, 242, 274, 306, 337, 370, 402, 435, 467, 498, 530, 561, 595, 630, 663, 692, 716, 762, 788, 812, 836, 860, 884, 908, 935, 967, 1001, 1031, 1063, 1095, 1127, 1159, 1192, 1221, 1254, 1287, 1320, 1352	1416	Canticle of Sunshine, A, by F. W. Boreham	1276	Covers Were Laid for Twelve, by Civic committee, W.A.B.H.M.S. and W.A.B.F.M.S.	1144
Angels, Guardian, by John Crosby	1406	Capital, Our Convention City, The Nation's, Edward O. Clark	361	Crisis, The, Poem, by Robert Whitaker	10
Angry, How to Be, by Bernard C. Clausen	804	Carcassonne, On the Road to, by Winfred Ernest Garrison	924	Death and the Life Beyond, by Fred-eric C. Spurr, 40, 74, 106, 171, 200, 264, 296, 328	393
Are Miracles a Thing of the Past? by Frederic C. Spurr	1084	Catholic Toleration, by John Crosby	1279	Deed and Creed, Poem, by Robert A. Taylor	395
Arise, Sir Knight, by James Allan Francis	756	Child in the Midst, The, Poem, by Margaret E. Sangster	737	Devotional Life, The, 15, 46, 79, 109, 142, 174, 205, 238, 270, 302, 333, 398, 430, 460, 494, 526, 557, 591, 626, 658, 687, 711, 735, 759, 783, 807, 831, 855, 879, 903, 931, 962, 996, 1026, 1058, 1090, 1122, 1154, 1187, 1217, 1249, 1282, 1315, 1347, 1378	1411
Asset, Throwing Away Our Greatest, by Robert Gordon	267	Children, The Father's, by Douglas G. Haring	204	Disciple of the Night, The, Drama	991
atheism, Organized, by J. Eugene Reed	684	Chimney Corner, The, 16, 48, 80, 110, 144, 176, 206, 240, 272, 304, 334, 367, 400, 432, 464, 496, 528, 558, 592, 628, 660, 688, 712, 736, 784, 808, 832, 856, 882, 904, 932, 964, 998, 1028, 1060, 1092, 1124, 1156, 1188, 1250, 1284, 1316, 1348, 1380	1412	Sermon, by Perry J. Stackhouse	991
Bachelor's Degree, The High Cost of, by Donald J. Cowling	618	China Today, Christianity in, by E. L. Pan	105	Discipleship, Some Civil and Social Imperatives of, by Oliver C. Horsman	77
Baptist Resources, Conservation and Distribution of in Great Cities, by Charles Hatch Sears	236	Choir Suggestions, by I H. Bartholomew, 878	961	Diversity of Operations in the Same Spirit, by Charles Hatch Sears	300
Baptist Three Hundred Years Ago, A, by John Crosby	330	Christ and I, Poem, by Narayan Vaman Tilak	1068	Divine Favor, Poem, by M. P. Treat	1353
Baptists and the World Conference on Faith and Order, by Robert A. Ashmore	896	Christ, the Common Denominator, by J. Whitcomb Brounger	520	Do We Need a New Phrase? by F. W. Norwood	1056
efore It Is too Late, Poem, by George Bancroft Griffith	435	Christ through Experience, Knowing, by Oliver M. Johnston	1149	Dynamic, The Needed, by H. L. Stetson	854
Erches, White, Poem, by G. A. Leichter	1099	Christianity Work Today, Will? by Frederic C. Spurr	988	Easter Even, On, Poem, by Susan Coolidge	280
oard of Missionary Cooperation. With the, 88, 119, 154, 183, 213, 247, 279, 313, 344, 376, 408, 434, 466, 511, 543, 575, 607	642	Church and Parenthood, The, by Letitia Knight Mintz	44	Editorial, 5, 37, 69, 101, 133, 165, 197, 229, 261, 293, 325, 357, 389, 421, 453, 485, 517, 549, 581, 615, 649, 681, 705, 729, 777, 801, 825, 849, 873, 897, 921, 953, 985, 1017, 1049, 1081, 1113, 1145, 1177, 1209, 1241, 1273, 1305, 1337, 1369	1391
ones, Poem, by David F. Nygren	1098	Church Architecture, Three Essentials of, George T. McCollum	734	Education, Christian on the Mission Field, by R. L. Howard	10
ook of Books, Our, Poem, by Charles Nevers Holmes	1320	Church Attendance, Men and, by Wayland Zwyer	709	Emmaus, On the Road to, Poem, by Annie S. Wallis	306
ook-Lover's Trail, Along the, Margaret Hanscom	492	Church, Is the Indispensable? by C. T. Holman	1343	Epitaph, My, Poem, by Max F. Reich	1156
ooks as Christmas Gifts, by Perry J. Stackhouse	1313	Church Means to Us in Terms of Service, What Our New, by Clinton Wunder, James M. Stifler, Fred V. Field, Fred E. Dean, Charles Alvin Brooks	1118	Evangelism and the Publishers, by York A. King	1311
ooks, Children and Their, by Louise Seaman	1182	Church on the Hill, Little White, Poem, by Anesta Eastman	1063	Evangelism, Efficiency in, by Henry L. Duff	828
ooks, New, 27, 61, 93, 127, 159, 189, 220, 252, 287, 319, 349, 383, 415, 444, 479, 509, 541, 569, 671, 689, 747, 771, 795, 819, 843, 867, 891, 912, 947, 979, 1009, 1043, 1075, 1107, 1136, 1171, 1232, 1264, 1299, 1360, 1395	1425	Church Problem, The	1117	Evangelism Essential to the Life of the Church, by J. Wesley Esveld	1280
ooks, The Home and the Nation, by Sarah Byrd Askew	1183	Church, the Conscience of Society, The, by John A. Hutton	877	Evangelism, Open-Air, by Samuel Graham Nell	140
ys and Girls, 17, 49, 81, 111, 145, 177, 207, 241, 273, 305, 335, 369, 401, 433, 465, 497, 529, 559, 593, 629, 661, 689, 713, 737, 785, 809, 833, 857, 883, 905, 933, 965, 999, 1029, 1061, 1093, 1125, 1157, 1189, 1219, 1251, 1285, 1317, 1349, 1381	1413	Churches and Million-Dollar Theaters, Cheap, by Joseph Hudnut	1116	Evangelist, Every Pastor His Own, by Samuel G. Nell	453
		Churches at Work, 662, 691, 715, 739, 761, 787, 811, 835, 859, 881, 907, 934, 960, 1000, 1031, 1062, 1094, 1126, 1155, 1191, 1220, 1253, 1286, 1319, 1351, 1382	1415	Evangelistic Leadership in Country Districts, by Samuel G. Nell	12
		City, A Quest for, by F. C. White	929	Faith, An Affirmation, of, by Margaret E. Burton	269
		City Planning, Why, by Charles Hatch Sears	203	Faith, My, At Fifty, Ryland Knight	424

Faith on a Hilltop, by H. Campbell-Duncan	1150	Mexico, The Changing Religious Order in, by Andres Osuna	656	Religion and Education, by Ernest De Witt Burton	488
Faith, Poem, by Robert Whitaker	276	Mexico, The Trouble in, by H. L. Stetson	876	Religion, A. Scientific, by H. L. Stetson	556
Faith, Hope and Charity, Poem, by Charles Nevers Holmes	832	Military Training, Compulsory, by Lucia Ames Mead	928	Religion Means to Me, What My, by R. E. Brown	556
Fares, Please, by Bernard C. Clausen	1180	Miracle of Faith, The Greater, by Frederic C. Spurr	1148	Religion, Observations of in the Orient, by George D. Shepardon	653
Five Leaves, Poem, by George G. Phipps	961	Miracles of Christ in the Light of Science, The, by Frederic C. Spurr	1052	Religion of Christ, The, by W. C. Bitting	959
Folks, Facts and Opinion, 2, 34, 66, 98, 130, 162, 194, 226, 258, 290, 322, 354, 386, 418, 450, 482, 514, 547, 578, 611, 646, 678, 702, 727, 750, 774, 798, 822, 846, 870, 894, 918, 950, 983, 1014, 1046, 1078, 1110, 1142, 1174, 1206, 1238, 1302, 1334, 1366	1398	Missionary, Being a, by H. B. Benninghoff	1054	Religious Education in Action, by F. W. Stewart	42
France and Spain Meet, Where, by Winfred Ernest Garrison	1024	Mother, Poem, by Lola Ridge	999	Religious Education, Is the Church Necessary for? by Gerald Theodore Soares	757
Fraternity, by H. F. Kendall	830	Mother in the House, The, by Hermann Hagedorn	990	Religious Liberty in America, Catholic Contribution to, by J. S. Kirtley	829
Friend of Mine, Poem, by H. R. Carstens	310	Mother Mine, Poem	430	Repentance, Fruits Worthy of, by Pere Sanson	1021
Friendship, The Power of, by Edwin E. Sundt	1181	Mother, Nobody Knows but, Poem	432	Resurrection and Attainment, The, by the Editor	268
Garden, An Autumn, Poem, by Jessie Storrs Butler	1181	Mother, Songs for My, Poem, by Anna Hempstead Branch	999	Revival at Hand, by G. H. Morrison	625
General Assembly? Shall We Have a, by Shailer Mathews	324	Mother's Day Prayer, by Joseph A. Vance	426	Rock of Ages, by Ethel Burgess Lowry	1089
Glory in the Grey, The, Poem, by A. Chester Mann	73	Music, Church, by Frederic Maxson	459	Romance, Relaxation in	493
Glory of the Commonplace, The, Poem, by Robert Whitaker	619	Music, Evangelistic, Ernest O. Sellers	1213	Sabbath Bell, The	1031
God, The Hands of, Poem, Arthur E. Cowley	1002	Music—"The Handmaid of Religion", by Frederick Maxson	1120	Secret Place of the Most High, The, by J. F. Weinmann	958
God, The Presence of, Poem, by Walter Rauschenbusch	1121	My House—at Night, Poem, by Agnes Choate Wonsen	688	Seeker, Sonnet of the, Poem, by Mary Rosenberg	736
God's Library of the Faith, by U. M. McGuire	1310	My Wage, Poem, by Jessie B. Rittenhouse	834	Shop in Galilee, A, Poem, by Will Chamberlain	396
Grandmother, Poem, by Phyllis Kayne Corson	206	Mystery, Poem, by Gertrude B. Walker	882	Simon the Cyrenian Speaks, Poem, by Countee Cullen	887
Guide Posts to the Higher Road, by Stephen J. Herben	490	Navy Chaplain and the Making of Men, A, by Clinton Andrew Neyman	299	Singing Life, The, Poem, by Mary Carolyn Davies	1028
Has America a Youth Movement? by William L. Stidgers	139	Neighbor, Who Is My? by Douglas G. Haring	426	Soldiers, Our Nation's Debt to Its, by Frank C. Rideout	234
His Silent Years, Poem, by Charles L. H. Wagner	1057	Neighbors, Poem, by Henry Crocker	1069	Speech, The Gift of, Poem, by Ruby Weyburn Tobias	1119
Hour by Hour, Poem, by George Kingle	298	Nineteen Seventeen, In, Poem, by Ralph M. Jones	1174	Stalwart Men and True, Three, Poem, by Clarence M. Gallup	680
Humility, Poem, by Robert Whitaker	388	Northern Baptist Convention at Washington, D. C., Address before the, by Frank L. Anderson	648	Stand Loyally, Poem, by Margaret B. Platt	663
Hymn, A, Poem, by H. F. Huse	952	Northern Baptist Convention, Provisional Program	461	Sunset's Promise, Poem, by P. G. Van Zandt	1216
Ideas, Where do You Get Your? by Philip Wendell Crannell	1344	Northern Baptist Convention, The	546	Surrender, The Treachery of, by T. Wilkinson	710
Immigrant, Speak, Let the, Frank L. Anderson	525	Olives, Under the, Poem, by George G. Phipps	238	Sword of His Mouth, The, by M. P. Boynton	586
In the Dawn, Poem, by Odell Shepard	679	Open Door, The, Poem, by Gertrude B. Walker	1342	Te Deum, Scotch, by William Kethe	1238
Inspiration, Side-Lights on, by F. W. Norwood	169	Our Little Dime, Poem, by Charles A. Wing	1091	Thanksgiving Proclamation, President's Then and Now, by Mary J. Thomas	1185
Intolerance, Poem, by Molly Anderson	925	Paragraphs, Pithy, by J. S. Kirtley	204	Theory—Not a Fact, A, by H. L. Stetson	332
Invitation, An, Poem	833	Paris Re-Visited, by Winfred Ernest Garrison	852	Things that Endure, Poem, by Ted Olson	920
Italy by the Back Door, Into, by Winfred Ernest Garrison	989	Parnassus, On the Slopes of	491	Thoughts, by Henry Crocker	1156
It's in Your Face, Poem	1157	Patience, Poem, by G. A. Studdert-Kennedy	1278	Time, No, Poem, by W. H. Davies	998
Jesus, Poem	1252	Peace, Fighting for, by Winfred Ernest Garrison	1152	Tokyo through Lenin's Land, From, by William Axling	1340
Just Use Me, Poem, by E. C. Baird	1311	Peace for Which They Died, Onward to the, by Robert Gordon	523	Training, Adequate Theological, by Shailer Mathews, Claiborne M. Hill, Milton G. Evans, Philip Wendell Crannell, E. Y. Mullins, George W. Taft	622
Killing, The Service of, by C. R. Manley, M.D.	1214	Peace Movement, The Churches of Europe and the, by George Stewart and Adolf Keller	926	Trees in Autumn, To the, Poem, by Mrs. J. H. Chapman	1225
Labor Day, A Prayer for, Poem, by Arthur E. Cowley	908	Peace-Making Not Peculiar to Baptists, by Robert Gordon	680	Undergirding, Poem, by Mary W. Vassar	935
Labor Sunday Message, 1926	872	Perfect Vision, The, Poem, by George G. Phipps	830	Understanding and Protest, by Robert Whitaker	1212
Labor, The European Church Looks At, by George Stewart and Adolf Keller	956	Physicist, The Problems of the	141	Washington, A Christian Patriot, by Robert Gordon	72
Lambeth Appeal, Reply to the	824	Picture Speaks, The, by Harry S. Myers	1121	Washington, Baptist Churches of, Edward O. Clark	364
Lament, The Laodicean, by J. C. Massee	584	Pilot, The, Poem, by T. Cynon Jones	105	Washington, 1926, Christ at, Poem, by Chester F. Wood	648
Lantern Maker, The, Poem, by Janet Gargan	1093	"Plain but Guid," by H. Campbell-Duncan	1086	Washington, We're Off to, Craig Stanton	360
Lawlessness and the Law of Suggestion, by James W. Graves	1408	Poor's Lunch, The, by Henry Strong	1246	Way, A More Excellent, by James H. Buswell	782
Lesson, Notes on the, 30, 62, 94, 127, 158, 190, 222, 254, 286, 318, 350, 382, 414, 446, 478, 510, 542, 574, 606, 640, 674, 689, 722, 746, 770, 794, 818, 842, 866, 890, 914, 946, 978, 1010, 1042, 1074, 1106, 1138, 1170, 1202, 1234, 1266, 1298, 1330, 1362, 1394	1426	Pope's Invitation Is Declined, by George W. McDaniel	806	Way He Leads, The, Poem, by G. A. Leichter	13
Life, Poem, by Edna Linsley Gressitt	170	Praise, Paths to the Place of, by Robert Gordon	1244	What Is This? by Joseph W. Mauck	1410
Lincoln and His Bible, by Cora Speed Reid	14	Pray, Why Should I? Poem, by A. H. Page	952	Where Could I Go? Poem, by George Kingle	904
Lincoln and Our Chains, Poem, by Arthur E. Cowley	115	Prayer, A, by Merlo K. Heicher	516	Why? Poem, by Henry Crocker	833
Lincoln, The Leadership of, by Robert Gordon	8	Prayer, A, Poem, by W. Everett Henry	967	Works than These, Greater, by G. Clifford Cress	994
Logic Lost in Laughter, by Robert Gordon	232	Prayer, A, Poem, by Harry H. Upton	9	World in Transit, The, 7, 39, 71, 103, 135, 167, 199, 231, 263, 295, 327, 359, 391, 423, 455, 487, 519, 551, 583, 617, 651, 683, 707, 731, 755, 779, 803, 827, 851, 875, 899, 923, 955, 987, 1019, 1051, 1083, 1115, 1147, 1179, 1211, 1243, 1275, 1307, 1339, 1371	1403
Louder, At, by Winfred Ernest Garrison	900	Prayer, In Answer to, by Helen Barrett Montgomery	733	Young People and the Kingdom, 18, 47, 82, 112, 143, 175, 208, 239, 271, 303, 336, 368, 399, 431, 463, 495, 527, 560, 594, 627, 659, 690, 714, 738, 760, 786, 810, 834, 858, 880, 906, 963, 997, 1027, 1059, 1123, 1158, 1190, 1218, 1252, 1283, 1318, 1350, 1379	1414
Love, Thou Shalt, by Ernest H. Shanks	782	Prayer, Week of for the Churches	1345	Young People, What Ails Our? by Horace T. Houf	1023
Love's Kingdom, Poem, by Robert Whitaker	209	Preacher Is a Radical, Why the, by Clinton Wunder	173	Youth Drive, Shall? by Franklin D. Elmer	427
Madonna of the Curb, The, Poem, by Christopher Morley	712	Preacher, The Questionnaire, by H. L. Williams	1409	Youth in the Ministry—Vital Christianity, by Albert G. Johnson	1308
Majorities, The Myth of, by Douglas G. Haring	298	Preachers, Hyphenated, by Aza Z. Hall	1055	Youth in the Saddle Again, by A. T. Robinson	805
Malnutrition, by Thomas G. Hull	1245	Progress with Friction, by David Bryn-Jones	11	Youth, The Greatest Going Concern, by Daniel A. Poling	780
Martyrs, On the Trails of the Protestant, by Winfred Ernest Garrison	1247	Promotion, Poem, by Adelaide DeLong Huntley	1289
Men You Want to Know, 397	429	Protestant of the Protestants, by J. H. Rushbrooke	652
Mexican Religious Crisis in Protestant Missions, by Frank A. Smith	138	Proven Love, Poem, by W. Everett Henry	621
Mexico, Is There Religious Persecution in? by Gonzalo Ibaez Camargo	901	Quaint, Poem, Edward W. Barnard	400
		Quakers, to Christianity, Contribution of, by C. A. Daniel	708
		Quest, The Eternal, Poem, by Katherine Zinz	995
		Quest, The Great, by W. H. Geistweil	580
		Question, A, Poem	1025
		Rain at Night, Poem, by Gertrude Callaghan	1124
		Recompense, Poem, by George Kingle	1342

